The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

OTTER CLIFFS RADIO STATION, ACADIA NATIONAL PARK, ME. (S. DOC. NO. 62)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States transmitting an amendment of the estimate of appropriation for "roads and trails, national parks," National Park Service, Department of the Interior, contained in the Budget for 1933, to provide for the removal and reconstruction of the Otter Cliffs Radio Station within Acadia National Park, Me., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TRUSTEE TO NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR BOYS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] has tendered his resignation as a consulting trustee to the National Training School for Boys. The Chair, in accordance with law, appoints the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] to fill the vacancy.

EMERGENCY CREDIT EXPANSION—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 60)

Mr. GLASS submitted the following report, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9203) to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert:

"That the Federal reserve act, as amended, is further amended by inserting, between sections 10 and 11 thereof, a new section reading as follows:

"'SEC. 10 (a) Upon receiving the consent of not less than five members of the Federal Reserve Board, any Federal reserve bank may make advances, in such amount as the board of directors of such Federal reserve bank may determine, to groups of five or more member banks within its district, a majority of them independently owned and controlled, upon their time or demand promissory notes, provided the bank or banks which receive the proceeds of such advances as herein provided have no adequate amounts of eligible and acceptable assets available to enable such bank or banks to obtain sufficient credit accommodations from the Federal reserve bank through rediscounts or advances other than as provided in section 10 (b). The liability of the individual banks in each group must be limited to such proportion of the total amount advanced to such group as the deposit liability of the respective banks bears to the aggregate deposit liability of all banks in such group, but such advances may be made to a lesser number of such member banks if the aggregate amount of their deposit liability constitutes at least 10 per cent of the entire deposit liability of the member banks within such district. Such banks shall be authorized to distribute the proceeds of such loans to such of their number and in such amount as they may agree upon, but before so doing they shall require such recipient banks to deposit with a suitable trustee, representing the entire group, their individual notes made in favor of the group protected by such collateral security as may be agreed upon. Any Federal reserve bank making such advance shall charge interest or discount thereon at a rate not less than 1 per cent above its discount rate in effect at the time of making such advance. No such note upon which advances are made by a Federal reserve bank under this section shall be eligible under section 16 of this act as collateral security for Federal reserve notes.

"'No obligations of any foreign government, individual, partnership, association, or corporation organized under the laws thereof shall be eligible as collateral security for advances under this section.

"'Member banks are authorized to obligate themselves in accordance with the provisions of this section.'

"SEC. 2. The Federal reserve act, as amended, is further amended by adding, immediately after such new section 10 (a), an additional new section reading as follows:

"'SEC. 10. (b) Until March 3, 1933, and in exceptional and exigent circumstances, and when any member bank, having a capital of not exceeding $5,000,000, has no further eligible and acceptable assets available to enable it to obtain adequate credit accommodations through rediscounting at the Federal reserve bank or any other method provided by this act other than that provided by section 10 (a), any Federal reserve bank, subject in each case to affirmative action by not less than five members of the Federal Reserve Board, may make advances to such member bank on its time or demand promissory notes secured to the satisfaction of such Federal reserve bank: Provided, That (1) each such note shall bear interest at a rate not less than 1 per cent per annum higher than the highest discount rate in effect at such Federal reserve bank on the date of such note, (2) the Federal Reserve Board may by regulation limit and define the classes of assets which may be accepted as security for advances made under authority of this section, and (3) no note accepted for any such advance shall be eligible as collateral security for Federal reserve notes.

"'No obligations of any foreign government, individual partnership, association, or corporation organized under the laws thereof shall be eligible as collateral security for advances under this section.'

"SEC. 3. The second paragraph of section 16 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'Any Federal reserve bank may make application to the local Federal reserve agent for such amount of the Federal reserve notes hereinbefore provided for as it may require. Such application shall be accompanied with a tender to the local Federal reserve agent of collateral in amount equal to the sum of the Federal reserve notes thus applied for and issued pursuant to such application. The collateral security thus offered shall be notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances acquired under the provisions of section 13 of this act, or bills of exchange indorsed by a member bank of any Federal reserve district and purchased under the provisions of section 14 of this act, or bankers' acceptances purchased under the provisions of said section 14, or gold or gold certificates: Provided, however, That until March 3, 1933, should the Federal Reserve Board deem it in the public interest, it may, upon the affirmative vote of not less than a majority of its members, authorize the Federal reserve banks to offer, and the Federal reserve agents to accept, as such collateral security, direct obligations of the United States. On March 3, 1933, or sooner, should the Federal Reserve Board so decide, such authorization shall terminate and such obligations of the United States be retired as security for Federal reserve notes. In no event shall such collateral security be less than the amount of Federal reserve notes applied for. The Federal reserve agent shall each day notify the Federal Reserve Board of all issues and withdrawals of Federal reserve notes to and by the Federal reserve bank to which he is accredited. The said Federal Reserve Board may at any time call upon a Federal reserve bank for additional security to protect the Federal reserve notes issued to it.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The telegrams will be so referred.

THE REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. WHEELER presented a telegram from the Bimetallic Association, Denver, Colo., on the silver question, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., February 16, 1932.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Silver conference to-day, after two days of session, adopted with only 3 dissenting votes series of resolutions advocating all the essentials of your bill. The conference stood unequivocally for free and unlimited coinage at the present ratio without any compromise. Suggestions for further delays in behalf of international conference rejected by conference. Congratulations on your good work.

BIMETALLIC ASSOCIATION.

Mr. WHEELER also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Morganfield, Union County, Ky., praying for the passage of legislation known as the Wheeler silver bill, providing for the remonetization of silver, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED MODIFICATION OF ANTITRUST LAW

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, may I invite the attention of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. NORRIS] and the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce [Mr. COUZENS] to the fact that pending before each committee are bills seeking to modify the antitrust law? Some weeks ago I introduced a bill for this purpose, which was referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee. I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] introduced a bill of like tenor, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I would like to have the chairmen of the two committees confer and determine to which committee all such bills should be referred. Certainly, there should not be two bills which relate to such an important subject and to the same subject matter, pending at the same time before two committees and two committees holding hearings upon the same subject.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, in connection with the matter to which the Senator from Massachusetts has referred I wish to suggest that there are three bills which have been introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], all of which have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and all of which I believe belong to that committee; at least that committee has jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin to which committee the original draft of the several acts were referred—the Federal Trade Commission act, for instance?

Mr. BLAINE. I was not a Member of the Senate at that time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The bills to which I have referred seek to modify materially the original act. It seems to me they should be considered by the committee which prepared and drafted and presented to the Senate the original antitrust act and the amendments thereto.

Mr. BLAINE. I suggest that at least one of the bills introduced by the Senator from North Dakota relates specifically to the antitrust law, and I think the bill which became the original antitrust law was reported out by the Committee on the Judiciary. I would assume that it has jurisdiction of the subject.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am only concerned with getting all these bills before one committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Finance, to which were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon:

S. 1603. An act to amend section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (Rept. No. 317);

S. 2185. An act to amend section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (Rept. No. 334);

S. 2324. An act to extend the time for allowing suits on insurance contracts under section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (Rept. No. 335);

S. 2524. An act for the relief of Ike F. Kearney (Rept. No. 318); and

S. 2566. An act for the relief of Newdigate Moreland Owensby (Rept. No. 319).

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts also, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 2955) to amend the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 333) thereon.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3569) to amend the act of May 27, 1930, authorizing an appropriation for the reconstruction and improvement of a road on the Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 320) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3323) to provide funds for cooperation with the school district at Nespelem, Wash., in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Colville Indian Reservation, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 327) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2405) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims of the Eastern or Emmigrant and the Western or Old Settler Cherokee Indians against the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 330) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1274) for the relief of the Standard Dredging Co., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 321) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 84. An act for the relief of Abraham Green (Rept. No. 322); and

S. 811. An act for the relief of Sophia A. Beers (Rept. No. 323).

Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon;

S. 221. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Wilmot Castle Co. (Rept. No. 324); and

S. 252. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of Johnson and Higgins (Rept. No. 325).

Mr. HOWELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 83) for the relief of Margaret Crotty, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 328) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3771) for the relief of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Selma, Ala., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 329) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 1230) granting a pension to Helen H. Taft, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 331) thereon.

Mr. BRATTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3011) to authorize the Attorney General to permit prisoners to attend the funeral of a deceased and bedside of a dying relative, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 332) thereon.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 418) to extend the admiralty laws of the United States of America to the Virgin Islands, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 336) thereon.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of James H. Douglas, jr., of Chicago, Ill., to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to fill an existing vacancy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR:

A bill (S. 3810) granting an increase of pension to Delora G. Jenne (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

COSTS OF PRODUCTION OF CASEIN

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, my colleague the junior Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] is still ill. He has pending a resolution, which is on the table, for the rescinding of a former resolution which he presented and which was agreed to, relating to ascertaining the differences in costs of production of casein. I can not conceive there is any objection to it. I ask unanimous consent that his resolution of rescission may be considered and agreed to.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 162), submitted by Mr. MCNARY for Mr. SHORTRIDGE on the 5th instant, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 390, Seventy-first Congress, third session, agreed to January 21, 1931, directing the United States Tariff Commission, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the tariff act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the costs of production of casein and of any like or similar foreign articles, is hereby rescinded.

LELA C. BROWN

Mr. HATFIELD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 171), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the appropriation for miscellaneous items, contingent fund of the Senate, fiscal year 1931, to Lela C. Brown, widow of William Brown, late a laborer of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

LITERARY DIGEST PROHIBITION REFERENDUM

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Literary Digest giving the result to date of the very interesting prohibition referendum which is being conducted by that publication.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Literary Digest, New York, February 27, 1932]

SEVENTEEN STATES LOCK HORNS IN THE DRY-WET POLL

Almost half a million more returned ballots in the Literary Digest's prohibition referendum are here accounted for.

The reader is face to face with a partial tabulation of 17 States, 9 of which did not appear in last week's initial tabulation, with 323,550 votes.

This second report of the immense poll has been awaited with the utmost eagerness since our presentation of the first one in the Digest of February 20.

The first report, with its startling figures, had created suspense. Quoted by newspapers all over the country, discussed by voters of all parties and all shades of belief, it had given rise to anxious questions.

Would the drys rally and speedily overcome that casual lead scored by their lucky opponents?

Or would the wets consolidate their gains and continue to forge ahead?

These speculations, aroused by the results of that "opening skirmish" of "the 20,000,000-ballot war," helped to rivet the public expectation on this No. 2 report.

But again we must warn our readers that the time is not yet ripe for accurate conclusions to be drawn from the poll figures.

Wait till unterrified Kansas horns into the tally with her camel-corps legions.

Wait for the 30 other States and the District of Columbia.

It's anybody's game yet.

Nevertheless, this second report, with its sample votes from 17 States, will be studied intently by well-informed and public-minded men and women who follow the unfoldment of the poll as a slice of history in the making.

Second report of the Literary Digest prohibition poll

State	Favor continuance of eighteenth (prohibition) amendment	Favor repeal of eighteenth (prohibition) amendment	Total
Connecticut	1,528	8,579	10,107
Georgia	2,969	6,218	9,187
Illinois	3,744	14,683	18,427
Indiana	7,221	13,162	20,383
Maine	689	1,446	2,135
Maryland	4,450	17,891	22,341
Michigan	754	2,920	3,674
New Hampshire	855	1,808	2,663
New Jersey	14,616	86,603	101,219
New York	38,144	255,662	293,806
North Carolina	6,480	8,870	15,350
Ohio	17,584	45,055	62,639
Pennsylvania	43,831	147,139	190,970
Rhode Island	340	1,733	2,073
Vermont	630	1,707	2,337
Virginia	4,493	10,196	14,689
West Virginia	1,198	2,134	3,332
Total	149,526	625,806	775,332

To such observers as these, one gathers from their frank comments, this vast prohibition referendum promises to be of incomparable value as a truthful report of the American Nation's mature state of mind toward prohibition in these early months of the fateful year 1932.

The second report is not quite as wet as the first one. We advised the drys last week not to be downcast, and already our advice is justified by the event.

To be sure, the wets are still away in the lead, with their new total of 625,806 ballots for repeal of the prohibition amendment as against 149,526 for its continuance. But if you figure out the percentages and compare them with those of last week, you'll find that the faithful drys have forged ahead from 15.85 per cent to something like 19.28 per cent.

It is not surprising to find New York just a shade less wet and North Carolina just a shade more dry.

Of the States not recorded in last week's issue, the biggest is Pennsylvania, which bounces into the line-up with 43,831 votes for continuance of the eighteenth amendment and 147,139 for its repeal.

Maine, the original prohibition State, goes wet in our poll, so far, to the tune of some 67.73 per cent.

Still the blizzard of ballots drops its flakes from Atlantic to Pacific, while the voted ballots—each one the expression of some man's or woman's private judgment on an all-important public question—are coming back by wagonloads.

It seems to the Springfield (Mass.) Union, editorially that—

"The effort of the leaders of both parties to keep the prohibition question out of this year's campaign through the advocacy of some kind of a general referendum in the future may be less successful because the Literary Digest is now engaged in another of its referenda which, in times past, have been so indicative of actual results as to be disturbing to those who were dissatisfied with them.

"The Digest's methods of securing a cross section of public sentiment both on the prohibition question and on election prospects have been so illuminating as to the former, and as to the latter so prophetic, that public interest in its present poll on the prohibition question will naturally be keen.

"A further reason for public interest is in the fact that, instead of a triple questionnaire of enforcement, modification, or repeal as heretofore, the Digest will present the single alternative of retention or repeal of the eighteenth amendment. In this respect it departs from the usual questionnaires in such referenda.

"Naturally, it will be a more severe test of public sentiment from a wet standpoint.

"Modificationists who oppose outright repeal will have no place to go except to join the prohibitionists, and those who do not favor retaining the amendment in its present form will need to join the repealers.

"Presumably it is the belief of the Digest editors that public sentiment has so far crystallized that in general modificationists will be prepared to go to one camp or the other."

After giving a brief historical sketch of previous Digest prohibition polls from 1922 on, the Union concludes that the present poll should indicate "what might result from a general referendum, such as both parties seem to be inclined to favor, as a means of keeping the troublesome issue out of the current campaign."

And, it may be added, what an excellent means that "general referendum" would be to confirm the accuracy of the Digest's prohibition poll. Our presidential polls have always been corroborated on election day, sometimes up to more than 99 per cent accuracy, but hitherto there has been no chance for an absolute check up of our prohibition polls—although, of course, enlightened persons follow the sensible course of assuming that Digest prohibition polls are just as exact in their results as Digest presidential polls.

Which, of course, they are.

But it seems that many good people need to have all this proved to them over and over again. Results are not enough for them. They crave blue prints. And so they write us letters by the thousand demanding particulars.

Some of these correspondents are obviously well meaning and without guile. The letters of others show signs of being regimented on one side or the other for a campaign of obstruction and detraction such as we cheerfully encounter in the course of every poll—sometimes from both sides at once.

It is easy to recognize, too, the emotional fringe attached to every controversial issue. This is true not only of many letters but also of some furtive printed attacks of the same general purport, which we may attend to later.

To whom do we send our 20,000,000 or more ballots?

We'll tell the great secret.

To Americans of both sexes and all occupations in every city, town, village, and rural section in the United States.

To Republicans and Democrats, prohibitionists and antiprohibitionists, manufacturers, merchants, mechanics, business women, bankers, farmers, housewives, men and women doctors, preachers, and teachers.

To railroad men, truck drivers, and all others, men and women of all ranks, occupations, and beliefs. To the man who brings the milk, and the woman who comes for the wash. To the man of the crossroads filling station, and the woman of the Main Street beauty parlor. Our elaborate machinery of distribution works automatically and makes no distinctions.

The result is, as so many observers have remarked, a veritable slice of American life. And a very big slice, too. It has been estimated that, roughly speaking, a Digest ballot finds its way to two out of every three American families.

And every State receives a quota proportioned pretty accurately to its voting strength.

For further information we point to the record of prophetic accuracy scored by our various presidential polls. Historic examples of this have been cited more than once recently. We refrain from repeating just now the famous records of the Digest polls in 1924 and 1928, for instance.

Extraordinary achievements, as all the world of intelligence has acknowledged. Behind those achievements is a history of hard work and patient building. By degrees, during 40 years, an elaborate machinery has been built up, a system of distribution and of mailing lists which are kept continually up to date by a staff of trained workers.

In view of all of which the Digest elects to rest on its laurels and to refer the overinquisitive to those enlightened minds which frankly and freely take the authenticity of a Digest poll for granted.

In this connection it is a pleasure to quote from a religious publication, the liberal Zion's Herald (Methodist), of Boston. In its issue of February 10 it remarks:

"Once more the Literary Digest, by means of a nation-wide poll, undertakes to answer the baffling question, 'Is present opinion in the United States for or against prohibition?' Only two questions are to be answered on the present ballot, 'Are you for prohibition?' or 'Are you against prohibition?'

"Twenty million of these ballots are being sent out to every section of the country. The poll is the third that the Digest has conducted on this same subject. Only two years ago a ballot asking these two questions and an additional one, 'Are you for modification?' showed a distinctly wet tendency. The present poll will doubtless be of assistance to those who would feel out public sentiment before platforms are written and candidates chosen for the fall elections.

"The high degree of accuracy of past Digest polls, both prohibition and presidential, has earned for them widespread respect and reliance. It is important, therefore, that no one should miss this opportunity of showing the country where he stands on a great moral question.

"We urge everyone who receives a ballot to mark and remail it immediately."

PROPOSED ANTI-INJUNCTION LEGISLATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 935) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I propose to address myself this morning to some of the phases of the so-called anti-injunction bill, Senate bill 935, and to discuss it from the viewpoint of the minority members of the Judiciary Committee. Perhaps I ought to say at this time that the bill, which has been reported by the majority of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, is itself a substitute bill. In addition to that bill, there is pending here a substitute presented by the minority of the Judiciary Committee. In the course of my argument I shall refer to these substitutes, but I shall try to refer to the measure reported by the majority as the pending bill and to the substitute presented by the minority as the substitute bill.

This bill has for its primary purpose the relief from certain abuses growing out of the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes. In this proposal I am in accord with the majority of the committee. In many of its aspects I believe the measure to be desirable legislation. If in its operation it will afford the employee that freedom of action to associate with his fellow workers, to deal on a basis of equality with those by whom he is employed, to share equitably in the product of labor and capital, to relieve him and his employer from any unlawful interference, restraint, or coercion, then it is a measure worthy of the consideration of any legislative body.

It is feared, however, that some of its provisions will not only not be effective, but will not stand the test of constitutionality, and therefore will result in a mere gesture. The changes which will be proposed by the minority, if enacted into law, will, we believe, assist in carrying out the purposes of Congress, and while doing justice to one element of our population will not work injustice upon any other.

With these objections in mind, I shall make certain observations upon some of the provisions of the bill. They will not be made for the purpose of delay or to hinder the enactment of the measure, but rather to expedite its consideration and to bring its provisions more in accord with established principles of jurisprudence and the spirits of our institutions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

The first section of the bill proposes a declaration of policy. To my mind, this declaration is based upon erroneous premises. It declares:

> Whereas under prevailing economic conditions developed with the aid of governmental authority for owners of property to organize in the corporate and other forms of ownership association * * *.

The natural inference to be gained from a reading of this language is that corporate forms of ownership have come into being through the enactment of laws by the Congress of the United States, and yet the fact is that practically all corporations are creatures of the several States.

In adopting a public policy which the Government of the United States shall follow in the future I believe that it should be based upon accurate statements of fact and, above all, it should not be misleading. Moreover, it should be borne in mind that most of the relations existing between employers and employees grow out of contracts wholly intrastate in their nature, and, of course, such contracts are governed by the laws of the State where they are made. The Federal Government, except in isolated instances, has no control over such contracts.

Having these objections in mind, the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary have formulated a statement of public policy which they believe expresses the attitude of labor and of those who have given much thought to labor problems. The declaration which they have prepared and which will be submitted for the consideration of the Senate is based in a large part upon language used by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of American Foundries v. Tri City Council (257 U. S. 209).

In his discussion of this subject yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] referred approvingly to that language. I shall take occasion to read the declaration of policy which has been included in the substitute bill presented by the minority. It will be found that we have followed closely the language of the Supreme Court in framing that declaration.

I want to read a statement from the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Taft in American Foundries against Tri-City Council. I read now from page 209 of Two hundred and fifty-seventh United States Reports:

> Labor unions are recognized by the Clayton Act as legal when instituted for mutual help and lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects. They have long been thus recognized by the courts. They were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was, nevertheless, unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers opportunity to deal on equality with their employer. They united to exert influence upon him and to leave him in a body in order by this inconvenience to induce him to make better terms with them. They were withholding their labor of economic value to make him pay what they thought it was worth. The right to combine for such a lawful purpose has in many years not been denied by any court.

Having that language of the Supreme Court in mind, I should like Senators to listen to the reading of the declaration of policy as contained in the substitute bill presented by the minority. I quote from the substitute as follows:

> Whereas under prevailing economic conditions a single employee is helpless in dealing with an employer, is ordinarily dependent on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and his family, is unable to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment; and whereas it is essential
> (a) That he shall be free to associate with his fellow workers and to form unions which will afford him and them the opportunity to deal on a basis of equality with those by whom they are employed;
> (b) That they may share equitably in the product of labor and capital;
> (c) That both the employer and the employee shall have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing to negotiate the terms of employment free from any interference, restraint, or coercion in their efforts toward mutual aid or protection.

It has seemed to us that the declaration of policy contained in the substitute bill presented by the minority more nearly approaches the pronouncement of the Supreme Court on the subject, that it deals more equitably and more fairly with both sides to any controversy, and that it does justice to the employee without doing any injustice to the employer.

I now wish to discuss the so-called "yellow-dog" contract. Section 3 of the bill undertakes to outlaw the so-called "yellow-dog" contract.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senator leaves that subject, will he point out specifically the difference in the statement of policy as proposed by the substitute and as originally proposed by the committee?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the first difference is that under the committee bill the declaration of policy proceeds as follows:

> Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, developed with the aid of governmental authority for owners of property to organize in the corporate and other forms of ownership association, the individual unorganized worker is commonly helpless to exercise actual liberty of contract and to protect his freedom of labor, and thereby to obtain acceptable terms and conditions of employment.

It will be noted that the substitute proposed by the minority has left out of this declaration of policy the statement at the outset of the declaration contained in the committee bill, that these different forms of corporate entities have been organized with the aid of governmental authority, which, as I have already stated, leads to the inference, because we are dealing here with a congressional enactment, with Federal legislation, that those corporate entities organized with the aid of governmental authority have been organized with the aid of congressional authority. Of course, that is far from the truth. I think I am safe in saying that very rarely, indeed, is a corporation organized under the authority of Congress. I know it has been the policy of Congress for many years to refuse organizations corporate existence through congressional enactment. Practically all corporations doing business in the United States are organized under charters granted by the several States. So, when it is stated in this declaration of policy that these aggregations of capital are organized with governmental authority, without any further explanation, I say it is misleading; it has no place in this legislation; it is not a fact, if we have in mind that Congress does not provide for the incorporation of aggregations of capital doing business in the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield further to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I may further interrupt the Senator, am I correct in the conclusion that the only difference between the two statements is in definition rather than in conclusion as to policy?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, it is not confined to that merely. The declaration of policy in the minority bill tries to afford the same degree of consideration to the employer in his relations to his employee as it does to the employee in his relations with his employer. We have made no distinction in our declaration of policy between one and the other, whereas in the declaration of policy contained in the majority bill there is very little, if any, reference to the consideration that is to be given to the employer in his relations with his employee. Moreover, we felt that in establishing the declaration of policy which is contained in the minority bill we were traveling on pretty safe ground, because we took bodily out of a decision in the Tri-city case the language of the court setting out its attitude on the relations of employers and employees.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEBERT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know whether the Senator desires to proceed without interruption or not.

Mr. HEBERT. I am very glad to be interrupted by the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose the fundamental difference between the two bills with reference to this particular feature of the matter is that the minority does not concede that what is called the "yellow-dog" contract is contrary to public policy.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the minority has not reached that conclusion. I have repeatedly said that my own thought is that if any way can be devised whereby to outlaw that contract, I shall follow that way; but I am not unmindful of the existence of opinions of the Supreme Court passing upon the legality of that contract, and that is the obstruction which is in my way in the consideration of this legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator concede—is it his personal view—that the so-called "yellow-dog" contract is contrary to public policy?

Mr. HEBERT. I do not know what the public policy would be, Mr. President. I think it is unfair. I think the contract is, in effect, a coercion. It may not be legal coercion as the Senator and I understand legal coercion; but, if we may coin a new phrase, it might well be called economic coercion. I believe it is that; and I say again that I will join the Senator in any move to outlaw it, if a way can be found to do so.

Mr. BORAH. If the Supreme Court should conclude that this so-called "yellow-dog" contract is contrary to public policy, that it is in effect coercion, then it has rendered no decision which would prevent it from so declaring.

Mr. HEBERT. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. Then the whole question, in the first instance, is whether or not the "yellow-dog" contract can be considered as contrary to public policy, because if that is true then the decisions which the Supreme Court has already rendered do not control. It has never been before the Supreme Court in this form.

Mr. HEBERT. Oh, Mr. President, the Supreme Court necessarily had the question of public policy before it when it rendered its decision in the Hitchman case and in the other cases; and surely the court would not have disregarded public policy in passing upon the validity of a contract submitted to it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. The Supreme Court has never decided this question.

Mr. HEBERT. It has never referred to public policy in passing judgment upon that contract.

Mr. BORAH. And its decision went off on other questions than the question of public policy.

Mr. HEBERT. The decision was right on the question of whether that contract is a valid contract, and entered into in the exercise of constitutional rights.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. REED. It did not seem to me that the Senator's answer to the Senator from Idaho, in his first question, was quite responsive. Perhaps the Senator did not catch his question. I understood the Senator from Idaho to ask whether the minority of the committee desired to make the "yellow-dog" contract contrary to publoc policy. Was not that the Senator's question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. REED. It seems to me it is answered directly by section 3 of the substitute bill proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, in which it is explicitly declared to be contrary to public policy. I think the Senator from Rhode Island has made his position plain beyond any doubt in the language of section 3 of his bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEBERT. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The minority opinion says:

> In our opinion, this form of agreement deprives employees of the right of free association with their fellows, and takes away from them the opportunity to deal on a basis of equality with those by whom they are employed. But, however distasteful that may be to us, and however much we may sympathize with those who believe that the interest of the employees will never be properly protected except through legislative enactment, the fact remains that the Supreme Court in three cases has held that there is no legislative power, State or Federal, to inhibit or outlaw employment contracts providing against union membership.

I think the minority report has made a very fair and, I think, from their standpoint, a courageous statement when it says that—

> In our opinion, this form of agreement deprives employees of the right of free association with their fellows, and takes away from them the opportunity to deal on a basis of equality with those by whom they are employed.

The Supreme Court has never taken that view of that contract except in the minority opinion. The minority opinion took this view, but the majority opinion has not taken that view.

Mr. HEBERT. Unfortunately, we are not bound by—nor can we follow—the minority opinion of the court.

Mr. BORAH. What I am saying is that the able Senator makes a declaration which comes within the purview of the minority opinion.

Mr. HEBERT. I stand by that declaration.

Mr. BORAH. Then, if the court should come to the conclusion that has been reached here by the able Senator from Rhode Island, that question has never been passed upon by the Supreme Court.

Mr. HEBERT. Of course, the Senator has his own idea about that; but it seems to me that the whole contract was before the court when they considered it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I take it that the question in the mind of the Senator from Rhode Island is whether Congress has the power to define the public policy of the United States with respect to contracts of the nature referred to. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island what authority defines the public policy of the United States?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, my answer to that would be that the courts define the public policy in the absence of a declaration of policy by Congress or by the legislature of any given State.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is competent, however, for the legislative power to define public policy, and that is the authority which commonly defines public policy; is it not?

Mr. HEBERT. I think that is so; and, of course, the Senator, in his assumption that I had some question in my mind about the power to define public policy, is erroneous, because in the bill which the minority have presented here the public policy is very clearly declared.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then it is competent for the Congress to outlaw the so-called "yellow-dog" contract in the exercise of its power to define public policy?

Mr. HEBERT. Oh, I would not go that far, Mr. President. That is the question at issue now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is the question I asked the Senator in the beginning, and which he said did not correctly state his viewpoint. My question was whether the thought in the mind of the Senator is that the United States Congress is without power to define the public policy of the United States with respect to contracts of the nature referred to, meaning the "yellow-dog" contract.

Mr. HEBERT. I did not understand that the Senator's question included a reference to the "yellow-dog" contract.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. I did not use the term "yellow-dog" contract——

Mr. HEBERT. My understanding was that the question was general.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But I did use the term "contracts of the nature referred to," which, in my mind, implied the "yellow-dog" contract.

Mr. HEBERT. It misled me, I am frank to say.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Then Congress has or has not the power—which?—to outlaw the "yellow-dog" contract?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, there is a serious doubt in my mind as to the power of Congress to legislate upon contracts, and to deny to parties the right to enter into contracts. The right of contract is inviolate under the Constitution; and the Supreme Court has repeatedly said that this contract is a valid exercise of that right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In the absence of a statute defining a contrary public policy I do not understand that the Supreme Court has ever intimated that it is not competent for the Congress, in defining the jurisdiction of the courts, also to define the public policy of the Nation as banning the enforcement of such contracts.

Mr. HEBERT. Congress can not define the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Why, certainly not.

Mr. HEBERT. And the Supreme Court has already passed judgment upon that matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But this legislation is not directed at the Supreme Court. This legislation is directed at the inferior courts. Does the Senator contend that the Congress has not unlimited authority to restrict or expand, within the constitutional range, the authority and jurisdiction of the inferior courts?

Mr. HEBERT. The Supreme Court has said that there are limitations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But those are limitations imposed by the Constitution.

Mr. HEBERT. No; there are certain inherent powers in the courts of the United States which can not be taken away by legislative act.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes. That tends to make clear the Senator's position. It is the Senator's position, then, that the power inheres in an inferior court created by law to issue injunctions enforcing the "yellow-dog" contract, or contracts of that nature, and there is no power in the Congress to limit or deny the authority of the inferior courts to issue such injunctions?

Mr. HEBERT. It is not the idea of the Senator from Rhode Island that there is any such power. Section 3 of the substitute bill which the minority presented with its report in effect limits the power of the courts of the United States in the issuance of injunctions; at least, it endeavors to do so.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield now to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. I do not understand where the point of difference is. It seems to me the Senator from Rhode Island has made it very clear that he dislikes the "yellow-dog" contract; that his substitute would declare it to be contrary to public policy; that it would deny the affording of equitable relief by the Federal courts in a case based on such a contract. It seems to me that the Senator from Rhode Island goes as far in that direction as anyone could reasonably ask. I myself do not like the "yellow-dog" contract, and I should like to see it made contrary to public policy; but I think the Senator does it in section 3.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I was relying on the answer of the Senator from Rhode Island. I asked him the specific question whether, in his opinion, the Congress had the power, in the exercise of its authority, to limit the jurisdiction of inferior courts and to define the public policy of the United States to ban "yellow-dog" contracts; and he said, as I understood him, that he did not go that far, and that he did not think it had.

Mr. REED. But he clearly does go that far, because his bill proposes to do it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I had the same impression until the Senator from Rhode Island made a contrary statement, and I thought he was the best judge of what he meant.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have made no contrary statement. If the Senator will compare the majority bill with the bill presented by the minority, it will be found that the majority bill denies all legal remedies under such contracts, whereas in the substitute presented by the minority the minority seeks to deny all equitable remedies and the right of injunction under such contracts. We have purposely limited it to that, first, because that is the purpose of the bill itself. The title of it indicates that that is the purpose of it. The title of the bill is, "A bill to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity." We have limited ourselves to equitable proceedings.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if Congress can declare a contract to be contrary to public policy, and if its declaration is effective, that would similarly deny relief in an action at law, would it not?

Mr. HEBERT. There is a question about that, Mr. President, and we felt that we were justified in limiting the provisions of section 3 of our bill to equitable proceedings, and then we are within the purposes of the bill as declared in the title.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from Illinois has been standing for some time. I yield to him.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether I was correct in assuming that he answered the Senator from Arkansas that it was not in the power of Congress to declare the public policy of the country?

Mr. HEBERT. If the Senator understood me to say that, Mr. President, he is in error.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the Senator, then, if his mind recalls for the moment the freight-rate cases in the Supreme Court, where they held it was the privilege of Congress to declare the public policy upon a contract which practically worked a monopoly of freight rates in certain territories of the Union?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I have not that case in mind; but I have no doubt, since the Senator refers to it, that it was so held.

Mr. LEWIS. Would not that be parallel to the present situation, where the Congress would attempt to legislate that certain contracts in their nature violated public policy?

Mr. HEBERT. Not having studied the case to which the Senator refers, I am not prepared to express an opinion.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not press the question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I am only trying to get clearly before the Senate the position taken by the Senator from Rhode Island, and I think I can do it by asking him this question: Is it the Senator's opinion that Congress has the constitutional authority, either on the ground of announcing the public policy, or on any other ground, to outlaw the "yellow-dog" contract?

Mr. HEBERT. I believe it can go a long way toward outlawing it in the manner which we have provided in our bill. Whether the Congress can say in so many words that no one shall enter into a contract, and put into the inhibition the language contained in many statutes which have tried to outlaw such a contract, I do not say.

Mr. NORRIS. No; but the majority does not attempt to do that. The majority provides for a public policy, something which has never yet been done in this kind of case. The minority public policy leaves out part of what is in the public policy of the majority.

Laying that difference aside, however, we are trying to outlaw the "yellow-dog" contract by taking away the jurisdiction of the courts to enforce it. The Senator has not gone farther than simply to express his doubt. I am trying to get his idea as to whether, on the ground of public policy as announced by the minority, or that announced by the majority, or in any other way, Congress can take away from the inferior Federal courts the jurisdiction to enforce the "yellow-dog" contract? We are not trying to prevent anybody from writing such a contract and signing it, but take our position as I have stated. Let us meet the question squarely. Does the minority believe that we have the authority, in any way, in any manner, on the ground of public policy or otherwise, to take away from the inferior courts the jurisdiction to enforce the "yellow-dog" contract?

Mr. HEBERT. I seriously doubt whether Congress has that authority, Mr. President, having in mind the decisions of the Supreme Court already rendered. I realize, too, that the Supreme Court has said that certain limitations may be placed upon the jurisdiction of inferior courts, and it has placed them. The decision affecting the construction of the Clayton Act, for instance, in the Michaelson case, where a jury trial was provided in contempt cases, was sustained by the Supreme Court.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator and I would agree that primarily the right belongs to the Congress to declare the public policy of the country.

Mr. HEBERT. As representatives of the people, Mr. President, I should say that is so.

Mr. BORAH. Primarily the right rests in a State legislature to declare the public policy of the State, and primarily it is in Congress to declare the public policy of the Nation. Then I think we would agree to the further proposition that the liberty of contract of which we speak is not an unlimited liberty of contract, that it may be limited by Congress or by the courts, or that it may be restrained by a State legislature in the States. Is not that true?

Mr. HEBERT. That is precisely what the Legislature of Massachusetts attempted to do very recently, and the supreme court of that State, in an advisory opinion, handed down on May 11, 1931, said they could not do it.

Mr. BORAH. Let me read a line from the Supreme Court of the United States. It says:

> While it may be conceded that, generally speaking, among the inalienable liberties of the citizen is that of liberty of contract, yet such liberty is not absolute and universal.

Then the Supreme Court says that there are certain contracts which may not be made, which may be inhibited, and which are not protected by the Constitution of the United States providing for the liberty of contract.

Mr. HEBERT. O Mr. President, we know that all rights are relative.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. HEBERT. That one's rights end whether another's rights begin; and when we say that certain things can not be done, that is all relative, too. Whether or not under certain conditions a thing can be done or can not be done will depend upon the particular circumstances and the nature of the case.

Mr. BORAH. What I was undertaking to support in the way of a contention is that this liberty of contract of which the Senator has spoken is not unlimited; it is not absolute; it is something which is subject to the control of the country, under the doctrine of the country to decide whether or not a particular contract is contrary to public policy.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, it has been passed upon on three different occasions by the Supreme Court, not dealing with generalities, but dealing with a specific case, and in a specific case it has been passed upon on three different occasions by the highest court of the land.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I do not desire, in the time of the Senator, to discuss that, but I would say before I sit down that my contention is that that court has never passed upon the question which is now before the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator a few moments ago took exception to the majority report and stated that the majority bill prevented either legal or equitable relief by any inferior Federal court. I want to ask the Senator with reference to the subject which is under investigation and on which we propose to legislate what legal relief might be obtained in a Federal court?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, there would be a right of action for recovery of damages for breach of contract.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think the Senator cares to go that far. Is it the Senator's understanding that a corporation or an individual, an employer, can go into a Federal court in the State in which the corporation or individual has a legal abode and sue a defendant for damages in that same State in a Federal court?

Mr. HEBERT. He certainly would have a right to sue in the State courts. There is no provision here which would vitiate the right to sue in a State court.

Mr. BLAINE. Exactly; so that the only possible legal relief that is denied under the majority bill is relief which may be sought by a corporation or an individual by reason of diversity of citizenship.

Mr. HEBERT. O Mr. President, but that is very easy of attainment, and if this is carried out to its logical conclusion we are going to have the spectacle of a contract wholly legal in a given State and enforceable in the courts of that State vitiated by transference of the case from a State court to a Federal court because of diversity of citizenship.

Mr. BLAINE. If you exclude from the language of the bill this granting of legal relief, then do you not discriminate in favor of the corporation or individual who may sue in a Federal court by reason of diversity of citizenship?

Mr. HEBERT. It might well be, Mr. President, that we would be discriminating against both parties to such a contract. I am not prepared to say that we are not. I simply say that we have gone to this extent in our effort to make invalid or inoperative in equity the so-called "yellow-dog" contracts.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will yield for another question, the Senator will recall that on yesterday when I undertook to state my position, I think, he raised this very question. I did not want to engage in debate on the question at that time, when speaking on the general outline of the bill; but is it not a fact that the only legal relief which would be denied under the majority bill would be relief sought by an individual or corporation because of diversity of citizenship?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the only relief that can be provided anywhere in the bill is that. It deals with the jurisdiction of the United States courts, and in no way affects the State courts or their jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAINE. Then, does not the Senator recognize that by denying legal relief to corporations and individuals on account of diversity of citizenship the committee is undertaking to put all corporations and all individuals on identically the same plane of equality in seeking legal relief for damages?

Mr. HEBERT. I myself see no reason why there should be any discrimination between parties to a contract before a court. That is what we have attempted to avoid.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I just want to suggest to the Senator, if he will permit, that that is my conception of the bill, that the primary purpose of the bill is to make the so-called "yellow-dog" contract unenforceable in the Federal courts, and that the declaration of public policy perhaps has no other effect than to aid the court in the interpretation and construction of the act. After all, is not the declaration of public policy designed for that purpose only? A declaration of public policy, as a matter of fact, does not declare what the law is but declares what the public policy ought to be, and is in aid of the interpretation and construction of the act respecting a decision before a court.

Mr. HEBERT. Of course, Mr. President, a declaration of policy is not merely a path blazed out in the wilderness which courts are requested to follow. It goes much beyond that. It may set down certain policies. The Constitution of the United States contains declarations of policy from which nobody can get away. They are fixed until the Constitution is amended. That is a declaration of policy and it is absolute and binding upon every citizen of the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. When a declaration of public policy goes to the extent of declaring substantive law, then it ceases to be a mere declaration of public policy but is the enactment of positive substantive law.

Mr. HEBERT. If it be done in accordance with the provisions of the supreme law of the land, of course it is within the power of legislative bodies to enact such declaration.

Mr. BLAINE. I thank the Senator for his patience.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEBERT. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Am I right in stating that the Supreme Court has squarely decided that the "yellow-dog" contract is a valid, binding contract.

Mr. HEBERT. It has so declared in three cases, from which I shall quote in the course of my argument.

Mr. WATSON. That is my understanding. Based upon that understanding, I want to ask the Senator two further questions. First, in the face of those decisions can Congress—and by "can" I mean is it within the power of Congress—declare a public policy contrary to the direct decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. HEBERT. Of course Congress may declare a public policy. The question is how effective it will be when a case of this nature comes before the Supreme Court of the land on the law and existing decisions.

Mr. WATSON. The next question is, If Congress can declare a public policy of that kind, ought it to declare such a policy contrary to the direct decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States? Those are questions with which I think we have to deal.

Mr. HEBERT. The idea of the minority of the committee was that we should not go that far.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask one more question, with an apology?

Mr. HEBERT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania, and he need not apologize for interrupting me.

Mr. REED. Does not the minority substitute, in section 3, explicitly declare a "yellow-dog" contract to be contrary to public policy?

Mr. HEBERT. If by the provision of that section which denies relief in equity, then I would say "yes."

Mr. REED. No; I do not think we have to infer that. The language, as I read it on page 4, is—

> Any undertaking or promise such as is described in this section—

And that quite plainly is the "yellow-dog" contract—> * * * is hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of the United States, and shall not afford any basis for the granting of equitable relief by any court of the United States.

How could language more plainly establish public policy than that?

Mr. HEBERT. Of course it declares public policy in the light of the declaration that we have in the bill, but the two provisions must be read together. The Senator will find that there is a difference between the public policy declared by the minority of the committee and that declared by the majority of the committee in the majority report.

Mr. REED. But the minority does declare the "yellow-dog" contract to be contrary to public policy.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; we do.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEBERT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Pursuing the question asked by the Senator from Pennsylvania does it not follow that the Senator then under his own statement to the Senator from Pennsylvania has proposed to do something that he has grave doubt about our authority to do under the Constitution?

Mr. HEBERT. I answer that question in the affirmative. I have repeatedly said that we have gone beyond what we think the law permits.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator will expect his bill, if it is enacted into law, to be held unconstitutional?

Mr. HEBERT. No; I am not giving my time and attention to this legislation with any idea that we are merely indulging in an idle gesture. I am hoping that it will be sustained. I sincerely hope that it will be sustained. I hope that we shall afford that measure of relief which our bill provides. I very much doubt, however, if the bill presented by the majority of the committee will be sustained.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator under his own statement has the same doubt about the minority bill.

Mr. HEBERT. Except as to the degree of doubt.

Mr. NORRIS. Just a difference in degree? All right.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. In referring to contracts, has the Senator in mind contracts that are voluntarily made?

Mr. HEBERT. When the Senator says "contracts voluntarily made," and whenever reference is made to the so-called "yellow-dog" contract, it is contended—and I think with some degree of force—that none of these contracts is voluntarily made; that is, that they are usually made under coercion. But the Supreme Court has held that they are voluntarily made and has sustained them in three different instances.

The majority of the committee frankly states in its report that one of the objects of this legislation is to outlaw such contracts, because many of the injunctions which have been issued by the Federal courts in labor disputes have been based wholly or in part upon them, on the assumption that they are valid and not contrary to public policy.

In my opinion, this form of agreement deprives, by a form of economic coercion, employees of the right of free association with their fellows, and takes away from them the opportunity to deal on a basis of equality with those by whom they are employed. But however distasteful they may be to us, and however much we may sympathize with those who believe that the interests of employees will never be protected except through legislative enactment to make them void, the fact remains that the Supreme Court of the United States in three cases has held that there is no legislative power, State or Federal, to inhibit or outlaw employment contracts providing against union membership.

The first of these cases is Coppage against Kansas, decided in 1915 and reported in Two hundred and thirty-sixth United States Reports at page 1. I wish to quote from that case. This is an opinion written by Mr. Justice Pitney. I quote from page 16:

Laying aside, therefore, as immaterial for present purposes, so much of the statute as indicates a purpose to repress coercive practices, what possible relation has the residue of the act to the public health, safety, morals, or general welfare? None is suggested, and we are unable to conceive any.

This was an act of the State of Kansas fining anyone for making this so-called "yellow-dog" contract.

The act, as the construction given to it by the State courts shows, is intended to deprive employers of a part of their liberty of contract, to the corresponding advantage of the employed and the upbuilding of labor organizations. But no attempt is made or could reasonably be made to sustain the purpose to strengthen these voluntary organizations, any more than other voluntary associations of persons, as a legitimate object for the exercise of the police power. They are not public institutions, charged by law with public or governmental duties, such as would render the maintenance of their membership a matter of direct concern to the general welfare. If they were, a different question would be presented.

When a man is called upon to agree not to become or remain a member of the union while working for a particular employer, he is in effect only asked to deal openly and frankly with his employer, so as not to retain the employment upon terms to which the latter is not willing to agree. And the liberty of making contracts does not include a liberty to procure employment from an unwilling employer or without a fair understanding. Nor may the employer be foreclosed by legislation from exercising the same freedom of choice that is the right of the employee. To ask a man to agree in advance to refrain from affiliation with a union while retaining a certain position of employment is not to ask him to give up any part of his constitutional freedom. He is free to decline the employment on those terms, just as the employer may decline to offer employment on any other; for "It takes two to make a bargain." Having accepted employment on those terms, the man is still free to join the union when the period of employment expires; or, if employed at will, then at any time upon simply quitting the employment. And, if bound by his own agreement to refrain from joining during a stated period of employment, he is in no different situation from that which is necessarily incident to term contract in general.

At page 23 appears the following:

One of the ways of obtaining property is by contract. The right, therefore, to contract can not be infringed by the legislature without violating the letter and spirit of the Constitution. Every citizen is protected in his right to work where and for whom he will. He may select not only his employer but also his associates. He is at liberty to refuse to continue to serve one who has in his employ a person, or an association of persons, objectionable to him. In this respect the rights of the employer and employee are equal.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DICKINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I have noticed that the Senator, in arguing the matter, has read a decision of the court relative to the subject of rights under a contract. As a matter of fact, Congress confers all the jurisdiction that a court of equity has, does it not? It is not a constitutional authority, but a grant of authority conferred by the Congress, a statutory authority. I am referring to courts of equity. They have only such authority as is given to them by the Congress. Is not that true?

Mr. HEBERT. I am not prepared to subscribe to that statement since there are concededly some inherent powers in the courts immediately they are created.

Mr. LONG. Is it not a fact that they could be limited to the granting of injunctions in cases involving not more than $300 or not more than $1,000?

Mr. HEBERT. That is true, and we have tried to limit them in our proposed substitute.

Mr. LONG. The bill, as it is reported by the committee, simply proposes to withhold from the courts certain jurisdiction. That would not prevent litigants from going into the State courts. The United States courts of every district—in New Jersey or Louisiana or elsewhere—could be denied any equitable jurisdiction at all, and litigants would be required to go into the State courts to enforce any rights in equity which they might have.

Mr. HEBERT. The statement of the Senator is at variance with the expression of opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on that point.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEBERT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not like to interrupt the Senator so often and he has been very kind in yielding.

Mr. HEBERT. I do not at all mind the interruptions and am glad indeed to yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to understand the Senator's idea. What he said to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], I think, ought to be clarified just a little, so I would like to ask the Senator a further question. I realize, of course, there is a difference of opinion among eminent lawyers on the subject, but I want to ask the Senator whether the minority contend that Congress does not have the right to take away from any Federal court, except the Supreme Court of the United States, any jurisdiction that the court may have? Would we not have the right to take it all away and abolish the court by statute, if we wanted to do so?

Mr. HEBERT. I think we have the right to abolish the court, but the Supreme Court has made a pronouncement upon the power of Congress to limit the inherent powers of the court once it is established.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but it is not an inherent power of a court, for instance, to be endowed with jurisdiction to issue injunctions, is it? An inherent power, as I understand, is one necessary to enable the court to protect itself, and so forth.

Mr. HEBERT. To enforce its mandates.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but would not Congress have the right, without interfering with any of its inherent powers, to take any jurisdiction away from any inferior Federal court?

Mr. HEBERT. Does the Senator mean that Congress might take all its jurisdiction away?

Mr. NORRIS. Congress may take all its jurisdiction away or it may take any part of it away.

Mr. HEBERT. Unquestionably, Congress has the right to abolish any court which is inferior to the Supreme Court; there is no question about that; but whether, in the exercise of that right, Congress can go to any limit below the abolition of the court is a grave question, upon which there is difference of opinion.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize that, and the Senator perhaps should remember that in the hearings that argument was made by some very eminent attorneys. It was contended by one of those attorneys, representing some of the large corporations that are opposed to this legislation, that while he conceded Congress has the right even to abolish the court, having once given jurisdiction to an inferior court, Congress has no authority to take it away. However, I do not think that argument made any very substantial impression upon any of the members of the subcommittee that heard it.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I shall have occasion, in the course of my argument, to refer to a decision of the Supreme Court which discussed that question to some extent.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. HEBERT. I come now to the second of the cases to which I had reference when I said that in three different instances the Supreme Court had declared these contracts valid. I shall quote now from the case of Adair against the United States, Two hundred and eighth United States Reports, page 161. I read now from the opinion at page 172:

Without stopping to consider what would have been the rights of the railroad company under the fifth amendment, had it been indicted under the act of Congress, it is sufficient in this case to say that as agent of the railroad company and as such responsible for the conduct of the business of one of its departments, it was the defendant, Adair's, right—and that right inhered in his personal liberty, and was also a right of property, to serve his employer as best he could, so long as he did nothing that was reasonably forbidden by law as injurious to the public interests. It was the right of the defendant to prescribe the terms upon which the services of Coppage would be accepted, and it was the right of Coppage to become or not, as he chose, an employee of the railroad company upon the terms offered to him. Mr. Cooley in his treatise on Torts, page 278, well says: "It is a part of every man's civil rights that he be left at liberty to refuse business relations with any person whomsoever, whether the refusal rests upon reason, or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice, or malice. With his reasons neither the public nor third persons have any legal concern. It is also his right to have business relations with anyone with whom he can make contracts; and if he is wrongfully deprived of this right by others, he is entitled to redress.

Again, at page 174:

While, as already suggested, the right of liberty and property guaranteed by the Constitution against deprivation without due process of law is subject to such reasonable restraints as the common good or the general welfare may require, it is not within the functions of government—at least in the absence of contract between the parties—to compel any person in the course of his business and against his will to accept or retain the personal services of another, or to compel any person against his will to perform personal services for another. The right of a person to sell his labor upon such terms as he deems proper is, in its essence, the same as the right of the purchaser of labor to prescribe the conditions upon which he will accept such labor from the person offering to sell it. So the right of the employee to quit the service of the employer, for whatever reason, is the same as the right of the employer, for whatever reason, to dispense with the services of such employee. It was the legal right of the defendant Adair—however unwise such a course might have been—to discharge Coppage because of his being a member of a labor organization, as it was the legal right of Coppage, if he saw fit to do so—however unwise such a course on his part might have been—to quit the service in which he was engaged because the defendant employed some persons who were not members of a labor organization. In all such particulars the employer and the employee have equality of right, and any legislation that disturbs that equality is an arbitrary interference with the liberty of contract which no government can legally justify in a free land.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I take it the Senator is about to discuss the case of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. against Mitchell?

Mr. HEBERT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Before he leaves the two cases—the Coppage case and the Adair case—I should like, if he will permit me, to ask him a question or two about those cases.

Mr. HEBERT. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. NORRIS. They were both cases where a criminal statute was undertaken to be enforced, were they not?

Mr. HEBERT. It is my understanding that they were.

Mr. NORRIS. One involved a criminal statute of Kansas.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; a statute imposing a fine for making such a contract.

Mr. NORRIS. A statute imposing a fine for discharging a man because he belonged to a union. Does the Senator think that either one of those cases has a direct application to the legislation that is being discussed here, each of them involving a criminal statute and each one going to the court on the appeal of the defendant who was convicted under the statute? In one case a Federal statute was involved and in the other case a State statute. In the case involving the Federal statute the act complained of was claimed to be a violation of section 10 of the Erdman Act. That was the Adair case.

While I am interrupting the Senator I should like to call his attention also to the fact—and it seems to me, in all fairness, the attention of the Senate should be called to it—that both of these cases and also the case of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. against Mitchell in the Supreme Court of the United States—the case, as I understand, the Senator is about to discuss—were all decided by a divided court.

Mr. HEBERT. That is true, Mr. President.

As to the first observation of the Senator from Nebraska, I have purposely confined my quotations to those portions of these opinions which relate to the contractual relations of the parties and not with reference to the offense committed in making those contracts. That is beside the point.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize that; but, at the same time, these criminal statutes were enacted to enforce the law by that means rather than by civil action.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes, Mr. President; but, first of all, it was incumbent upon the court to find out whether the making of such a contract was a valid exercise of constitutional right.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think that is correct.

Mr. HEBERT. And if it were such an exercise, then no fine, provision for imprisonment, or anything else would interfere.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not contending that any of those cases do not have application to the point to which the Senator is applying them. I believe, however, that all the facts, including the one that all the cases were decided by a divided court, should be taken into consideration in attaching weight to these decisions.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I can well understand what the Senator has in mind. He proceeds upon the theory that if a case involving damages growing out of one of these contracts, dissociated altogether from any violation of a criminal statute, came before the court, the court might decide otherwise than it did and might declare such a contract to be void. However, I want to call the Senator's attention to the very explicit language in the Adair case. I repeat:

It was the legal right of the defendant Adair—however unwise such a course might have been—to discharge Coppage because of his being a member of a labor organization, as it was the legal right of Coppage, if he saw fit to do so—however unwise such a course on his part might have been—to quit the service in which he was engaged because the defendant employed some persons who were not members of a labor organization. In such particulars the employer and the employee have equality of right, and any legislation that disturbs that equality is an arbitrary interference with the liberty of contract which no government can legally justify in a free land.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with that, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him further, but the bill which the majority of the committee have reported, in my judgment, does not in any respect conflict with the opinion laid down there. Although the Adair case has a bearing on the contention the Senator is ably making—I concede that—at that time there was on the statute books no law such as is here proposed; and, while it may not have much effect on the Senator's mind, to my mind it is significant that those cases were decided at a time when the "yellow-dog" contract had not reached the culmination of its wickedness. Even in the Hitchman case, which the Senator is going to consider next, as I understand, the contract, even in the dissenting opinion, was not criticized, and the contract itself which is set out in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Brandeis, as I recall, is not harsh in its terms. It was the first, or almost the first, "yellow-dog" contract that ever came before a court. It was mild in contradistinction to the development of the "yellow-dog" contract as it afterwards appeared. To anyone who will read all the cases, as they follow one another, it will appear in the development of the "yellow-dog" contract that the first one which was held legal was quite mild as compared to those which afterwards came to be considered in injunction cases. It will be easy to see, it seems to me, that the development of the "yellow-dog" contract was gradually and rather slow, until the dissenting opinions became more and more numerous as time went on.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; I do.

Mr. LOGAN. I have been listening to the very able argument of the Senator with a good deal of interest. I want to ask him if this is the conclusion that he has reached about those "yellow-dog" contracts—that as long as the contracts remain, no court can disturb his doctrine of liberty of contract, and that the contract must be got rid of in some way before it can grant relief? Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. HEBERT. No, Mr. President. With the declaration of policy contained in the bill proposed by the minority, we have proceeded to deny to inferior courts of the United States the right to afford injunctive relief based upon such contracts.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator think he may do that within the constitutional limits?

Mr. HEBERT. We are hoping we can do it. I have repeatedly expressed some doubts about it, but we are hoping we can do it; and I shall refer to the authority upon which we are basing our action a little later on in my argument.

Mr. LOGAN. I have been somewhat confused by the reference to public policy. The confusion may be only in my own mind. I thought the public policy of a state or nation was always to be found in the laws of that state or nation, and that a mere statement that this is the public policy would have no effect unless it was backed up by some legislative enactment. Is that the Senator's opinion about it?

Mr. HEBERT. That is absolutely my opinion, Mr. President; but, of course, the Senator is coupling up now, in both of these bills, a statement of public policy followed up by an enactment.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true. I agree with the Senator about that; but it has been suggested that the liberty of contract is not absolute. It is absolute, is it not, except that a contract can not be made contrary to public policy? And if we desire to find out whether the contract is contrary to public policy, we must go to the existing laws of the Nation?

Mr. HEBERT. That is my understanding.

Mr. LOGAN. So if the Supreme Court has held, as it seems to have done, that the liberty of contract can not be interfered with, then did not that language, that it was not absolute, refer to contracts which could not be made in violation of some law?

Mr. HEBERT. Of course, I said all rights are relative.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Rhode Island did not say that. Some one else suggested that.

Mr. HEBERT. Well, I have said in the course of this debate, and I repeat, that all rights are relative. There is no absolute right to do anything one likes. It is all bound by certain limitations—for instance, the limitations of the Constitution, the limitations of the law.

Mr. LOGAN. Finally, let me ask the Senator this question, and then I think I have finished.

The public policy of a nation must be declared by its legislative body having the authority to define it, as I understand. That is where we go to find our public policy—in the laws that govern the Nation.

Mr. HEBERT. The Supreme Court has said that in the absence of an expression of public policy in the legislative enactments the court declares a public policy.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true. There is no doubt about that. Congress could not pass any law declaring public policy if that public policy, when so declared, would be in violation of the Constitution; could it?

Mr. HEBERT. I can not see that there can be any argument upon that point.

Mr. LOGAN. Then, is it the Senator's contention that the declaration of public policy interfering with the liberty of contract is unconstitutional, rather than to term it as against public policy?

Mr. HEBERT. The declaration of public policy is not an enactment at all.

Mr. LOGAN. Can there be a declaration of public policy without an enactment?

Mr. HEBERT. There is nothing to a declaration of public policy. In other words, it does not command the doing of anything. It is simply the preamble which we find in many enactments. It enables those who are called upon to do so to construe what follows by referring to the preamble. It sets out what the enacting body had in mind, what it sought to accomplish, the objectionable things it sought to remove, what it endeavored to forbid; and, then, when the court comes to pass upon any act committed in violation or in alleged violation of the enactment it goes back to the preamble to see what was in the mind of the legislature when it passed that act.

Mr. LOGAN. It is not binding upon the court, however; is it?

Mr. HEBERT. No; I do not think so.

Mr. LOGAN. And is it not the general rule throughout the United States, so far as we know, that anything that may have been said in the consideration of a bill or in the proposal of a constitution and recorded in the journals is of very little weight with the court when it comes to construe the actual provision?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, in my reading of some of these decisions I have observed that when the reports of committees of Congress and certain statements made by Members of Congress in both Houses of Congress on the enactment which the court is called upon to construe are referred to; the courts refer to them with approval. I have never seen any reference to those that did not sustain their position in their decisions.

Mr. LOGAN. They refer to them in the interpretation of the act. That is very correct; but would a simple declaration of policy, without its being followed by a legislative enactment, have any binding effect on the courts?

Mr. HEBERT. In my opinion, Mr. President, it would not.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I now take up the so-called Hitchman case—Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell (245 U. S., 229.) Before quoting from that opinion, however, I think it might be well to include as a part of my argument the exact wording of the contract which was required to be entered into by those seeking employment at the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. plant and which was the subject of this litigation. It occurs to me that it may be informative to Members of the Senate who do me the honor to read my argument.

The contract is quoted in full at page 263 of volume 245, United States Reports, and I read:

> I am employed by and work for the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. with the express understanding that I am not a member of the United Mine Workers of America and will not become so while an employee of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co.; that the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. is run nonunion and agrees with me that it will run nonunion while I am in its employ. If at any time I am employed by the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. I want to become connected with the United Mine Workers of America, or any affiliated organization, I agree to withdraw from the employment of said company and agree that while I am in the employ of that company I will not make any efforts amongst its employees to bring about the unionizing of that mine against the company's wish. I have either read the above or heard the same read.

That contract was the basis in part of this suit; and in passing upon it the court said, at page 248:

> In short, at the time the bill was filed, defendants, although having full notice of the terms of employment existing between plaintiff and its miners, were engaged in an earnest effort to subvert those relations without plaintiff's consent, and to alienate a sufficient number of the men to shut down the mine, to the end that the fear of losses through stoppage of operations might coerce plaintiff into "recognizing the union," at the cost of its own independence. The methods resorted to by their "organizer" were such as have been described.

> What are the legal consequences of the facts that have been detailed?
> That the plaintiff was acting within its lawful rights in employing its men only upon terms of continuing nonmembership in the United Mine Workers of America is not open to question. Plaintiff's repeated costly experiences of strikes and other interferences while attempting to "run union" were a sufficient explanation of its resolve to run "nonunion," if any were needed. But neither explanation nor justification is needed. Whatever may be the advantages of "collective bargaining," it is not bargaining at all, in any just sense, unless it is voluntary on both sides. The same liberty which enables men to form unions, and through the union to enter into agreements with employers willing to agree, entitles other men to remain independent of the union and other employers to agree with them to employ no man who owes any allegiance or obligation to the union. In the latter case, as in the former, the parties are entitled to be protected by the law in the enjoyment of the benefits of any lawful agreement they may make. This court repeatedly has held that the employer is as free to make nonmembership in a union a condition of employment as the workingman is free to join the union, and that this is a part of the constitutional rights of personal liberty and private property, not to be taken away even by legislation, unless through some proper exercise of the paramount police power.

* * * It is said that the bill does not show an employment for a term, and that under an employment at will the complainant could be discharged at any time for any reason or for no reason, the motive of the employer being immaterial. The conclusion, however, that is sought to be drawn is too broad. The fact that the employment is at the will of the parties, respectively, does not make it one at the will of others. The employee has manifest interest in the freedom of the employer to exercise his judgment without illegal interference or compulsion, and, by the weight of authority, the unjustified interference of third persons is actionable, although the employment is at will. (Citing many cases.)

On page 252:

The right of action for persuading an employee to leave his employer is universally recognized—nowhere more clearly than in West Virginia—and it rests upon fundamental principles of general application, not upon the English statute of laborers.

In this case Mr. Justice Brandeis dissented, but he did not dissent upon the question of the legality of the contract.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. My recollection is, although it has been several years since I read the case, that he directly or indirectly declared the contract was not subject to challenge upon the ground that it was unconstitutional.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, recently the House of Representatives of the State of Massachusetts asked the justices of the supreme judicial court of that State for an advisory opinion. There is a provision in the constitution of Massachusetts which permits that to be done. I have before me the advance sheets of the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, from which I now wish to read:

OPINION OF THE JUSTICES TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, OPINION OF THE JUSTICES, DUE PROCESS OF LAW, EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAW, CLASS LEGISLATION, CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS. LABOR

On May 11, 1931, the house of representatives adopted the following order:

"Whereas there is pending before the general court a bill entitled 'An act to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes,' printed as House Document No. 976 of the current year, a copy of which is herewith submitted; and

"Whereas doubt exists as to the constitutionality of said bill, if enacted into law: Therefore be it

"Ordered, That the opinions of the honorable the justices of the supreme judicial court be required by the house of representatives on the following important question of law:

"Would the provisions of said bill, if enacted into law, be in conflict with the Constitution of this Commonwealth or of the United States?"

On May 29, 1931, the justices returned the following answer:

To the honorable the House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts:

The justices of the supreme judicial court have considered the order adopted on May 11, 1931, and transmitted to them on May 13, 1931, requiring their opinion on the question whether the provisions of the bill printed as House Document No. 976, if enacted into law, would be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or of this Commonwealth. Copy of the order is hereto annexed.

It has been the practice of the justices of the supreme judicial court in the performance of their duty under chapter 3, article 2, of the constitution to render opinions when required by the designated legislative or executive branch upon "important questions of law and upon solemn occasions" to confine their answers to particular questions of law submitted to them. It has not been regarded as within the fair intent of this article of the constitution that they should be required to examine the validity of every clause, section, or part of a complicated statute, except in response to specific questions. (Opinion of the justices, 138 Mass. 601, 604; 145 Mass. 587, 592; 217 Mass. 607; 239 Mass. 606, 612; 247 Mass. 589, 598; 261 Mass. 523, 554; 261 Mass. 556, 613.) We well might decline to answer the question here propounded on this ground. This rule of conduct is not to be impaired in any degree. We presume that the honorable house of representatives desires no more than that the question be answered upon a general view of the proposed statute without scrutiny of its details.

On such general view the proposed act appears to us to fall into three main divisions. The first is comprised in sections 1 to 3, inclusive. The vital part of this division appears to be section 2. That section declares, in substance, that every contract between any present or prospective employee and present or prospective employer or others whereby either party undertakes to join or not to join or to remain or not to remain a member of any labor organization or employer organization or to withdraw from an employment relation in the event that he joins or remains a member of such organization is contrary to public policy and shall not be the basis of relief in the courts. Main provisions of section 3 of the bill attempt to deprive the courts of jurisdiction to issue any injunction touching such contracts. This appears especially from subsections (a), (b), (g). The provisions of section 1 declare the public policy of the Commonwealth to be in favor of full freedom of organization of workmen for collective bargaining and other purposes. The terms of that section are plainly broad enough to comprehend organization to break contracts made contrary to the terms of section 2, and although containing no definite reference to section 2 must be construed as designed to include the facts recited in section 2. These provisions would be unconstitutional. That is too clear for discussion. They fall within the condemnation of principles declared and stated at length in Adair v. United States (208 U. S. 161), and Coppage v. Kansas (236 U. S. 1). In the first of those decisions an act of Congress and in the second a statute of Kansas, indistinguishable in essential features from these sections of the present bill, were held to be violative of provisions of the Federal Constitution forbidding the enactment of any law depriving a person of liberty or property without due process of law. A decisive sentence from 236 U. S. 1, 14, is in these words: "Included in the right of personal liberty and the right of private property—partaking of the nature of each—is the right to make contracts for the acquisition of property. Chief among such contracts is that of personal employment, by which labor and other services are exchanged for money or other forms of property. If this right be struck down or arbitrarily interfered with, there is a substantial impairment of liberty in the long-established constitutional sense." These principles have been reiterated and these cases cited with approval in more recent decisions. (Truax v. Raich, 239 U. S. 33, 41; New York Central Railroad v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 206; Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 250–251; Prudential Ins. Co. v. Cheek, 259 U. S. 530, 536; Adkins v. Children's Hospital, 261 U. S. 525, 545–546; Highland v. Russell Car & Snow Plow Co., 279 U. S. 253, 261; Texas & New Orleans Railroad v. Brotherhood of Railway & Steamship Clerks, 281 U. S. 548, 570.) It would be vain for us to indulge in discussion in view of these authoritative adjudications. This matter also is fully covered by the "Opinion of the Justices" rendered to the honorable the house of representatives on April 15, 1930 (Mass. Adv. Sh. (1930) 903).

The second division of the bill comprehends sections 4–9, both inclusive. It is possible that these sections are designed chiefly to be in aid of section 2 of the bill and would not otherwise be proposed. However that may be, one dominating aim of this part of the bill seems to be to establish with respect to every "labor dispute" as defined in section 12 (c) a substantially different method of procedure, subject to materially different prerequisites, conditions, rules of trial, and extent of redress, from that established in any other kind of controversy where relief in equity is sought. This dominating purpose appears to be class legislation and to impair equality before the law and equal protection of equal laws to all persons, contrary to principles affirmed in Bogni v. Perotti (224 Mass. 152) and Truax v. Corrigan (257 U. S. 312).

The third division of the bill includes sections 10–14, both inclusive. The dominating purpose of these sections is to narrow to an unconstitutional extent the power of courts to deal with contempt of court in connection with litigation in labor disputes. The effect of these sections would contravene principles laid down in Walton Lunch Co. v. Kearney (236 Mass. 310); Root v. MacDonald (260 Mass. 344); and Blankenburg v. Commonwealth (260 Mass. 369). See Blankenburg v. Commonwealth (Mass. Adv. Sh. (1930) 1485).

In answering the question we have considered only a general view of the proposed bill. It has not been examined in detail with reference to the questions that might be raised as to its several parts. We do not undertake to intimate how much of the bill, if dissociated from the dominating factors already mentioned, would be within the competency of the general court to enact. Those matters we can not deal with for the reasons stated at the outset of this opinion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to an interruption?

Mr. HEBERT. I am glad to yield.

Mr. KING. I invited the attention of the Senator a moment ago to the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Brandeis in the Hitchman case, and my recollection is that the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] a few moments ago implied that that dissenting opinion by Justice Brandeis was a declaration that contracts of this character were illegal. I would like to read just a sentence or two from Mr. Justice Brandeis's dissenting opinion:

> In other words an employer, in order to effectuate the closing of his shop to union labor, may exact an agreement to that effect from his employees. The agreement itself being a lawful one, the employer may withhold from the men an economic need—employment—until they assent to make it. Likewise an agreement closing a shop to nonunion labor being lawful, the union may withhold from an employer an economic need—labor—until he assents to make it. In a legal sense an agreement entered into, under such circumstances, is voluntarily entered into; and as the agreement is in itself legal, no reason appears why the general rule that a legal end may be pursued by legal means should not be applied. Or, putting it in other words, there is nothing in the character of the agreement which should make unlawful means used to attain it, which in other connections are recognized as lawful.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, it is to be observed that the majority of the committee in its report seeks not so much to deny legal remedies to the parties to such contracts as to take away the right of injunction to prevent a breach of them.

In the majority report on page 9 the following statement appears:

> Relief by injunction is an extraordinary and harsh remedy. It should not be resorted to except in cases where such action is imperatively demanded; and yet, injunctive relief is often the only adequate and effective relief against many wrongs and to prevent many irreparable injuries in controversies of infinite variety.

If any means can be devised by legislative enactment to carry out the purposes of the measure so far as injunctive relief is concerned, without conflicting with the provisions of the Constitution and the decisions of the courts of last resort, I believe I am justified in saying for the minority and for myself—I unhesitatingly say—I will join in such an effort and will assist in every way possible to secure its passage.

Inasmuch as the general purpose of the bill is to afford relief from unfair injunctive processes, it seems reasonable to assume that the provisions of this section would effectuate that purpose quite fully if they were limited so as to provide that such contracts should afford no ground for injunctive relief. The bill would then be in harmony with the public policy to be established by other provisions of the measure.

These so-called "yellow-dog" contracts are contracts of employment. They are entered into between employers and employees all domiciled in the same State, with but few exceptions. It follows, then, that they are to be construed in accordance with the laws of the State where they are made. If Congress is to declare such contracts void, then we shall have the anomalous situation where in a State they are legal and enforceable by the laws of that State, they may be held illegal and void by a mere transference of a case involving them to a court of the United States.

In my opinion, a provision which would deny injunctive relief based upon the existence of such contracts would afford full remedy to employees against any injustice done them in labor disputes, and at the same time would probably not be open to serious constitutional objections.

Some serious doubt has been expressed as to the right of Congress to limit the equity powers of courts of the United States. This question arose in the case of Michaelson v. United States (1924, 266 U. S. 62). My reading of the decision in that case leads me to the conclusion that it is not beyond the authority of Congress to place some limitations upon the equity powers of such courts. In that case the court was interpreting the provision in the Clayton Act which requires courts to afford jury trials in criminal contempt proceedings.

Mr. Justice Sutherland said in the opinion:

> But it is contended that the statute merely interferes with the inherent power of the courts and is therefore invalid. That the power to punish for contempts is inherent in all courts has been many times decided and may be regarded as settled law. It is essential to the administration of justice. The courts of the United States, when called into existence and vested with jurisdiction over any subject, at once become possessed of the power. So far as the inferior Federal courts are concerned, however, it is not beyond the authority of Congress * * *. That it may be regulated within limits not precisely defined may not be doubted.

The limitation which is proposed to be placed upon the power of the courts to issue injunctions based upon these "yellow-dog" contracts is, I hope, one within the purview of the opinion to which I have referred, and the opinion justifies the belief that such a provision as is embodied in the substitute bill submitted by the minority will be sustained, especially when read in the light of the declaration of policy which is also a part of the measure.

LIMIT OF INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

Sections 4 and 5 prohibit the issuance of injunctions under certain conditions therein enumerated. The language of clause (a), section 4, is as follows:

> Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment.

This language, fairly interpreted, leads to the conclusion that an employee may continue in the relation of employment, hold his job, and yet refuse to perform any work. That an employee may cease to be employed, whereas, in most instances, he is working under a contract at will, there is no question. On the other hand, the employer may, under such a contract, dismiss the employee and either party is at liberty to put an end to the employment relation. But expressly to provide that an employee may refuse to perform any work and yet continue in an employment relation is, to my mind, to place the stamp of approval, by legislative enactment, upon a breach of contract. It can not be that the framers of this bill had any such purpose in mind. It may well be, however, that what was intended was to place the employee outside of those injunctive processes which have been so broad as to compel an employee against his will to perform a given task. Such a situation arose in the case of Bedford Co. against Stone Cutters' Association, reported in Two hundred and seventy-fourth United States Reports, page 37 (1926).

In that case reference is made to an injunction granted to the complainant in the case of Duplex Co. v. Deering (254 U. S. 443) restraining the respondents—

> From interfering with the sale, transportation, or delivery in interstate commerce of the presses of complainant; also from interfering with the carting, installation, use, operation, exhibition, displacing, or preparing of any such press or presses, * * * and especially from using any force, threats, command, direction, or even persuasion with the object of having the effect of causing any person or persons to decline employment, cease employment, or not seek employment or to refrain from work or cease working under any person, firm, or corporation being a purchaser or prospective purchaser of any printing press or presses from complainant * * *.

The injunction issued in the Bedford Stone Co. case, supra, was sustained. Justice Brandeis, who wrote a dissenting opinion, made this observation:

> If on the undisputed facts of this case refusal to work can be enjoined, Congress created by the Sherman law and the Clayton Act an instrument for imposing restraints upon labor which reminds of involuntary servitude.

In my opinion, the provisions of paragraph (a), section 4, of the bill should be modified so as to provide that no injunction shall issue upon the ground that an employee has ceased or refused to remain in any relation of employment. This, I believe, would fully guarantee to the employee his freedom of contract and his right to put an end to his contractural relations.

The substitute bill prepared by the minority of the committee modifies in some respects other clauses of section 4, which, as written in the bill reported by the majority, are, in my opinion, open to serious objections.

In other words, if by the provisions of section 4 of the majority bill, clause (a), it is meant that no limitation shall be placed upon an employee to cease work when he chooses to do so and that by ceasing to do so he may not render himself liable to restraint through injunctive processes, then, of course, that is fully justified in my judgment. But let me repeat the language:

Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment.

It would seem to me that would permit an employee to continue in the employment relation; in other words, to stay right on the job and refuse to do anything that he is told to do even though it be in the course of his employment and even though they be acts which he is hired to perform. It can not be that the Senate wants to enact any such provision as that. The minority has modified it by providing in the substitute bill a change so as to make it read:

Ceasing or refusing to remain in any relation of employment.

LAW OF AGENCY

I come now to a discussion of the provisions of section 6 of the majority bill which relates to agency in labor disputes.

In section 6 the bill attempts fundamentally to change the law of agency in respect to "an association or combination participating or interested in a labor dispute."

It is urged that this is not the establishment of a new law of agency, but rather the creation of a new rule of evidence. It is contended that this provision will not relieve an individual from responsibility for his acts. It is claimed that there is a distinction between cases which would arise under this section, and those commonly arising under the law of agency as it is recognized, and under which one is held legally responsible for the acts of his agents done in the course of his employment.

Criminal acts are personal to the wrongdoer, and an employer may not be held responsible as a criminal wrongdoer if his agent be guilty of a crime, notwithstanding it be committed in the course of the employment unless the employer or principal authorizes or participates in or ratifies its commission. This section does not deal with criminal acts; its provisions affect the commission of "unlawful acts." It attempts to make a distinction between the relations of those in charge of a strike who are directing the members of a labor organization in the accomplishment of their purposes and employers who direct the activities of their employees in the ordinary course of their business.

It does not seem to me that such a distinction is tenable. In the one case strikers are acting under the authority of and are subject to the orders of the leaders of the movement; in the other, the employee is subject to the authority and under the control and direction of his employer. To this extent at least there is no difference in the relation. Both seek to accomplish their respective ends—in the one case to prevail in a strike and make it effective so as to compel the employer to submit to the demands of the strikers; in the other, to render service or to sell merchandise or whatever may be the particular trade or occupation in which the employer is engaged.

If I may cite an illustration to clarify that statement somewhat, the law of agency is based upon the legal maxim that an employer is liable for the acts of his employee done in the course of his employment; in other words, respondeat superior. If a delivery clerk employed by some merchant in this city, for instance, driving a motor truck or other conveyance, runs into a pedestrain who is in the exercise of due care, and injuries him, however severely, and if in the doing of that act the delivery clerk be negligent and it be done in the course of his employment, then his employer is liable for the consequences resulting from that injury.

The provisions of section 6 would alter that completely. It would be subversive of that principle of the law of agency. It says, in effect, if an employee or a man engaged in a labor dispute, acting on the orders from him who directs that labor dispute, commits an unlawful act, then the director of that labor dispute, under whom a given employee is operating, will not be liable for the consequences of such unlawful acts "except upon clear proof of actual participation in or actual authorization of such act or of ratification of such act after actual knowledge thereof."

Having in mind that the chief object to be attained by the enactment of this bill is to limit the power of courts to issue injunctions and to punish for contempts thereof, it has seemed to me that this section might well be made a part of section 11 of the bill reported by the majority and so phrased as to protect officers and members of labor organizations from punishment for contempt and from injunctions if, when unlawful acts are committed by anyone engaged in a strike or labor dispute, it appears that such officers or members as are charged with responsibility for the acts of others did not actually participate in or actually authorize or actually ratify such acts. In addition, the amendment which I have proposed would provide that in any contempt proceedings based upon the commission of such acts, if the person charged makes the claim that he did not actually participate in or actually authorize or actually ratify such act, he shall be entitled to a public trial by an impartial jury.

In this way members of organizations engaged in labor disputes, and their officers as well, will be fully protected and at the same time the provisions of existing law will in no way be subverted.

HEARINGS ON PETITIONS FOR INJUNCTION

I come now to the provisions of section 7 of the majority bill affecting the question of hearings on petitions for injunctions.

Section 7 of the bill provides that no restraining order or injunction shall be issued in a case growing out of a labor dispute except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court.

The section then proceeds to outline certain findings of fact which must be had prior to the issuance of a restraining order or injunction. The first requirement is that unlawful acts have been committed and will be continued unless restrained.

Many of the restraining orders and injunctions heretofore issued in labor disputes were much more far-reaching in their effect than the occasion required. Proof to sustain this view may be found in the decisions of the Supreme Court. I am in sympathy with the purposes sought to be attained by this part of the bill, but I believe it should be modified in some respects. Under paragraph (a) of this section the owner of property may not have relief where acts of destruction are contemplated or threatened and must have actually suffered injury before he can secure a restraining order or an injunction. Courts should be left free to restrain anyone from engaging in unlawful acts, and before they are committed.

There is no element of justice in a provision of law which would permit one citizen to destroy the property of another before any court shall have the power to restrain him.

The effect of this provision would be to work hardship upon employees as well as upon employers, because in the event that an employer should threaten to commit an unlawful act against the interests of the employee the employee would have no redress, but would be required to wait until after the act had been committed before seeking his remedy. In other words, there can be no injury to a wrongdoer if he be restrained from continuing his wrongdoing.

Paragraph (c) of section 7 brings in the law of comparative negligence. In cases of comparative negligence both parties are at fault, and the question of which one is liable is determined by a comparison of the fault of each. In the case of injunctive processes to restrain illegal acts, such as violence and threats, no injury can in contemplation of law be suffered by the party who is restrained from continuing the illegal acts. Paragraph (c) makes no distinction between acts which are lawful and those which are not. It simply provides that as to the measure of relief granted the court must find that greater injury will be inflicted upon the complainant by the denial of the relief than will be inflicted upon the defendant by the granting of it.

Paragraph (e) of section 7 would require a complainant to show affirmatively that the public officers charged with the duty to protect his property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection. All such officers are required to be given personal notice and as this provision is now worded, it might be construed to mean that every police officer in a city or town of whatever size must have notice and must testify in any proceeding which may be had for injunctive relief. It would impose an unusual burden upon a complainant; first, to ascertain the names and the duties of all officers charged with the protection of property; and second, to prove that they have failed to afford protection or that they are unable to do so.

I can well imagine the burden placed upon a complainant where he sought to have relief in injunction proceedings in a city the size of New York, for instance, where he would be called upon to establish affirmatively either that the police, or those charged with the enforcement of the law or the protection of his property, were unable to afford protection or were unwilling to do so.

Not all the acts of which employers of labor complain in the course of labor disputes are such as to come within the purview of the duties of public officers generally. Even a most cursory examination of the forms of reasonable injunction which have been issued in labor disputes will disclose this. If, however, the provisions of paragraph (e) are to be limited in their operation to acts of destruction of property, there again the difficulty of establishing proof of neglect or inability of public officers to afford protection may be impossible to sustain. The destruction of property may well occur without the knowledge of public officers.

CONDITION PRECEDENT TO ISSUANCE OF RESTRAINING ORDER OR INJUNCTION

Section 8 provides that no restraining order or injunction shall be granted unless the complainant has first made every reasonable effort to settle the dispute by negotiation. The principle of mediation and arbitration is the ideal one in the settlement of labor disputes; and, wherever possible, resort should be had to such a course of action; but under this section a respondent may, without notice, engage in violence and fraud and the complainant will be denied relief unless he has first taken all steps for the negotiation of a settlement. Thus the aggressor may act without notice, and may not be restrained until the injured party has endured the violence for a sufficient length of time within which to endeavor to secure an adjustment. Negotiations looking to the settlement of labor disputes are most commendable. In very recent time we have had ample proof of this. Notwithstanding the depressed condition of industry there have been practically no labor disputes of any kind, all parties having submitted their differences to mediation and to a calm discussion through their chosen representatives. Negotiations prior to overt acts is desirable, but this rule should apply to all parties, and particularly to the aggressor.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I repeat that I have no disposition or intention to delay or to interfere with the passage of this bill. I shall offer amendments as we proceed with its consideration which I believe will more fully protect the interests of all parties in labor disputes. I have been informed that labor organizations themselves have many amendments to propose to the bill. It may be that some of those which they intend to offer or which are to be offered at their instance may carry out the purposes which I myself have in mind. I firmly believe that the substitute which I have proposed will prove satisfactory to everyone. It will relieve the laboring man from the injustices which grew out of that form of contract which is so obnoxious to American citizens; it will remove, so far as they can be removed, the well-founded objections to some of the injunctive processes which have been issued in the past in labor disputes; it will curb the power of the courts to legislate by injunction, as it is claimed they have done, and will afford to every citizen the right of trial by jury guaranteed him by the Constitution.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before the Senator from Rhode Island takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am very anxious to be sure I understand the Senator's definition of the right of temporary injunction. Am I correct in understanding him to say that it is his construction that a contemplated injury can not be enjoined; that injury must actually have been suffered before there can be an injunction?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, that is my reading of the provisions of the bill reported by the majority of the committee, and I shall call the Senator's attention to them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The language to which the Senator from Rhode Island refers is found, beginning in paragraph (a), line 7, on page 6.

Mr. HEBERT. Yes. Paragraph (a), line 7, page 6, reads:

That unlawful acts have been committed and will be continued unless restrained.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; but I call the Senator's attention to paragraph (b), which reads:

That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow.

Mr. HEBERT. Will follow what?

Mr. VANDENBERG. The unlawful acts that have been committed. There need not necessarily be damage, need there?

Mr. HEBERT. But, notwithstanding one has knowledge that unlawful acts have been threatened which, if committed, will destroy his property and will cause irreparable injury, he may not obtain an injunction, under this bill, according to paragraph (a), on page 6, because injunctions are to be limited to unlawful acts which "have been committed and will be continued unless restrained."

Mr. VANDENBERG. In other words, would it be the Senator's view that no contemplated injury, however formidably anticipated, could be reached?

Mr. HEBERT. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I am impressed with the correctness of the interpretation of this language by the Senator from Rhode Island. Paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) appear to be cumulative; that is to say, it must appear that all five of the conditions mentioned in them exist before relief may be granted; there must have been unlawful acts already committed; it must appear that substantial and irreparable injury will result; that, upon a balancing of injuries, it shall be found that the injury to be inflicted upon the complainant will be greater than the injury that will be imposed on the defendant; that the complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and that public officers are not able or are unwilling to enforce it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arkansas, then, would it be his view, if I have definite and specific information that my property is about to be attacked in the course of a well-sustained and well-formulated conspiracy, that I must await the attack before I can procure relief?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; that is not my view at all; and I think if it is made to appear clearly that property is about to be destroyed it is much better to grant relief before the destruction of the property than afterwards.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would think so; but I am asking the Senator if it is his construction of this bill that relief can not be obtained under the circumstances I have mentioned?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. That is what I was saying. I did not write the language, but from its reading it seems that before an injunction can be obtained it must be shown that there have been unlawful acts. Of course, the reason for that is that frequently attempts are made to prove intention to commit unlawful acts when there is little actual evidence to support it. Under the procedure that has prevailed heretofore most of the injunctions have been issued upon ex parte applications, and therein lies the great sin of them. Any sort of an allegation that would apparently give the court jurisdiction is accepted as true upon slight proof. The object of the provision is apparent; it is to protect against such circumstances; but I think the language needs consideration.

Mr. HEBERT. In fact, many of those injunctions are issued ex parte upon mere affidavit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. HEBERT. That situation is amply protected by the provisions of the substitute which has been prepared by the minority members of the committee, and it is likewise protected by the bill presented by the majority; but we of the minority felt that the majority bill goes too far, and requires too much cumulative evidence before affording any redress to one whose property is destroyed or is about to be destroyed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should say that in connection with the paragraph just referred to on page 6 of the bill, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island is well worthy of consideration.

Mr. WALSH of Montana obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dale	Kean	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	King	Smith
Bingham	Fess	La Follette	Smoot
Black	Fletcher	Lewis	Steiwer
Blaine	Frazier	Logan	Stephens
Borah	George	Long	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Glenn	McNary	Townsend
Broussard	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulkley	Gore	Morrison	Tydings
Bulow	Hale	Moses	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Capper	Hastings	Norbeck	Walcott
Caraway	Hatfield	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Carey	Hawes	Nye	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Hayden	Oddie	Watson
Coolidge	Hebert	Patterson	Wheeler
Copeland	Howell	Pittman	White
Costigan	Hull	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the differences which have developed in the course of the discussion so far as it has proceeded indicate that they occupy so narrow a field that it would seem as though protracted debate would scarcely any longer be called for, and that hereafter it might very appropriately be confined to what may be regarded as details of the bill, such as were referred to in the colloquy with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] as he was about to quit the floor.

Of the necessity and advisability of legislation dealing with this particular subject there seems to be no difference of opinion. Reference has been made to the declarations of the platforms of the two great political parties in 1928 to the effect that abuses have crept into the procedure of the issuance of injunctions, particularly in labor cases, and that remedial legislation should be enacted. Both the majority and the minority reports agree concerning the existence of these abuses and concerning the need for legislation.

The governors of various States, particularly the States of Massachusetts, New York, and Wisconsin, have recently invited the attention of their legislatures to these abuses and suggested the enactment of remedial legislation. The National Civic Federation has called attention to the need in a pamphlet recently issued, from which I read, as follows:

> A most careful and thorough examination has been made of injunctions issued in labor disputes in our State courts as well as in our Federal courts (as indicated in the record annexed), which study has clearly indicated the validity of the complaint made by labor that the injunction writ has been subject to many abuses, thus confirming as well the declarations of the two major political parties, which have expressed themselves upon this question.
> Your committee has, therefore, no hesitancy in recommending the advisability of remedial legislation on this subject. Indeed, it deems it imperative if the workers are to be assured that the judiciary of our land and the great powers vested in it are not being unduly and unwarrantedly used in determining the industrial relations and policies that should govern our industrial life.

Former Senator Pepper, once a distinguished Member of this body, has contributed an article on this subject to the Journal of the American Bar Association, which I ask may be incorporated in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The particular abuses pointed out are, first, the issuance of restraining orders without any notice whatever; second, the issuance of temporary injunctions at least upon ex parte affidavits; third, the use of general language in the restraining order, so that the ordinary person to whom it may be directed, or who may be interested in it, is unable to say whether or not a particular act falls within the condemnation of the order; fourth, the issuance of injunctions upon what is known as the "yellow-dog" contract; and, finally, the issuance of injunctions restraining the doing of acts clearly legal in themselves.

I desire to address myself particularly, however, to what is known as the "yellow-dog" contract. That is a contract by which, when one seeks employment from an industrial organization, he is confronted with a form contract by which he agrees that while he remains in the employ of the employer he will not join a union. There are other stipulations related to that to which it will not be necessary to advert; but it is for the purpose of insuring to the employer that he will not be called upon to deal with a union.

These contracts are coming into remarkably general use. A case involving one recently came before the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania. The injunction in that case was sustained, but in it a dissenting opinion was rendered by Mr. Justice Maxey in which reference was made to the frequency with which these so-called restrictive contracts are employed. I read from an opinion filed by him, as follows:

> In May, 1929, the plaintiff company entered into an agreement with the Allied Manufacturers' League (Inc.), of New York City, whereby the "league" agreed to assist plaintiff company in installing the "individual contract system" at the plant and to secure new employees in the event of a strike. This "league" is apparently owned and managed by one Horace A. MacDonald. On June 8, 1929, MacDonald appeared with mimeographed forms of the individual contract and that night he and the company's superintendent, Winkler, went to the knitters' floor in the mill and instructed the night foreman, Bowersocks, to assemble the employees. This was done, and Winkler and MacDonald told the men that they were to sign the individual contracts. Lester Rice, a knitter in the plaintiff's mill, testified that Bowersocks, the foreman, "just called them down there, one by one, to the office to sign that "yellow-dog" contract, and we wouldn't sign." For about two hours the importunities to sign continued. MacDonald testified that the men "said it was a "yellow-dog" contract." The men were told to sign or quit work. Nearly the entire night force refused to sign and left the plant at 2 a. m. William Montplaisir, an employee, testified that "there was a lot of discussion about signing it; no one wanted to." The following day Schmidt summoned the day-shift men to his office where, according to the testimony of employees, they were "told to sign or get out. So what was the use of reading it?"

I call attention to the fact that this company exists for the purpose of supplying what are known as strike breakers wherever a strike occurs—that is to say, furnishing men who will operate during the course of the strike—and at the same time furnishes blank "yellow-dog" contracts to any company that desires to use them for the purpose of restricting the liberty of the men in its employ.

The generality of the use of these contracts is likewise disclosed in an article, which will be found in the Nation of December 31, 1930, by Mr. Joel L. Seidman. I read from that article, as follows:

> Employers were not slow to realize that they possessed in the injunction a weapon of the greatest effectiveness. The Red Jacket case, upon which rests Judge Parker's claim to fame, strengthened the tendency to resort to these contracts, though it added nothing that was conclusive, since it went no higher than the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. As a result, the "yellow-dog" contract is resorted to at present, not so much for its psychological effect as for its future usefulness in securing a court injunction against union organizers. Whenever an attempt is made to persuade the signers of these contracts to join a union, it can be accepted as a certainty that application will be made to a court of equity for a restraining order, and as just as great a certainty that the order will be issued.

This was true of the Kraemer Hosiery Mills, of Nazareth, Pa.—

That is the case to which I have just referred—and of the United States Gypsum Corporation in Iowa, to cite but two of the most recent instances. In several instances, as in certain dressmaking establishments in New York City, the workers have been forced to deposit cash with the employer as security for observance of the "yellow-dog" contracts. In one case the helpless employees were even forced to agree that if they violated the terms by joining a union, an injunction could be issued against them—which is much like forcing condemned men to say that they are willing to be executed. The use of "yellow-dog" contracts has spread so rapidly within the past 13 years that now the Metal Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor estimates that 1,250,000 persons in this country are working under such agreements.

Clearly, labor is being combated here with a peculiarly deadly weapon. A man who has a family to support and no resources upon which he can fall back will of necessity sign anything to get a job. If, then, an injunction is issued and any attempt to acquaint him with the advantages of unionization becomes contempt subject to the summary punishment of the court, it follows that the growth of unionism can effectively be checked.

The subject had very elaborate consideration in this body in connection with the confirmation of Judge Parker; and, at the close of a very eloquent address, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] expressed gratification that no Member of the Senate had risen in his place and said one word in justification of that method of oppression of labor. Thus far in the discussion of the matter upon the floor, no one has risen to justify the use of these contracts. Indeed, to his credit the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] expressly declared that they met his condemnation.

The minority report, as well as the majority report, condemns them. I read from the minority report as follows, referred to what is known as the "yellow dog" contract:

In our opinion, this form of agreement deprives employees of the right of free association with their fellows and takes away from them the opportunity to deal on a basis of equality with those by whom they are employed. But however distasteful they may be to us, and however much we may sympathize with those who believe that the interests of employees will never be properly protected except through legislative enactment, the fact remains that the Supreme Court in three cases has held that there is no legislative power, State or Federal, to inhibit or outlaw employment contracts providing against union membership.

I read that for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that although the minority contend that these contracts are immune from legislative condemnation by reason of constitutional principles, they still meet their condemnation; they believe they are oppressive and wrong.

So, too, both bills condemn these contracts, the bill presented by the majority of the committee declaring that they shall be unenforceable either at law or in equity, and the minority report equally declaring that they shall not be enforceable in equity.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, even though it may be agreed that the minority report is correct in the view that the contract itself, on account of constitutional reasons, can not be condemned, Congress, however, would still have the power to say that no Federal instrumentality should be permitted to enforce it or to issue an injunction in cases of that kind. Is not that true?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That appears to be the concurrence of the entire committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is not that sound constitutional principle?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think so. I propose to say something about that a little later on.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is all right. Both bills, then, condemn these contracts. The bill presented by the majority of the committee declares that they are against public policy and ought not to be enforced, either at law or in equity. The minority reports that they are against public policy and ought not to be enforced in equity, and they content themselves with that. The point I am making now is that they meet the condemnation of the entire membership of the Senate, so far as I have been able to discern.

In a pamphlet I hold is collected a large number of expressions from public men, from publicists and from jurists, who express themselves in unmeasured terms in denunciation of this particular form of contract and oppression of labor. I ask unanimous consent that this may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit B.)

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Mr. Chief Justice Taft, during the war, it will be remembered, was at the head of what was known as the War Labor Board, a board constituted for the purpose of adjusting differences between labor and employers so that production might go on uninterrupted during that stressful time. He found that a strike was in progress among the street-car operatives in Council Bluffs and Omaha, and it became a part of his duty to adjust that controversy. He found that the "yellow-dog" contract was in force among the street-railway employees in those two cities and their employers, and in reporting on that particular controversy Judge Taft said:

The practice of the company in times past to make restrictive contracts—

That is, contracts which provided that the operative would not join a union—

The practice of the company in times past to make restrictive contracts, such as shown to the arbitrators, if continued, would be contrary to the principles of the National War Labor Board. However, counsel for the company states to the arbitrators that this practice has been abandoned and calls for no further action on the part of the arbitrators.

We may, then, proceed upon the assumption that everybody in this body would get rid of these contracts if that could be done, believing them to be unwise and unjust.

It is said, however, that we are powerless in the premises, at least, that we have no power to condemn these contracts so far as legal actions are concerned, and that conclusion is based upon three decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, the case of Adair against the United States, the case of Coppage against Kansas, and the case of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. against Mitchell.

The case of Adair against the United States arose under a statute which condemned these contracts so far as they were executed in favor of companies engaged in interstate commerce. Some of the railroad companies, as has been disclosed, were resorting to these contracts, and an effort was made by Congress to hold them ineffective. The statute was declared by the Supreme Court of the United States in that case to be void. That statute made it criminal for anyone to enter into a contract of that character or for any interstate carrier to exact such a contract of its employees. It was a criminal statute, and the criminal statute was held void.

The case of Coppage against Kansas arose upon a similar statute enacted by the State of Kansas. It forbade any employer exacting of his employees a contract of that character, and made again the exacting of such a contract a criminal offense. Upon the authority of Adair against the United States, the Supreme Court held that that statute of the State of Kansas was void.

The case of Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. against Mitchell has frequently been adverted to on the floor here, and particularly in connection with the confirmation of the nomination of Judge Parker, and need not be adverted to. The question was not directly presented in that case as to the power of Congress to legislate upon the subject or as to the power of a State to legislate upon it. However, on the basis of such contract, an injunction in that case was sustained.

Those conclusions were, as I have pointed out, arrived at in determining the validity of criminal statutes, and the decisions went no further than to find that neither the Congress nor the States could make contracts of that character criminal and punishable penally.

It is true, however, that in reaching that conclusion the court expressed itself further than that, and indicated that it was beyond the power, in the one case of Congress and in the other case of the legislature of a State, to enact legislation which would invalidate contracts of that character.

The grounds upon which those decisions proceeded are indicated by a brief extract from the opinion in the case of Adair against the United States, which I shall read. The majority opinion says:

> It was the legal right of the defendant, Adair—however unwise such a course might have been—to discharge Coppage because of his being a member of a labor organization, as it was the legal right of Coppage, if he saw fit to do so—however unwise such a course on his part might have been—to quit the service in which he was engaged, because the defendant employed some persons who were not members of a labor organization. In all such particulars the employer and the employee have equality of right, and any legislation that disturbs that equality is an arbitrary interference with the liberty of contract which no government can legally justify in a free land.

In the later Coppage case the court said:

> To ask a man to agree in advance to refrain from affiliation with the union while retaining a certain position of employment is not to ask him to give up any part of his constitutional freedom. He is free to decline the employment on those terms, just as the employer may decline to offer employment on any other, for "it takes two to make a bargain."

Both of these decisions proceed upon the assumption that both of the parties to the contract stand upon an entire equality of footing, whereas, as a matter of course, everybody in these days recognizes that they stand on no such footing.

In the dissenting opinion in that case it was said that for the reason that the employee is under all manner of constraint, the constraint of fear of starvation for himself and his family, to induce him to enter into the contract, they do not stand on any footing of equality, and therefore contracts of that character are and should be by the courts declared to be contrary to a wise public policy.

I read from the opinion of Judge Day, with whom the present Chief Justice, then Associate Justice Hughes, concurred:

> Liberty of making contracts is subject to conditions in the interest of the public welfare, and which shall prevail—principle or condition—can not be defined by any precise and universal formula. Each instance of asserted conflict must be determined by itself, and it has ben said many times that each act of legislation has the support of the presumption that it is an exercise in the interest of the public. The burden is on him who attacks the legislation, and it is not sustained by declaring a liberty of contract. It can only be sustained by demonstrating that it conflicts with some constitutional restraint or that the public welfare is not subserved by the legislation. The legislature is, in the first instance, the judge of what is necessary for the public welfare, and a judicial review of its judgment is limited. The earnest conflict of serious opinion does not suffice to bring it within the range of judicial cognizance.

Judge Taft again said, in the Tri-City case, something quite pertinent to this matter we have under consideration. I read as follows:

> They—

That is, trade-unions.

> were organized out of the necessities of the situation.
> A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers opportunity to deal on equality with their employer.

Of course, it need not be said that if these contracts shall be upheld against legislative condemnation of them, and come into general use—and they have already come into general use and bid fair to come into practically universal use—as a matter of course there can be no such thing as labor unions, which Judge Taft said are essential in order to protect the liberty of the laboring men.

Mr. President, the right to enter into contract is not unrestricted. It is governed and controlled by many considerations, among them being the question as to whether the particular contract is or is not condemned by public policy. Take usurious contracts, for instance. Here are two parties perfectly willing to enter into a usurious contract, but the law says, "No; you may not do that. We will not give judicial countenance to any contract of that character. We forbid you to enter into a contract of that character."

Why, Mr. President? "Usurious contract" has been defined as the extorting or taking of a higher rate of interest than that allowed by law. Statutes making usuries penal proceed upon the assumption that the borrower is constrained by his necessities to enter into an unwarranted and improvident or unconscionable contract. It appears to me there is a perfect analogy between the case of statutes condemning usurious contracts and statutes condemning contracts such as are under consideration.

Chancellor Kent declared in one of his great opinions that Jeremy Bentham had declared that statutes of usury are founded upon wise and sound principles of public policy. Statutes of usury date back even to Biblical times. Their origin is involved in so much doubt that it still remains a matter of question as to whether usury was an offense under the common law or whether it had its origin in parliamentary statutes. However that may be, Mr. President, the power to contract was thus restrained by the act of the legislature or by the common law.

Likewise, it will be observed that public policy is different at different times and in different places. Statutes of usury existed in Great Britain for many years. It was deemed a wise public policy to prohibit contracts of that character. After a time that policy changed so that in 1856 all English statutes in relation to usury were abrogated. So in this country there are some States in which it is considered wise public policy to enact usury statutes. In others perfect freedom is believed to be the wiser public policy. Many of the States of the West have no usury statutes at all.

Mr. President, the power to contract is limited by many considerations. I have here the standard work, Greenwood on Public Policy, in the law of contracts. In the index we find a long list of contracts which the law will not permit to be made, and will not permit to be made upon grounds of public policy. One chapter deals with "contracts promotive of private dishonesty." All such are void. Another chapter deals with "contracts destructive of competition." The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] referred this morning to the statutes of Congress declaring certain contracts void because their tendency was to abrogate or limit competition.

Other chapters deal with contracts tending toward oppression; contracts promotive of prostitution, crime, and infidelity; contracts promotive of gambling; contracts for insurance where the party insuring has no real substantial interest in the life of the party assured; contracts promotive of dereliction of duty, public and private; contracts the effect of which will be the corruption of private citizens with reference to public matters; contracts affecting the integrity of public elections; contracts restricting assignability, the latter prohibiting one from making a contract by which the person to whom he sells a piece of property is restrained from disposing of that property at will; contracts promotive of monopoly; contracts in restraint of trade; contracts limiting the liability of common carriers, telegraph companies, employers, and tort feasors; contracts excusing a man from negligence either of himself or of his servants. So, Mr. President, there is a vast class, a great variety of contracts which the law will not permit to be made.

Is a contract of the character we are now considering such as is to be condemned as contrary to the public policy of the country? From the pamphlet to which I referred a little while ago I read a few excerpts indicating the views of publicists with reference to the same.

The United States Coal Commission reported in 1925, and in its report said:

> Notwithstanding the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the so-called "yellow-dog" contract is legal, the commission is of the opinion that it is a source of economic irritation, and is no more justifiable than any other form of contract which debars the individual from employment solely because of membership or nonmembership in any organization.

The United States Coal Commission, reporting again in 1923, said as follows:

We recommend that such destructive labor policies as the use of spies, the use of deputy sheriffs as paid company guards, house leases which prevent free access and exit, and individual contracts which are not free-will contracts be abolished.

Again the Coal Commission said:

The individual contract is closely tied up with the suppression of civil liberties. It has been used as a basis for securing injunctions against the attempts to organize the field by any means whatsoever. It has also been used as the basis for claiming damages from the United Mine Workers.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, in a press release under date of December, 1920, had the following to say:

When an applicant for work is compelled to sign a contract pledging himself against affiliation with a union, or when a union man is refused employment or discharged merely on the ground of union membership, the employer is using coercive methods and is violating the fundamental principle of an open shop.

From a pastoral letter of Catholic archbishops and bishops in the United States I read as follows:

Religion teaches the laboring man and the artisan to carry out honestly and fairly all equitable agreements freely arranged. * * * By treating the laborer first of all as a man the employer will make him a better working man; by respecting his own moral dignity as a man the laborer will compel the respect of his employer and of the community.

Reference is made, Mr. President, to the fact that these contracts almost encroach, if they do not actually encroach, upon the prohibition of the thirteenth amendment against involuntary servitude. I am reminded that long ago Homer said, "That day sees man a slave that takes half his work away."

No one will accuse Elihu Root of being a wild radical by any means, but in an address delivered by him in 1916 he had the following to say. After referring to the perfect freedom of contracts that existed between employer and the employee in past days before industrial conditions arrived at the point at which we find them in our day, he said:

Now, however, the power of organization has massed both capital and labor in such vast operations that in many directions, affecting great bodies of people, the right of contract can no longer be at once individual and free. In the great massed industries the free give and take of industrial demand and supply does not apply to the individual. Nor does the right of free contract protect the individual under those conditions of complicated interdependence which make so large a part of the community dependent for their food, their clothing, their health, and means of continuing life itself upon the service of a multitude of people with whom they have no direct relations whatever, contract or otherwise. Accordingly democracy turns again to government to furnish by law the protection which the individual can no longer secure through his freedom of contract and to compel the vast multitude on whose cooperation all of us are dependent to do their necessary part in the life of the community.

In the Daily Law Journal of May, 1909, appeared an article by Dean Roscoe Pound, from which I read as follows:

The attitude of many of our courts on the subject of liberty of contract is so certain to be misapprehended, is so out of the range of ordinary understanding, the decisions themselves are so academic and so artificial in their reasoning, that they can not fail to engender such feelings. Thus, those decisions do an injury beyond the failure of a few acts. These acts can be replaced as legislatures learn how to comply with the letter of the decisions and to evade the spirit of them. But the lost respect for courts and law can not be replaced. The evil of those cases will live after them in impaired authority of the courts long after the decisions themselves are forgotten.

Dr. Felix Frankfurter, of the Harvard Law School, had the following to say about it:

The rapidly increasing use of the so-called "yellow-dog" contracts has grown into a serious threat to the very existence of labor unions. In view of the inequitable conditions that surround the formation of such agreements and the unfair division of their obligation, to appeal to equity for their enforcement is to disregard the fundamentally ethical foundations of courts of chancery.

Francis B. Sayre, of the Harvard Law School, in the Yale Law Journal of March, 1930, had the following to say:

Seizing upon the Hitchman decision, employers have found an effective way to prevent peaceful and otherwise lawful union activities by requiring present or prospective employees as the price of employment to sign individual contracts against joining any union. Thus entrenched, they are in a position to defy every effort on the part of the union to unionize their plants, and by a system of strategic individual contracts with their employees they are able in many cases to prevent unions entering into a competitive struggle with them over the price of labor. That courts would refuse in fields other than labor law to allow competition to be effectually stifled by means of strategic contracts with third parties seems clear.

The question was mooted, Mr. President, as to how the public policy should be declared and promulgated, whether by the legislature or by the courts themselves. That subject is referred to in a note on page 4 of the book to which I referred a while ago, Greenwood on Public Policy, as follows:

Howe, J., of the Wisconsin Supreme Court, admitted, in a comparatively recent case, that the immediate representatives of the people, in legislature assembled, "would seem to be the fairest exponents of what public policy requires, as being most familiar with the habits and fashions of the day, and with the actual condition of commerce and trade, their consequent wants and weaknesses." Legislation is the least objectionable, because it operates prospectively as a guide to future negotiations, and does not, like a judgment of a court, annul a contract already concluded in good faith and upon a valuable consideration, and establishes a rule giving a wider circulation among the people, and which enters more generally into the information of the public. But this consideration by no means establishes the impropriety of a judicial determination that transactions are "at war with any established interest of society, however individuals may suffer thereby. The interest of individuals must be subservient to the public welfare."

That is to say, Mr. President, that the courts themselves may declare that a certain contract is against public policy, and many of the contracts denounced as against public policy were declared to be so in the entire absence of statutes, but, in the development of law, contracts of that kind coming before the courts were held to be contrary to public policy and declared to be void. Others were condemned by specific statutes, and there would appear to be no reason whatever, as it seems to me, why this particular variety of contracts should not be equally so condemned.

The present state of the law, Mr. President, upon the subject was set forth in an article in the Columbia Law Journal. It collates all of the cases, both for and against, and discloses that in the State of New York a very marked change has been shown in the later decisions from those upholding contracts of this character at an earlier date. I refrain from a discussion of these particular decisions, because I know that they have had the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who will probably address the Senate upon that subject. However, even though this view should be unsound, even though the court should eventually hold that, notwithstanding the character of these contracts, notwithstanding they have been so generally condemned and denounced, notwithstanding that the Senate has declared that it is against public policy that they should be enforced, the court should find that they still are protected by the Constitution, we are not without remedy, because, so far as the Federal courts are concerned, their jurisdiction is controlled entirely by the acts of Congress. We may limit as we see fit the jurisdiction of the inferior courts of the United States. The Constitution itself prescribes that "the judicial power [of the United States] shall extend to all cases in law and equity" involving a Federal question and to controversies involving citizens of different States, and so on; but no jurisdiction can be exercised unless it is conferred by Congress. That view is very clearly expressed in the case of Kline v. Burke Construction Co., in Two hundred and sixtieth United States Reports. I read from page 234, as follows:

Only the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is derived directly from the Constitution. Every other court created by the general Government derives its jurisdiction wholly from the authority of Congress. That body may give, withhold, or restrict such jurisdiction at its discretion, provided it be not extended beyond the boundaries fixed by the Constitution.

The opinion in that case was rendered by Mr. Justice Sutherland, formerly a member of this body, and he declares that jurisdiction may be given, it may be withheld, or it may be restricted. Congress has consistently acted upon that theory. So far back as 1793 it enacted a law providing that no restraining order should be issued by any equity court without notice to the parties against whom it ran. Prior to that time the courts of equity were authorized, in accordance with the practice of the chancery courts of Great Britain, to issue restraining orders without notice. Nevertheless, Congress declared, "You shall not issue a restraining order without notice." That state of the law continued, as my recollection is, until 1870 or 1872, during which time courts of the United States could not issue restraining orders without notice. The bill before us does not go that far. It authorizes the issuance of an injunction without notice, but the case must be clearly made in order to have it issued without notice that an irreparable injury will ensue.

Let me remark, Mr. President, that the more or less famous injunction issued by Judge Wilkerson, sued out at the instance of the then Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Harry Daugherty, is an instance of a restraining order which issued without any notice whatever. The shopmen's strike had been in progress for a long time, some months at least. It was alleged that acts of violence had been committed over a very considerable period of time. It was alleged, among other things, that a conspiracy existed for the purpose of restraining commerce between the several States and interrupting the progress of the mails. So far as that is concerned, if a strike is conducted upon a perfectly peaceful plan, if there is no violence of any character whatever, and no law is violated, yet, as a matter of course, if it is a successful strike, it will more or less interfere with commerce between the several States.

The shopmen's strike, for instance, was conducted upon the most peaceful lines, but obviously there would be some delay in the transport of products from one State to another, because, as a matter of course, equipment would deteriorate and transportation could not be carried on with the usual facility and with rapidity. So an application was made for a restraining order upon a bill of complaint, to which was attached a schedule, prepared by a clerk in the Department of Justice, reciting that United States marshals had reported from all over the country certain acts of violence. That was made a part of the bill of complaint. The bill of complaint was verified on information and belief by the United States district attorney for the northern district of Illinois; and upon that kind of a showing, without any notice whatever, an order was issued restraining the defendants from committing any of the acts mentioned in the bill of complaint, the restraining order itself being couched in such general language that no one could tell what particular acts were and what were not condemned by it.

At any rate, as I have indicated, along about 1870 the statute was changed, and thereafter restraining orders might be issued without notice.

Then again, in 1930, Congress restricted the power of Federal courts to punish for contempt. Prior to that time, in accordance with the practice of the courts of chancery, no limitation whatever was placed upon the chancellor. He could impose such penalty for contempt as seemed to him to be required by the justice and necessity of the case. But in that year Congress passed an act prohibiting judges of Federal courts from imposing a fine greater than $500 for contempt. Again in 1914, in the Clayton Act, we gave the right of trial by jury in cases of contempt, or at least supposed we had.

In other words, three separate times the power of the Federal courts in equity matters has been restricted by Federal legislation. Accordingly, even the minority members of the committee concede the right of the Congress of the United States to restrain the courts of the United States sitting as courts of equity from issuing writs of injunction; in other words, they concede the right of Congress to limit the jurisdiction of courts of the United States in the matter of the issuance of injunctions.

Mr. President, there is another feature of the pending legislation to which I desire to advert only briefly, and to my mind it is one of the crucial questions in connection with the bill. I refer to a feature to which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] adverted before the close of his remarks. The bill presented by the majority provides that one shall not be liable for acts of violence or destruction of property committed during the course of a strike unless he actually authorized the acts or thereafter ratified the commission of them. This is condemned, Mr. President, by the minority. The actual situation is this: Many of the courts hold that most strikes are conspiracies—conspiracies to restrain trade. As I have indicated, no matter how peacefully or orderly a strike may be conducted, it will interfere, to some extent, with the movement of trains. Consequently the conclusion is arrived at that the strike itself is an unlawful conspiracy in restraint of trade, and evidence concerning specific acts of violence or the destruction of property or the threatened destruction of property is introduced simply for the purpose of aggravating the alleged conspiracy.

There is a principle of law to the effect that every member of a conspiracy is responsible for every act committed by any other member of the conspiracy, whether he participates in the act or not. So, Mr. President, the officers of a union declaring and endeavoring to manage a strike, although they may exercise every power at their command to restrain all acts of violence, however such acts may be provoked, are held answerable. I might say in this connection that the courts have repeatedly said that in the case of strikes there are probably acts of violence upon both sides. There is the strike breaker on the one side and the striker on the other side, each actuated by powerful passions and each filled with bitterness toward the other, so that clashes are very likely to ensue; so that, however the officers of the organization may exert themselves in order to prevent violence, it will occur. They issue bulletins urging all their members to observe the law, to do nothing beyond the limits of what the law will permit, and they even punish and restrain their members who have been shown to have violated such instructions. No matter what they do, violence will ensue, in all reasonable probability; and if the court finds that a conspiracy exists they become answerable for every act committee by any of those who are alleged to be within the conspiracy. That is entirely unjust. So that suits are brought against the officers of the unions to recover damages from them for all injuries done, either to person or property, by anybody who is connected with the strike, upon the ground that it is done by one of the conspirators, and all conspirators are liable.

The bill presented by the majority seeks to relieve the officers of the unions engineering a strike from liability to respond in damages for any loss sustained by the acts of anyone unless done by their authority, either express or implied, or unless they have afterwards ratified the unlawful acts.

There are some other minor features of the legislation to which I may address myself as the debate proceeds.

EXHIBIT A

THE LABOR INJUNCTION—TOUCHSTONE OF OPINION

It is sometimes said that the nations of continental Europe have domesticated war. In the sphere of industrial warfare we and our English brethren have long ago domesticated the strike. Legislators and lawyers, whether English or American, are familiar with the efforts always made by each party, when a strike is in progress, to win the final decision. The employer tries to keep his plant running with the help of all the nonunion labor he can assemble. The strikers, by every device which ingenuity suggests, strive to induce workers to quit and to dissuade would-be workers from enlisting. There is apt to be lawlessness on both sides, more particularly on the side of the strikers. They are more numerous. The responsibility of the individual is more difficult to fix. They are persuaded that for them it is a life-and-death struggle. Defeat, they think, means for them industrial death. From their point of view the strike breaker is not merely a formidable industrial competitor. He is committing a social offense against his class. Any group of people with class consciousness can be counted upon to show bitter resentment against the man who ought, they think, to be with them and is in fact working against them. It requires tremendous self-control in such a situation to keep bitterness from expressing itself in violence.

The thing called picketing may accordingly be regarded as much more than an effort to persuade or intimidate nonunion workers. It may be conceived of as the protective action of a great social group who feel outraged at what seems to them the betrayal of their class.

In a community which so conceives of it, picketing is not a thing to be stopped by injunction. It is rather a thing to be domesticated along with the strike. Attending at or near the plant or near the nonunion man's house, for the purpose of persuading him to abstain from working, becomes a normal and inevitable course of conduct. If you object that such conduct may easily lead to violence, the answer will be made to you that the administration of criminal law must in that event be relied upon for protection.

When you observe attentively what is going on in a given community you will find it possible to decide whether in that community picketing has come to be recognized as the self-protection of a social class in strike time or is still generally regarded as something which can successfully be outlawed in the warfare between employer and employee. I suggest that it is in this connection that you will find an instructive contract between the English industrial situation and ours. If you read the trades disputes act, you will find in section 2 (see p. 535) a definite statutory declaration of the legality of some of the very things from which the striking shopmen were enjoined 18 months ago by the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. This means that in England picketing has been recognized as inevitable class self-protection, while with us it is still treated as a preventable offense against the rules of industrial war.

A further study of the act will show you that our British brethren have also declared that acts done by agreement or combination in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute are not actionable unless they are such as to be actionable in the absence of agreement or combination. In other words, actionable conspiracy in such cases no longer includes conspiracy to do things in themselves lawful. You will not fail to note, however, that, while Parliament was making these declarations, it put additional teeth into the conspiracy and protection of property act by prescribing fine and imprisonment after summary conviction for those who use violence toward a worker or his family or indulge in threats or in disorder or beset the house of a worker or follow him through the streets. In other words, our British friends have come to recognize peaceable picketing as a legitimate concomitant of a strike, but have trained the guns of their criminal procedure upon conduct which threatens breach of the peace or invasion of private right. What they have thus domesticated we still seek to enjoin.

When you mark this contrast you will be led to review our own industrial history during the last 35 years. You will begin with 1888, when a State court first issued an injunction is a labor case. You will pass to 1891, when the Federal courts first entered this field. Then you will note the frequent recurrence of Federal injunctions until to-day such injunctions have become a recognized exercise of the Federal equity power.

I was led recently to make such a review of our industrial history by my desire to account for the growing bitterness of organized labor toward the Federal courts. In the Senate one quickly becomes aware of the existence throughout the country of a sentiment on this subject which, if unchecked, may easily develop into a revolutionary sentiment. I accordingly addressed a letter to every United States district attorney asking him to secure from the clerk's office in his district a copy of all such injunction orders made by the United States court in his district during the last few years. Courteous attention to my request has supplied me with a most interesting mass of material. The study of these orders discloses an evolution mildly comparable with the growth of the corporate mortgage. The injunction orders have become more and more comprehensive and far-reaching in their provisions, until they culminate in the shopmen's injunction order already referred to. Every thoughtful citizen who has not already done so should read that order and meditate upon its significance. In so doing he should have in mind that during the shopmen's strike in 1922 nearly every one of the 261 "Class I" railroads and a number of short-line railroads applied for injunctions in the various Federal courts. No applications were denied. In all nearly 300 were issued.

Naturally enough, during the past two decades there have been bitter protests from the ranks of labor. To the striker it seems like tyranny to find such vast power exercised—not by a jury of one's neighbors, but by a single official who is not elected but appointed, and that for life, and whose commission comes from a distant and little understood source. The protests have taken every conceivable form. They include a suggested act of Congress to take away the jurisdiction to issue injunctions except to protect tangible property, and a proposed amendment of the Constitution framed to make Federal judges elective. Whether the so-called Caraway Act should be regarded as a protest emanating from organized labor I do not know. It is, at any rate, a manifestation of the same tendency.

Much of the protest is intemperate and unintelligent. Many of the proposals are short-sighted and unwise. The friends of organized labor who criticize the Federal judges for lack of the social instinct often themselves lack the insight necessary to a complete understanding of the problem. As long as the enlightened sense of the community fails to recognize the difference between the self-protection of an industrial class and mere wanton conspiracy to injure property and business, just so long judges who have power in their hands are likely to use it when urged thereto by the owners of the property and the business or by the official representative of the Government of which the judges are themselves a part. The problem is not primarily the problem of changing the point of view of Federal judges but of determining what the community attitude toward organized labor is going to be.

In the last analysis the attitude of the community will be determined by the workers themselves. If their uncoerced judgment is favorable to organization and collective action as the surest guaranty of industrial welfare, then the sentiment of the community—your sentiment and mine—will settle down to an acceptance of that view. If the persistent judgment of a decisive majority of the individual workers were to be that social development can best be pursued through unorganized effort, then the unions would lose their reason for existing. In England the sentiment of the workers has definitely crystallized in favor of organization and this fact has determined the thought and action of the whole community. The trades disputes act is the result. We, on the other hand, are experiencing the pangs incident to indecision; and unhappily we are placing upon our Federal courts the nonjudicial duty of maintaining the negative side of the dispute while organized labor maintains the affirmative.

One incident of the struggle of a community to determine its attitude toward organized labor is the constantly recurring dispute over the legality or illegality of a sympathetic strike or secondary boycott. In a community where in any field of activity there is a fairly divided public sentiment between closed and open shop, the union will often strive to build itself up by encouraging union men to refuse to work upon the same job with nonunion men. By this means it is hoped that the employer will be forced to employ union men, thus ultimately forcing the individual worker to join the union as a condition of getting employment. In a community where union sentiment is universal, pressure of this sort on the part of the union becomes merely a measure of self-protection. Accordingly the trades disputes act declares in effect that it is not actionable (in such a case as just suggested) to induce union men to quit the service of the employer or to press the employer to discharge his nonunion men, or to force an owner to break his contract with an open-shop contractor. With us, since public opinion is not yet settled, such conduct is still regarded as actionable. It is an unjustifiable effort of the union to maneuver itself into a stronger position than is warranted by the sentiment of the community. In such cases organized labor has only itself to blame if its attempt to gain a tactical advantage is met by an application for an injunction. Wherever organized labor has failed to create an overwhelming sentiment for the closed shop it can not in the absence of such a sentiment successfully do the things which otherwise public opinion would approve.

Difficult as is the duty which we have forced upon our Federal judges, their problem has, of course, been complicated by the necessity of considering what conduct is and what is not, a direct interference with interstate commerce or a violation of some Federal statute. Less than a month ago the Supreme Court (in United Leather Workers Union v. Herkert & Meisel Trunk Co.) decided, 6 justices to 3, that picketing to prevent the manufacture of goods which, if manufactured, would have been shipped in interstate commerce was not a conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce within the antitrust act. Any other decision would have subjected to Federal jurisdiction every strike in every factory the product of which was destined to swell the volume of interstate commerce. But back of the decision upon this jurisdictional ground looms the vital question—shall we persist in compelling the United States courts to take up the shock of our industrial warfare?

Respect for the courts is not the least valuable part of our English inheritance. Under such a system of government as ours the maintenance of well-nigh universal confidence in the judiciary is pretty nearly essential to national safety. Is it not worth our while to place elsewhere than upon our Federal judges the burden of solving for us our legislative and executive problems?

To maintain such confidence must we not confine the courts to the sphere in which the creators of our constitutional system intended them to live and move and have their being?

"YELLOW-DOG" CONTRACTS CONDEMNED BY EXPERTS

FOREWORD

When workers seeking a job are told to sign an agreement not to join a union before they are put on the pay roll, this condition is called a "yellow-dog" contract. Workers who accept such conditions give up their legal and economic rights because those dependent on them have to be fed and clothed.

To get money for these immediate necessities they must forego their right to plan and order their own lives, that is, the right to join with fellow workers to deal with common problems collectively. Wage earners, like all other groups of citizens, are expected to assume responsibility for their own progress. Persons who neglect opportunities to keep step with progress retard social advancement and may even become public wards.

A single wage earner is unable to make an advantageous contract with his employer. Acting jointly with other wage earners they can meet their employers on an equal footing and negotiate mutually satisfactory contracts. Employers who are unwilling to give their employees a fair chance to make progress require them to sign "yellow-dog" contracts.

When there is evidence of efforts to promote the organization of a union among workers who have signed "yellow-dog" contracts, employers usually apply to the courts for injunctions enjoining union activities. Thus the full force of government is put behind contracts which take advantage of the necessities of workers and these workers are denied the right to do things which the law regards as legal and which society regards as necessary and constructive.

Clearly, "yellow-dog" contracts and their enforcement by injunctions are in conflict with American principles of liberty and with orderly social progress.

Labor believes that such contracts should not be actionable. Our position is supported by many lawyers and experts who believe that law should be an effective social instrument. To be such an instrument, law must be something more than a mechanical application of precedents—it must be the application of principles of human justice to specific conditions and problems.

Quotations from authorities in different fields have been compiled for the ready use of wage earners studying this problem.

WM. GREEN,
President American Federation of Labor.

CONDEMNED BY EXPERTS

Theodore Roosevelt: "It is all wrong to use the injunction to prevent the entirely proper and legitimate actions of labor organizations in their struggle for industrial betterment, or under the guise of protecting property rights unwarrantably to invade the fundamental rights of the individual. It is futile to concede, as we all do, the right and necessity of organized effort on the part of wage earners and yet by injunctive process to forbid peaceable action to accomplish the lawful objects for which they are organized and upon which their success depends." (42 CONG. RECORD 1347–1348 (1908).)

William Howard Taft: "They [trade unions] were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was nevertheless unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers opportunity to deal on equality with their employer." (American Foundries v. Tri-City Council (257 U. S. 184–209).)

Woodrow Wilson: "Governments must recognize the right of men collectively to bargain for humane objects that have at their base the mutual protection and welfare of those engaged in all industries. Labor must not be longer treated as a commodity. It must be regarded as the activity of human beings, possessed of deep yearnings and desires. The business man gives his best thought to the repair and replenishment of his machinery so that its usefulness will not be impaired and its power to produce may always be at its height and kept in full vigor and motion. No less regard ought to be paid to the human machine which, after all, propels the machinery of the world and is the great dynamic force that lies back of all industry and progress." (From message communicated to both Houses of Congress at the beginning of the 66th Cong.)

Charles Evans Hughes: "I trust there will be no more struggles in futile opposition to the right of collective bargaining on the part of employees. The recognition of the right of representation and the prompt hearing of grievances provide the open doors to reasonable and just settlements." (From address before the Institute of Arts and Sciences, Columbia University, November 30, 1918.)

"Notwithstanding the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States that the so-called 'yellow-dog' contract is legal, the commission is of the opinion that it is a source of economic irritation and is no more justifiable than any other form of contract which debars the individual from employment solely because of membership or nonmembership in any organization. The right of an employer to discharge for disloyalty, dishonesty, and incompetency or other unlawful conduct should not be abridged, but he should not be permitted to blacklist a discharged laborer for any other reason than disloyalty, dishonesty, or unlawful conduct." (Report of United States Coal Commission, 1925, pt. 1, p. 179.)

"We recommend that such destructive labor policies as the use of spies, the use of deputy sheriffs as paid company guards, house leases which prevent free access and exit, and individual contracts which are not free-will contracts be abolished." (Summary of recommendations, September 14, 1923, United States Coal Commission in Bituminous Coal Mining. Government Printing Office, 1925.)

"The individual contract is closely tied up with the suppression of civil liberties. It has been used as a basis for securing injunctions against the attempts to organize the field by any means whatsoever. It has also been used as a basis for claiming damages from the United States Workers." (Report of the United States Coal Commission on Labor Relations in Bituminous Mining. Government Printing Office, 1925.)

"* * * When an applicant for work is compelled to sign a contract pledging himself against affiliation with a union, or when a union man is refused employment or discharged merely on the ground of union membership, the employer is using coercive methods and is violating the fundamental principle of an open shop. * * *" (Federal Council of the Churches of Christ of America, press release, December, 1920.)

"* * * Religion teaches the laboring man and the artisan to carry out honestly and fairly all equitable agreements freely arranged. * * * By treating the laborer first of all as a man the employer will make him a better workingman; by respecting his own moral dignity as a man the laborer will compel the respect of his employer and of the community." (From pastoral letter of Catholic archbishops and bishops in the United States, 1920.)

Elihu Root: "* * * The individualism which was the formula of reform in the early nineteenth century was democracy's reaction against the law and custom that made the status to which men were born the controlling factor in their lives.

"It was an assertion of each freeman's right to order his own life according to his own pleasure and power, unrestrained by those class limitations which had long determined individual status. The instrument through which democracy was to exercise its newly asserted power was freedom of individual contract, and the method by which the world's work was to be carried on in lieu of class subjection and class domination was to be the give and take of industrial demand and supply.

"Now, however, the power of organization has massed both capital and labor in such vast operations that in many directions, affecting great bodies of people, the right of contract can no longer be at once individual and free. In the great massed industries the free give and take of industrial demands and supply does not apply to the individual. Nor does the right of free contract protect the individual under those conditions of complicated interdependence which make so large a part of the community dependent for their food, their clothing, their health, and means of continuing life itself upon the service of a multitude of people with whom they have no direct relations whatever, contract or otherwise. Accordingly, democracy turns again to government to furnish by law the protection which the individual can no longer secure through his freedom of contract and to compel the vast multitude on whose cooperation all of us are dependent to do their necessary part in the life of the community. * * *." (Public Service by the Bar, from address to American Bar Association, 1916.)

Roscoe Pound, dean Harvard Law School: "The attitude of many of our courts on the subject of liberty of contract is so certain to be misapprehended, is so out of the range of ordinary understanding, the decisions themselves are so academic and so artificial in their reasoning, that they can not fail to engender such feelings. (Above statement made in commenting on workmen's growing distrust of the courts.) Thus, those decisions do an injury beyond the failure of a few acts. These acts can be replaced as legislatures learn how to comply with the letter of the decisions and to evade the spirit of them. But the lost respect for courts and law can not be replaced. The evil of those cases will live after them in impaired authority of the courts long after the decisions themselves are forgotten." (Liberty of Contract, Yale Law Journal, May, 1909.)

Felix Frankfurter, Harvard Law School: "* * * The rapidly increasing use of the so-called 'yellow-dog' contracts has grown into a serious threat to the very existence of labor unions. In view of the inequitable conditions that surround the formation of such agreements and the unfair division of their obligation, to appeal to equity for their enforcement is to disregard the fundamentally ethical foundations of courts of chancery. * * *." (The Labor Injunctions, Felix Frankfurter and Nathan Greene.)

Francis B. Sayre, Harvard Law School: "The signs are all about us that labor groups throughout the country are smarting with a sense of injustice at the hands of the courts. * * * The situation calls for constructive efforts to meet the growing danger, not only on the part of labor leaders but on the part of all who believe in American law and American traditions."

* * * * * * *

"Seizing upon the Hitchman decision, employers have found an effective way to prevent peaceful and otherwise lawful union activities by requiring present or prospective employees as the price of employment to sign individual contracts against joining any union. Thus intrenched they are in a position to defy every effort on the part of the unions to unionize their plants, and by a system of strategic individual contracts with their employees they are able in many cases to prevent unions entering into a competitive struggle with them over the price of labor. That courts would refuse in fields other than labor law to allow competition to be effectually stifled by means of strategic contracts with third parties seems clear." (Labor and the Courts, Yale Law Journal, March, 1930.)

Donald R. Richberg, attorney, Railway Shop Trades Unions: "It is a waste of time to criticize judges who chatter about equality of right and liberty of contract between a billion-dollar corporation and a man looking for a job. When judges solemnly announce that society is more interested in preserving the freedom of one man to injure himself and his coworkers than in preserving the freedom of a hundred thousand men to promote their common interests it is unnecessary to argue that the lawmakers do not know what they are talking about. That fact is obvious. It is, however, worth while to point out the misdirection of persistent efforts to combat natural laws of human conduct with artificial laws.

"* * * And it is apparent that employees sign 'yellow dog' contracts only because they feel compelled to do so. No man voluntarily puts his head in a noose and then hands the rope to his adversary with the idea that he has improved his chance of winning the contest. If courts will not recognize the facts, and hold that the employer acts illegally when he interferes with the employee's natural rights to associate with his fellow men and thus to designate representatives to advance their common interests, then it is time to have the legislatures write this law and to make it binding on the courts." (From address delivered at the joint conference on injunctions in labor disputes in Pennsylvania, Labor Institute, March 16, 1930.)

WILLIAM E. BORAH, United States Senator from Idaho: "* * * I appreciate, too, the interest which the employee has in this kind of contract. It is a vital interest and it is an interest which can not be measured at all times in dollars and cents. It sometimes means home and family and economic freedom. I appreciate also the interest which organized labor has in this contract, because if it were universally applied and carried to its logical conclusion union labor would be at an end in the United States.

"But over and above these interests, transcending them in importance, is the interest of the public, of the State, and of the National Government. Can there be anything of more concern to the State, to the Government, to the public generally than that which is calculated to undermine, destroy or build up, to render fit or unfit for citizenship men and women who toil? Is not the public, the State, the National Government interested in striking down, as contrary to public policy, as at war with the public welfare, all those overreaching contracts which rob those who work of the discretion, of the liberty of choice as to how they shall conduct themselves so long as they conduct themselves lawfully in their interests?" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 29, 1930, p. 8223.)

ROBERT F. WAGNER, United States Senator from New York: "To the worker organization means bargaining power, security, self-respect. So long as he continues unorganized he must accept terms of employment just as they are tendered. It is only through organization that he achieves the power to withhold that which he sells. The arrangement known as the antiunion or 'yellow-dog' contract is ordinarily an undertaking on the part of the employee that he will continue to remain in the same helpless condition which compelled him to make the 'yellow-dog' promise in the first instance." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 30, 1930, p. 8338.)

KENNETH MCKELLAR, United States Senator from Tennessee: "The 'yellow-dog' contract is unconscionable, and it is doubtful if any court should have ever upheld it." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 30, 1930, p. 8341.)

FELIX HEBERT, United States Senator from Rhode Island:

"Mr. JOHNSON. Let me inquire of the Senator, does he approve that contract?

"Mr. HEBERT. I doubt very much whether I should be disposed to sign one myself.

"Mr. JOHNSON. Of course, the Senator would not sign it unless behind him was a specter of poverty and in front of him the hunger of his family. Would he?

"Mr. HEBERT. Even then I should be disposed not to sign it * * *." (From the Senate debate, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 1, 1930, p. 8405.)

GEORGE W. NORRIS, United States Senator from Nebraska: "The 'yellow-dog' contract, in my judgment, is void for three reasons: First, it is without any consideration; second, it is signed under coercion; third, it violates public policy." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 2, 1930, p. 8475.)

HENRY F. ASHURST, United States Senator from Arizona: "In this morning of the twentieth century, when mankind is asking for a larger degree of liberty, the 'yellow-dog' decision is a rank injustice; it is an angry scar upon American jurisprudence." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 5, 1930, p. 8624.)

HIRAM JOHNSON, United States Senator from California: "Words utterly fail me in characterization of contracts such as that. I care not whether they have been enforced by one court or another. Legally, they are void as against public policy; socially, they are wicked and destructive of ordinary human relations; economically, they are unsound as resting upon necessity on the one side and coercion on the other; and morally, sir, they are infamous, denying fundamental rights and disrupting the dearest human associations." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 7, 1930, p. 8787.)

Morris L. Cooke, consulting engineer: "I believe that individual contracts for employment of this kind are unsound because—

"(a) They do not make for efficiency—either individual or collective;

"(b) They imply the absence of that groundwork of good will and mutual trust such as are inherent in properly conducted industry;

"(c) They do not permit that freedom of action for the individual requisite alike for his conduct and his growth in the employee-employer relationship;

"(d) They overemphasize the industrial aspects of the life of the individual citizen to the detriment of the State." (Interborough Brief.)

John R. Commons, University of Wisconsin: "No adequate argument can be made why such an injunction should lie against a labor union but not against a church or a lodge. * * * They (labor unions) are private organizations, but both in court decisions and in statutes they have been recognized as being not only lawful but useful to society. That they should now be virtually outlawed is unthinkable. Such a step inevitably leads to giving the employer complete control over the entire life of his employees—an intolerable condition, contrary to all our concepts of individual freedom." (Interborough Brief.)

Paul F. Brissenden, Columbia University: "It is also evident, I believe, that the 'yellow-dog' contract itself is an artificial protection that precludes the possibility of such an institutional rivalry in a free field. It should no more be tolerated than we would tolerate the insistence by a union that the employer of its members, on pain of their refusal to continue working for him, withdraw from or refrain from joining some particular employers' association. Such a contract, being against public policy, should be forbidden." (Interborough brief.)

Sumner H. Slichter, Cornell University: "* * * In its economic effects this contract appears to require that the workman, in order to sell his services, must also sell his right to improve his future bargaining status by joining a trade-union. The law has long been familiar with certain things which may not be bought and sold, with certain restrictive covenants on one's future freedom of action, which are denied jural recognition. * * * In my judgment, there are three outstanding economic reasons why wage earners should not be permitted to barter away the right of belonging to a trade-union:

"In the first place, the right of the worker to improve his future bargaining position involves more than merely his opportunity to raise his wages. It involves his ability to feed and clothe his family and to educate his children.

"In the second place, it is unwise to permit workmen to sell their freedom to join trade-unions because there is great disparity in bargaining power between individual wage-earners and employers.

* * * * * * *

"The third economic reason why it should be unfortunate to permit wage earners to barter away their right to join trade-unions arises from the fact that unions perform functions which are of substantial value to the community." (Interborough brief.)

Ordway Tead, editorial staff, Harpers Publishing Co.: "* * * Equality of bargaining power is in the company's interest because only as the labor contract is entered into freely and is felt by the parties in interest to be satisfactory and fair will the resulting work attitude and work performance be of a character that is productive and safe. Hence any feature of the labor contract, as in the Interborough Rapid Transit contract with its provision against labor-union affiliation, represents a very definite and successful attempt to prevent equality of bargaining power from prevailing. Such a contract thus operates both against the public interest and against the interest of good management as the phrase is understood in well-managed corporations to-day." (Interborough brief.)

Horace M. Kallen, Harvard University: "The contract itself is vicious. It is always signed under coercion. It requires of the worker not only to give an honest day's work for an honest day's pay, it compels him also to give up his right to seek such help as he may lawfully find effective to make sure that it is an honest day's pay. It requires him to surrender his constitutional freedom of association. It cuts him off from his livelihood if he exercises this freedom * * *. In fact, the sign-on-the-dotted-line contract is not only unconstitutional but a fraud. It imposes a practical peonage on people who would otherwise suffer great hardships if they did not sign * * *." (Interborough Brief.)

John A. Fitch, New York School of Social Work: "* * * The employee is free at the outset to sign or not to sign the contract, which means that he is free to accept or reject employment with the Interborough if it is offered. As a practical matter, however, considerations of physical need may at any time, in an overstocked labor market, make the exercise of such freedom impossible. When nonmembership in a trade union is made a condition of employment the employee is frequently subject to a compulsion as real and effective as if physical force were used.

"It is my belief that such contracts should be outlawed as against sound public policy." (Interborough Brief.)

Edwin R. A. Seligman, Cornell University: "* * * The essence of our modern economic life is freedom, freedom to contract, freedom to act; and this freedom attaches to both parties of the contract, the employer and the employee. The present contract leaves the freedom of the employer unimpaired; it even, as we have pointed out, increases, if possible, that freedom: On the other hand it restricts in notable respects, actually, if not technically, the freedom of the employee. This disparity of conditions is of the utmost consequence. The world has not yet succeeded in finding a solution for the so-called labor problem. Whatever that solution may be, both history and philosophy conspire to advise against the adoption of any policy which will render the solution more difficult and perhaps impossible. The conditions of this contract seem to the affiant clearly to fall within the latter category." (Interborough Brief.)

PROPOSED FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senate, I invite the attention of the Members present to a subject other than the unfinished business.

It happens that to-day is the thirteenth anniversary of the first provision for a tax upon gasoline for the purpose of building and maintaining the highway system in this country. This tax was first proposed and adopted in the State of Oregon. Subsequently all the States of the Union have, I believe, adopted some form of tax upon gasoline for the purpose of providing road funds.

The matter is one of great public importance. My attention has been drawn to the subject at this time because the Secretary of the Treasury, in a recent appearance before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, proposed that the Federal Government also enact a tax of 1 cent per gallon upon gasoline. It is estimated that this tax will produce $165,000,000 annually for the Federal Treasury.

This matter is of such importance that I ask the Senate's consideration of it for just a moment in advance of the consideration of the revenue bill.

It is asserted that the maximum revenue is produced by a tax of 3 or 4 cents per gallon. Many of the State taxes are now in excess of that amount. The United States heretofore has never attempted to lay a tax upon gasoline for the production of Federal revenue. In the proposal of the Secretary there is, therefore, a novel element, as it involves the invasion of a tax field heretofore occupied exclusively by the States.

I shall not now detain the Senate to comment in detail upon the wisdom or unwisdom of the Federal invasion of that field of taxation. It will appear, however, to all that the wisdom of the step is most doubtful. It means that the Federal Government will engage in a competitive race with the States in seeking to obtain revenue from a source which heretofore the States have alone enjoyed. It means the imposition of an additional tax upon the automobile owners of America, and it means probably such an increase of tax that the maximum yield will not be had either for the United States or for the several States.

The matter is of especial interest now because there is before the Senate a proposal by the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], which, I understand, he will offer as an amendment to the agricultural supply bill; by that proposal there would be appropriated approximately $135,000,000 to be employed in the construction of highways without the necessity of contribution or matching by the various States.

It is almost ironical that the agencies of the Federal Government should consider the invasion of a tax field now enjoyed by the States upon a basis that would produce $165,000,000, and at the same time contemplate the appropriation of about $135,000,000 to the States under the guise of relief for unemployment. It means merely that we take money from a State source and then give it back to the States, and perhaps then claim that we have made a generous contribution by so doing.

I shall at the proper time have something further to say with respect to this matter. I have claimed the Senate's attention to this question at this time in order that I may ask to have printed in the RECORD certain data which I think will be most revealing.

I send to the desk an estimate of tax burden by States in case the proposal made before the House Ways and Means Committee shall be adopted by Congress. This estimate is prepared by the American Automobile Association, and it discloses the extent to which this tax would be a burden upon the automobile owners of the different States of the Union.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. STEIWER. I do.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to state that I have no doubt in regard to the wisdom of enacting this legislation. I am absolutely opposed to it. The Senator says that is a matter to be determined later. I think the States have been taxed to the full limit by the State authorities in the way of gasoline taxes and taxes on automobiles. I believe it would be very unfortunate to enact at this time legislation imposing a greater and an increased burden upon the users of automobiles, and I am unequivocally opposed to it. It is not a matter about the wisdom of which there is any doubt in my mind.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I had not intended at this time to enter into an expression of my own views of this tax; but, inasmuch as the suggestion of opposition comes from the Senator from Florida, I will say that in due time I also expect to voice my most resolute opposition to this proposition. The people of the State of Florida may well be opposed to it. Their present tax is 7 cents per gallon. The imposition of this Federal tax would make the tax 8 cents per gallon, and I understand that in one city in the State of Florida there is an additional tax of 1 cent per gallon, and that the total tax in that State therefore would be substantially a 75 per cent sales tax upon an essential commodity.

I can assure the Senator from Florida that he will not be alone in his opposition.

I now ask that the following compilation of costs to the car owners of the several States appear at this place in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. STEIWER. The revenue possibilities from taxing the sale of gasoline are, of course, based upon two things: First, the development and use of the automobile; and, second, upon the construction and maintenance of the highways. The first has been accomplished by private initiative. The Federal Government has made a substantial contribution toward the building of highways, but a much greater contribution has been made by the States; the States having furnished the roads have thus made the revenues possible. There is but little justification from the moral standpoint of the invasion by the Federal Government of this State-created source of revenue.

Without detaining the Senate further in connection with this matter, I desire to call attention to a statement just issued by the American Automobile Association. This statement is marked for release to-day, and it discloses in a most effectual way the enormous burden that would come to the automobile users of the United States if the proposal of the Secretary of the Treasury should be enacted into law. I ask unanimous consent that this statement may also appear in connection with what I am saying at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25.—The threat of a 33 per cent boost in the Nation's $500,000,000 a year gasoline-tax bill, in the form of a Federal levy of 1 cent per gallon, looms as a birthday gift to motorists on the thirteenth anniversary of this form of taxation.

This statement was made to-day by the American Automobile Association, which pointed out that the gasoline tax, first levied at the rate of 1 cent per gallon in Oregon on February 25, 1919, has spread to every State, with the average rate nearly 4 cents per gallon.

Pointing out that motorists have paid approximately $2,500,000,000 in gasoline taxes since it was first levied, Thomas P. Henry, of Detroit, Mich., president of the national motoring body, declared that the evils that have crept into this taxing system are without parallel in the whole history of taxation.

"The tax was conceived as one of the most equitable forms in existence," said Mr. Henry, "in that the users of the highways were to pay for the building of roads in proportion to their use of the roads. But what do we find on the thirteenth anniversay of the tax?

"We find the tax in effect in the 48 States and the District of Columbia, and in hundreds of counties and municipalities that have superimposed local taxes on the top-heavy State levy.

"We find rates ranging from 2 cents per gallon in some States to 7 cents in Tennessee and Florida, with a 1-cent levy at Pensacola, in the latter State, making the rate 8 cents per gallon.

"We find the bootlegger and the racketeer waxing rich at the expense of motorists and profiting to the extent of approximately $60,000,000 a year through wholesale evasions of the tax.

"We find the States diverting around $20,000,000 a year from the tax receipts to schools, port development, charitable and penal institutions, for the development of water supplies, and for unemployment relief.

"And at the moment we find the Federal Government threatening to enter a field that is already overexploited by the State, the county, and the city, through the levy of a Federal tax of 1 cent per gallon, which it is estimated would cost motorists $165,000,000 a year. This would bring the tax in Pensacola, Fla., for example, to 9 cents per gallon, or equivalent to a 75 per cent sales tax on a commodity selling for 12 cents per gallon without the tax. Surely it can be said that the gasoline tax is no longer equitable." Mr. Henry's statement continues:

"If a Federal gasoline levy comes as an equitable part of a general tax on manufactures, the motorists will not quarrel, highly burdened thought they are. To impose a special sales tax on gasoline, however, would be highly inequitable and hark back to the discrimination that the Ways and Means Committee has made a praiseworthy effort to avoid.

"Such a policy would hasten the breakdown of the gas-tax structure. A special Government impost for general purposes would go far to establish 'diversion' as a principle and divorce this tax from road use, its original justification.

"It would jeopardize hundreds of millions of dollars in road bonds issued by the States and which are contingent on future gasoline-tax collections by the States.

"It would greatly accelerate the evasion evil, which is already depriving the States of much revenue and adding greatly to the cost of administration.

"It would inaugurate a serious battle between the States and the Federal Government in their respective spheres of taxation and inevitably lead to retaliation in other tax fields."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to aid in the establishment of agricultural-credit corporations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 6310. An act to amend section 1709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. 1083), and section 304 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921 (42 Stat. 24);

H. R. 7119. An act to authorize the modification of the boundary line between the Panama Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9349. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes;

H. R. 9393. An act to increase passport fees, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 182. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation to defray the expenses of participation by the United States Government in the Second Polar Year Program, August 1, 1932, to August 31, 1933.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 9349. An act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. R. 6310. An act to amend section 1709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stat. 1083), and section 304 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921 (42 Stat. 24);

H. R. 7119. An act to authorize the modification of the boundary line between the Panama Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9393. An act to increase passport fees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

H. J. Res. 182. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation to defray the expenses of participation by the United States Government in the Second Polar Year Program, August 1, 1932, to August 31, 1933; to the calendar.

THE WALES ISLAND PACKING CO. v. THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 61)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims transmitting, pursuant to a resolution of the Senate and in accordance with law, copies of the special findings of fact and opinion of the court in the cause of the Wales Island Packing Co. v. The United States, which (with the accompanying papers) was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

LEMUEL SIMPSON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 315) for the relief of Lemuel Simpson, which was, on page 1, line 11, after the word "Cavalry," to insert "on the 20th day of February, 1862."

Mr. HAWES. I move that the amendment of the House of Representatives be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate several messages from the President of the United States submitting a treaty and nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

PROPOSED ANTI-INJUNCTION LEGISLATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 935) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will proceed to read the bill and state the first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Dale	Kean	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Kendrick	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dickinson	Keyes	Shipstead
Barbour	Dill	King	Smith
Bingham	Fess	La Follette	Smoot
Black	Fletcher	Lewis	Steiwer
Blaine	Frazier	Logan	Stephens
Borah	George	Long	Thomas, Idaho
Bratton	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Okla.
Brookhart	Glenn	McNary	Townsend
Broussard	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulkley	Gore	Morrison	Tydings
Bulow	Hale	Moses	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Neely	Wagner
Capper	Hastings	Norbeck	Walcott
Caraway	Hatfield	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Carey	Hawes	Nye	Walsh, Mont.
Connally	Hayden	Oddie	Watson
Coolidge	Hebert	Patterson	Wheeler
Copeland	Howell	Pittman	White
Costigan	Hull	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island, I want to ask him to look at the language on the bottom of page 9 of the substitute, particularly that part beginning in line 19. It seems to me that in perfecting the substitute there ought to be some change made in the language of that sentence. It now reads:

> Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days, and shall not be extended if, in the judgment of the court, unjustifiable delay is sought by complainant.

That is all right. Then it proceeds:

> And shall become void at the expiration of said five days, unless extended, but not for more than five days at any one time, by order of the court for good cause shown.

I think what the Senator means probably is that the order shall not be extended if unjustifiable delay is sought, and shall not be extended for more than five days at any one time. I believe that the section would be improved if it were stated in that way.

Mr. HEBERT. I observe the Senator is reading from the minority substitute.

Mr. REED. Yes; the sentence beginning in line 19, page 9. I am in full agreement with the purpose of the sentence, and, of course, it is substantially the same as that in the majority bill.

Mr. HEBERT. In the majority bill, may I say, there is no provision for an extension. The substitute provides that in no event shall the extension continue for a longer period than five days in the first instance, and then it may be extended, but not for longer than five days at any one time. That is the purpose of the clause.

Mr. REED. With that I am in full agreement; but I think the language is obscure.

Mr. HEBERT. I have no pride of authorship about it.

Mr. REED. I would like to submit to the Senator for reading at his leisure the redraft I have made of it, and then later on, if he agrees with me, he may propose the change.

Mr. HEBERT. I will be very glad to take the matter up and consider it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will have his amendment printed, so that we may consider it.

Mr. REED. I will be glad to. I will state it now.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. REED. My suggestion would be to strike out, on page 9, line 23, beginning after the word "complainant," everything from there down to the end of the sentence and replace it with these words: "and shall not be extended for more than five days at any one time." That expresses the same intention, I think, but I think it expresses it better.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think the Senator should go back a little further. It provides that it "shall not be extended if, in the judgment of the court, unjustifiable delay is sought by complainant." That is to say, in order to refuse it, the judge must find that the complainant is seeking unjustifiable delay. It throws the burden on the wrong side. If a party seeks a continuance, he should show why he wants the continuance, and make clear to the court that the continuance is necessary. As it reads, the burden is thrown upon the other party to show that really what the party wants to do is to trifle with the court.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator is exactly right, and therefore I believe I would strike out the entire sentence beginning on line 19 and replace it with this sentence:

> Such a temporary restraining order shall not be effective for longer than five days, and shall not thereafter be extended unless in the judgment of the court the delay is justifiable, and shall not be extended for more than five days at any one time.

That is the end of the proposed insertion. I think we can well leave out the words "by order of the court for good cause shown," because it is obvious that if it is extended it will have to be by order of the court, and it is equally obvious that cause must be shown by the person applying for the extension.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, there are one or two Senators, one at least, I think, on each side, who desire to be heard in the general debate on the bill, and neither of them is ready to proceed this evening. I would be glad, if the Senator from Oregon desires, either to take up something else or to take a recess at this time until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 26, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 25 (legislative day of February 24), 1932

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

Watt H. Gragg, of North Carolina, to be United States marshal, middle district of North Carolina, to succeed Joseph John Jenkins, whose term expired January 11, 1932.

PROMOTION IN THE REGULAR ARMY

To be first lieutenant

Second Lieut. Russell Potter Reeder, jr., Infantry, from February 19, 1932.

CHAPLAIN

To be chaplain with the rank of major

Chaplain Albert Leslie Evans (captain), United States Army, from February 18, 1932.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

They that trust in the Lord are as Mount Zion, which can not be removed but abideth forever. Help us, O Lord, to set our conscience by the moral sense of God. As Thy law is so just, Thy love so bountiful, and Thy wisdom so infinite, may they command our unquestioned obedience and our full measure of devotion. Thou knowest us altogether, wherein we are weak and wherein we are strong. Lead us toward Thyself that our strength may grow. Oh wondrously sweet and helpful is the service inspired by Thy wisdom and blest by Thy grace. Continue to establish the ideals for which our fathers gave their lives and liberties. Bless our country; and may we build our very selves into the life and character of its splendid institutions. Help us in the solution of problems that perplex mind and heart, and bless our people everywhere with the bounties of Heaven's mercies. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to a bill of the following title:

S. 315. An act for the relief of Lemuel Simpson.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 22]

Andrews, N. Y.	Eaton, N. J.	Kurtz	Sabath
Beck	Erk	Lea	Sanders, N. Y.
Bloom	Freeman	Lewis	Selberling
Briggs	Garrett	McClintock, Ohio	Shannon
Britten	Griffin	McLaughlin	Sinclair
Brumm	Guyer	McLeod	Sullivan, Pa.
Buckbee	Haines	Mouser	Summers, Wash.
Carter, Calif.	Harlan	Nelson, Wis.	Temple
Cary	Hogg, W. Va.	Niedringhaus	Turpin
Chapman	Hooper	Norton, N. J.	Vestal
Cochran, Pa.	Houston	Palmisano	Vinson, Ky.
Collier	Hull, William E.	Parker, N. Y.	Weaver
Cooke	James	Peavey	Welsh, Pa.
Coyle	Johnson, Ill.	Perkins	White
Crowe	Johnson, Okla.	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Wyant
Curry	Kelly, Pa.	Reid, Ill.
Doutrich	Kendall	Romjue

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-five Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9203) to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes, or so much thereof as I may need.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would the gentleman from Maryland be willing to couple with that a request that I have five minutes to follow him?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request, that the gentleman from Massachusetts also have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that he may address the House for five minutes, and following that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to make this observation. Since these requests come from Members who have the same belief on the question, I think there should be an opportunity for those who disagree to be heard. I would like to address the House for five minutes myself.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And I ask that the gentleman from Texas may also have five minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I wish to couple with that that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MOORE] may have five minutes succeeding the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, there is unfinished business on the Speaker's desk, and I object to all these requests.

DEPARTMENTS OF STATE, COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the vote on the motion to recommit the bill (H. R. 9349) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute in explanation of the motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire just a minute to explain the purport of the pending motion. The department, the Budget Bureau, and the subcommittee all included in this bill sufficient money to provide tuberculosis wards in the institution at Springfield, Mo. The committee struck it out, and this motion is to restore the appropriation to the original amount recommended by the Budget Bureau and the subcommittee.

In brief here is the proposition: A vote for the motion to recommit is a vote for hospital accommodations for the treatment of men infected with active tuberculosis. A vote against the motion, on the other hand, may condemn many of these poor fellows to the ravages of an incurable disease. I trust the House will approve the recommendation of every medical authority consulted on the proposition and refuse to strike from the appropriation this much-needed facility for the treatment of these unfortunate men.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I couple with that request the unanimous-consent request to make an announcement for two minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. If that is going to be done without a chance to answer, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eleven Members, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

The question is on the motion to recommit. The noes have it, and the motion to recommit is rejected. The question now recurs on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. OLIVER of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 208

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My inquiry is as to whether, under the rules, a petition has been filed and is now at the Clerk's desk to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of a resolution submitting to the States a repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, let us go and sign it. Come on.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER. On the motion to recommit the bill H. R. 9349, offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] on Tuesday last, an automatic roll call was ordered because it developed that a quorum was not present. The division had been taken on the motion to recommit, and the vote on division was objected to upon the ground that there was no quorum present. My parliamentary inquiry is to ascertain why the automatic roll call on the motion to recommit is not in effect to-day?

The SPEAKER. Because the House adjourned, and this being a new legislative day, the vote on the motion to recommit is taken de novo.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BACHMANN. As I understand it, there is now a petition on the Speaker's desk to bring up House Joint Resolution 208, the purpose of the petition being to take this resolution away from the further consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary. My inquiry is with respect to section 4, Rule XXVII, relating to discharge of committees. This petition seeks to bring before the House for consideration House Joint Resolution 208, which was before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House. That committee considered the resolution and acted upon it. By a majority vote of that committee the resolution was amended so that it would be impossible for Congress or the States to authorize intoxicating liquor to be consumed on the premises where purchased. In other words, this amendment keeps the saloon outlawed. Another amendment was adopted by that committee, being the 7-year provision, requiring the ratification by the States within a period of seven years. The committee after these amendments had been adopted, after due consideration, voted by a vote of 14 to 9 against reporting the resolution favorably to the House. In other words, it made an adverse report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, the committee did not make an adverse report.

Mr. BACHMANN. The committee voted not to report it favorably. Then a motion was made to report it adversely, and that motion was laid on the table by a majority vote of the committee. As that resolution stands before the committee to-day, it is lying on the table with these two amendments. This petition, which I have examined, seeks to have the House consider House Joint Resolution 208. When the Members sign this petition is it understood that House Joint Resolution 208, as amended by the committee, will be considered by the House, or is it understood that House Joint Resolution 208, as originally referred to the committee without amendments, will be considered? Permit me to say also, before the Speaker answers the parliamentary inquiry, that this is the first time under this new rule that the question has been raised. It does not present the situation of a committee that has failed to take any action on a resolution or bill that was regularly referred to it by the House, but it presents a situation where the committee has considered it and has acted upon it by a majority vote of that committee. My inquiry is, If this petition is signed by 145 Members of the House, the House will vote on the consideration of House Joint Resolution 208, as amended by the committee, or as originally referred to that committee without amendments?

The SPEAKER. It is very plain under the rule that the motion to discharge, if agreed to, would bring out the joint resolution as originally introduced. The House has no knowledge of the statements made by the gentleman from West Virginia as to what happened in the Committee on the Judiciary. The only knowledge that the House has is that the House Joint Resolution 208 was introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Whatever petition is signed to bring the joint resolution out under the rule would have to be a petition to bring out the original resolution as sent to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that under the rules of the House that resolution was regularly referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee under the rules of the House had a right to amend it. That committee also had the right to lay it on the table.

The SPEAKER. Certainly they had that right; but the committee did not make a report to the House of Representatives as to its action thereon.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, is it not true that up to the time the petition is signed by the required number, the resolution is before the Committee on the Judiciary, which still has freedom of action if it wants to exercise it?

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not true that under the rule, when this matter comes before the House for consideration, amendments of any kind are in order at that time?

The SPEAKER. Yes. If the House takes it up for consideration, it will be considered under the rules of the House.

AGRICULTURAL-CREDIT CORPORATIONS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up a conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to aid in the establishment of agricultural-credit corporations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to aid in the establishment of agricultural-credit corporations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to make advances or loans to individuals, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the purpose of assisting in forming local agricultural-credit corporations, livestock-loan companies, or like organizations, or of increasing the capital stock of such corporations, companies or organizations qualified to do business with Federal intermediate credit banks, or to which such privileges may be extended.

"SEC. 2. (a) No loans shall be made to individual stockholders on the capital stock of, or to create or increase the capital stock of such corporation, company, or organization in an amount in excess of 75 per cent of the par value of the capital stock of such corporation, company, or organization owned by or proposed to be subscribed to by such individual.

"(b) No loan shall be made upon the capital stock of any corporation until the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that the financial structure of such corporation is sound and unimpaired and by him approved, nor shall any loan be made upon the capital stock of such corporation until the management of such company shall be made known to and approved by the Secretary, and the Secretary shall have the right at any time to declare the indebtedness to the Government that may be created hereunder due whenever in his judgment the financial structure of the corporation shall become so impaired or the management become so unsatisfactory as to jeopardize the interests of the Government.

"SEC. 3. No loan or advance shall be made to any individual upon the capital stock of or to create or increase the capital stock of any corporation, unless the paid-in capital stock of such corporation shall be at least $10,000.

"SEC. 4. To carry out the provisions of this resolution, including all expenses incurred thereunder, there are authorized to be appropriated, out of the unexpended balances of appropriations made to carry out the provisions of Public Resolution No. 112, Seventy-first Congress (46 Stat. 1032), as amended by the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and as amended by Public Resolution No. 120 (46 Stat. 1167), and out of the collections from loans made under Public Resolution No. 112, as so amended, a sum not exceeding $10,000,000, which sum shall be paid into a revolving fund. Not to exceed 2 per cent of such fund may be used for expenses of administration. All moneys received from time to time upon the repayment of any advance or loan made pursuant to this act, together with the interest, shall be paid into the revolving fund and shall thereafter be available for the purposes and in the manner hereinbefore provided."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to aid in the establishment of agricultural-credit corporations, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Under the House resolution the Secretary of Agriculture could not grant loans unless the individual desiring the loan submitted a credit statement to the Secretary showing that such individual was not indebted in excess of one-half the fair market value of his assets, nor unless the value of such individual's assets above his indebtedness was at least twice the value of the loan applied for; nor could any loan be made on the capital stock or to increase the capital stock of any corporation devoted mainly to the financing and/or sale of special products to farmers. Under the Senate amendment the loans were to be made under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture might prescribe. In the proposed substitute the language of the House resolution, above referred to, is omitted because deemed unnecessary in view of the power contained in section 1 of the House resolution and in the proposed substitute authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans under such regulations as he may prescribe.

Other than the change suggested above, the substitute agreed upon in conference is the same as the House resolution.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the report states very clearly what is involved. This is the measure which provided for the establishment of agricultural-credit corporations. The only change made in the House bill is that set out in the statement, to wit, the House bill contained a requirement for a credit statement. As this is covered by the provision that the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe the necessary qualifications for making the loan, the further House provision on this subject is unnecessary.

With this exception the conferees have agreed upon the bill as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry relative to the discharge rule that was being considered in the House. Clause 4, Rule XXVII, relative to the discharge rule, frequently contains the words "public bill or resolution." If 145 Members sign the petition to discharge the standing committee, in this instance the Committee on the Judiciary, does that mean that the resolution or public bill as indicated in that rule is the resolution or bill unamended by any action of the committee?

The SPEAKER. It certainly does. The Chair has so stated two or three times.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes; and pending that motion I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if we may come to some agreement relative to the time for general debate?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I suggest that we do not fix the time definitely to-day, but allow general debate to run through the day.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be divided equally between the gentleman from Indiana and myself, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9699, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, with Mr. HOWARD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit a request, which I hope my colleagues will grant. I know, of course, that it is customary in the consideration of appropriation bills for those explaining them to yield to interruptions and inquiries. I trust that the Members of the House will allow me to conclude with my statement before I am interrupted. I have a great number of requests for speeches under general debate. We are anxious, of course, to dispose of this bill at the earliest possible moment, and I submit to Members that probably we can do so to better advantage if we would withhold some of our inquiries in regard to the appropriations carried in the bill until we go under the 5-minute rule, and at that time members of the committee will be glad to yield to any inquiry and to make reply with reference to the appropriations.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. For how many days is it expected this bill will be under general debate?

Mr. BYRNS. I can not tell the gentleman. I would like to see general debate close to-morrow, and that is one reason for my request. I would like to finish in 30 or 40 minutes myself, and I can do so with an explanation of some features of this bill if I am permitted to go along without any interruptions.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman mean to say that Members must wait until each item is reached before they ask questions?

Mr. BYRNS. I did not say that; but I have asked the committee to do me the favor of not interrupting me until I finish my general statement.

Before I proceed with a discussion of this bill I want to refer briefly to a statement by our distinguished Secretary of War which appeared in the papers, in which he took my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], and myself somewhat to task because of certain statements we had made upon the floor of the House. I do not care to enter into any controversy with anyone with reference to that statement, but I do wish to say, in view of the fact that he claims we are trying to make a political issue of the bill providing for the consolidation of the Navy Department and the War Department into a department of national defense, that he is entirely mistaken. His statement is absolutely incorrect. Neither the gentleman from Missouri nor I have attempted to make a political issue out of that bill, and neither the gentleman from Missouri nor I intend to try to do so. It is not a political matter. It has never been considered a political matter. This suggestion of a consolidation of those two departments has been a matter which has been agitated for many years.

As far back as 1920 this matter came up, as I said the other day, in the form of a joint resolution providing for a congressional committee. Mr. Harding was inaugurated President in March, 1921, and at his request, on May 5, there was added to that commission a personal representative in the person of the present Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, who became its chairman at his instance, and no doubt shared his views. For nearly four years that commission considered the questions before it and finally submitted a report to this House. But in the meantime, be it said to his credit, the President of the United States, Mr. Harding, did not wait for Congress to ask him, but he voluntarily submitted to that joint commission certain suggestions as to consolidations which he thought should be made, thereby showing a spirit of cooperation in the public interest, which, of course, was appreciated by the Congress and which no doubt proved helpful to the commission. Among the most important suggestions coming from President Harding was that these two great departments be consolidated into one under the head of a department for the national defense. I want to ask my distinguished friend, the Secretary of War, if it was a political question then? This consolidation was advocated and urged by a Republican President of the United States, in whose Cabinet the present President sat. Will Secretary Hurley say that President Harding was trying to reduce the Army to a state of impotence?

I have before me this recommendation of President Harding. The consolidation was not recommended by the majority members of that committee. I am going to read to you the opening paragraph from the supplemental report which was made by the minority members, Senator HARRISON and Representative Moore, in which they explain why this was not done. They agreed to the report of the majority in the main, but they said this:

> It will appear from the hearings that very many of the suggestions that were submitted to the committee by President Harding—

Listen—

> As, for instance, that of consolidating the War and Navy Dedepartments have been rejected because of the conflicting views of Cabinet officials.

That is just the trouble now; and I repeat that if you are ever going to consider a bill of that sort and act upon it, you have got to do so independently of the views of some Cabinet officials who will be very seriously affected by the bill should it pass and become a law. The question is whether these Cabinet officials shall legislate or the Congress. There is nothing political about it. It is simply a question that should appeal to every Member of the House, as to whether we can have equal or better efficiency in the War and Navy Departments under one head, and at the same time save many millions of dollars to the Public Treasury.

I want to make this prediction—and I do so as one who has always voted for preparedness in the past—that the people of this country, overburdened and overtaxed as they are, are not going to continue to stand for these immense appropriations for the Army and the Navy unless Congress makes some effort to reduce the administrative expenses attendant upon them. [Applause.] If they want great appropriations for the building of ships; if they want great appropriations for the Army and the Navy, they should certainly, in the interest of the public, join those who are making an effort to save some of these great administrative costs.

I believe in the Constitution of the United States. That Constitution makes it the duty of the President of the United States to submit recommendations and his views upon the state of the Union to the Congress from time to time. There is no mention of any such duty being imposed upon a Cabinet official. It may surprise the distinguished Secretary to learn that his office is not even mentioned in the Constitution.

There is no political question involved. On the contrary—and I thought I made this plain the other day—it is an economic question, and there are members of the minority upon the Expenditures Committee who have been standing shoulder to shoulder for some such legislation as this. They are entitled to the same credit for their views as members of the opposite party who are in the majority.

In passing, let me say this, in the absence of the gentleman from Missouri who inserted a certain editorial printed in the St. Louis Star. We all know that is a great paper, a splendid paper, with a wide circulation and great influence. In that editorial, which the gentleman from Missouri read, it was stated that form set-ups had been received from the Department of the Interior, and I think it named the Secretary in person, requesting the paper to editorially advocate that Congress turn down the report of the Committee on Appropriations, and do what? Appropriate $500,000 for a survey of the public domain, which the committee and this House very properly thought could be suspended at least for one year without any detriment to the public welfare; and in the course of the same editorial it said that form letters had been received from the War Department asking it to protest editorially against any cuts in so for as the War Department is concerned, based, doubtless, upon a premature report which appeared in the newspapers several weeks ago, and which you gentlemen probably saw. All this was sent out at Government expense, written and prepared by officials at Government expense, typewritten at Government expense, sent to that office, and no doubt to many other offices of newspapers, at public expense.

I do not care, my friends, who is Secretary—whether he belongs to my party or another—I simply say that the Constitution provides for an executive department and a legislative department, and I think the Congress is capable of attending to its own business, if some of these executives who are not required to make these protests will attend to theirs. [Applause.]

I have no objection; on the contrary, I think it is their duty to appear before these committees whenever they are called upon to appear, and I make no criticism of any member of the Cabinet or any high officer of the Army or the Navy when they do appear and express their views, but what I do protest against is the fact that they do not appear as I appeared, and then leave. Talk to me about lobbying up here at the Capitol! If I wanted to, I could give you the names and cite instances where Members have been buttonholed and letters have been written by these same distinguished gentlemen who, the Secretary of War says, were not lobbying. Enough for that.

The pending Treasury and Post Office bill is the fourth of the great annual supply bills that have been reported to the House at this session. It is the fifth bill that has been considered, which includes, of course, the deficiency bill which was taken up shortly after this Congress convened.

This bill, as reported to the House, carries a reduction below the estimates of $22,677,342, which is divided, as between the two departments, in a reduction of $14,704,430 for the Treasury Department and $7,972,912 for the Post Office Department.

The other bills, beginning with the deficiency bill, as they passed the House carried reductions under the Budget estimates. The deficiency bill is $14,171,120 under the estimates, or approximately a 10 per cent reduction under the estimates.

The Department of Agriculture appropriation bill carried a reduction under the Budget estimates of $10,834,591, or approximately 6 per cent under the Budget estimates.

The Interior Department appropriation bill carried a reduction under the estimates of $6,258,920, or approximately a decrease of 6 per cent under the Budget estimates.

The State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Departments appropriation bill carried a reduction of $5,568,144.56, or a reduction of approximately 4 per cent under the Budget estimates.

In other words, these five bills have decreased the Budget estimates in the total sum of $59,510,117.56.

There are five more appropriation bills to follow—the District of Columbia bill, the legislative bill, the Army and the Navy bills, and the independent offices bill. Of course, no one can say how much this reduction will be increased by them.

There are a great many items in the pending bill which it is unnecessary to discuss. If I omit referring to some of them and any gentleman is interested, I will be pleased to have him call my attention to it later and I shall give him the reasons which influenced the committee in taking the action that it did.

The committee has adhered to its policy and has not increased any item above the Budget estimate, neither has it placed in this bill any appropriation which was not recommended by the Budget.

It includes, as you will see, the same provision with reference to prohibiting increases in salaries and filling vacancies during the fiscal year 1933, similar to those which have been incorporated in other bills, with certain modifications to meet the situation, particularly as it applies to these departments.

The first item to which I wish especially to call your attention, as it appears in the bill, is an appropriation under the public-debt service. There is a reduction here of $75,000 in the amount of the Budget estimate for the purchase of distinctive paper which is used in the printing of United States securities in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The situation that confronts the Government with reference to this paper is such that there is only one bidder for the entire amount. That is the Crane Co., of Massachusetts.

Under the law the Treasury Department goes through the form of advertising and opening bids, but the result is there is usually only one bidder, except that a year ago another paper company submitted a bid on 200 or 400 tons at 38½ cents a pound. The entire supply was about 1,020 tons.

The bid of the Crane Co. was higher, and it had in it the alternative that if it was allowed the contract for all the distinctive paper required by the Government it would furnish it for 43 cents a pound, but if the bid was to be split and a part furnished by other companies, then the Crane bid on all less 400 tons, or 620 tons, would be 48 cents.

The Comptroller General very properly ruled when the bids were opened and there was this one bid at 38½ cents for 400 tons, and the Crane Co. bid at 43 cents for the entire quantity and 48 cents if they did not get the entire amount, that the department should accept the bid of the Crane Co. for the entire supply at 43 cents, because it would cost the Government less than it would to take 400 tons at 38½ cents from one contractor and the rest from the Crane Co., about 620 tons.

That is what we are up against for our paper. The estimate of the department for next fiscal year was based on 42 cents, a reduction of 1 cent, but the estimate was prepared last summer. This is a period of falling prices, and the committee took the position that if there was one company last year which owing to a limited capacity could only furnish 400 tons, but could furnish it at 38½ cents at that time, then in this period of falling prices certainly the Government ought to be able to procure the paper for 38 cents. Accordingly, there has been written into the bill a provision which states that the Government shall not pay for next year exceeding 38 cents a pound for distinctive paper. You will find that on page 10 of the bill.

That enables the committee to make a reduction of $75,000 in this estimate. We believe that is fair. We believe that the Government ought to get this paper certainly for 38 cents, if not less; and when we are confronted with the fact that we only have one bidder, I think it highly proper that the United States Government should fix some limit to the amount it is going to pay to protect itself, and certainly with the knowledge that another company stands ready to submit bids for a portion of the paper to be furnished at even a less price.

This bill also gives the Secretary of the Treasury the right to split bids if in his discretion he thinks it ought to be done.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Has the gentleman any assurance that the low bidder would furnish paper acceptable to the Government?

Mr. BYRNS. He would have to comply with the specifications issued by the Government.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman will remember that two years ago these bids were split, and they had to take the contract away from the party who had it.

Mr. BYRNS. I have already stated that the Collins Co. bid for 400 tons last year, and I have stated the reason why it was not accepted.

Mr. FOSS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I was not in the Chamber at the time.

Mr. BYRNS. Now, I want to say this in passing, that we have made some investigation of this subject. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] for a year or two has made a close investigation of this entire subject, and I hope he will discuss it when he takes the floor. It appeared to the committee that it would be possible to use more cotton in the paper than we are now using. As we all know, currency is not now turned into the Treasury because it gets worn-out but because it is greasy and dirty. A little more cotton in the paper would not cause it to be any more greasy or unsuitable for use. As it is now used there is 25 per cent of cotton to 75 per cent of linen.

The Treasury Department is continuing its investigation, and we have expressed the hope that we may be able gradually to put more cotton into the paper until possibly it may be on a 50-50 basis, if such a thing is deemed desirable. The Bureau of Standards has made a thorough study of the subject. The use of more cotton will further reduce the cost of the paper. The linen rags in the paper are imported. Cotton rags are manufactured in our own country. Certainly, when we can do so, we ought to give every benefit to the cotton producers of the country.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. For a short inquiry.

Mr. ALLGOOD. The statement just made pertains to the inquiry that I wanted to make a while ago, because cotton is now selling for a third of what it formerly did. The fact that this company offered to supply the paper at 38½ cents a pound, when prices were high, indicates at least that if we use a higher percentage of cotton, it could be furnished much more cheaply than 38½ cents.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. I am aware of the views of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALLGOOD], because he has discussed them with me many times.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. In order to ask the gentleman a question about the cotton in the paper. That is a practical proposition. The fact is that when the paper is used for a while, with a certain percentage of cotton in it, it will become soft and difficult to handle, whereas linen paper always maintains a certain hardness, regardless of how long it is used.

Mr. BYRNS. I know that has always been the contention. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that during the war, if I recollect correctly, all of our currency was 100 per cent cotton. As I said a moment ago, we do not need the durability now as we once thought, because the money is not turned into the Treasury because it becomes worn out but because it becomes dirty and greasy. The objection of the gentleman, therefore, does not apply. However, that difficulty has been entirely overcome. As I said a while ago, the Bureau of Standards has been making an investigation with reference to just how much cotton can be used with the linen in order to provide our currency with a proper, distinctive paper for currency uses. There is no doubt that there can be a considerable increase in the amount of cotton used with corresponding reductions in the cost, without the slightest ill effect.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, could the gentleman tell us how much the reduction in the appropriation will be?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I could not.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I would like to get that information.

Mr. BYRNS. It would be considerable when they reach the point to which I alluded awhile ago. There is no effort to force the Treasury Department immediately to a full-cotton basis or even a 50-50 basis. The idea is that they shall gradually approach it. However, there is nothing in this bill which provides for that.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. I am not opposed to an experiment along that line, although I do not believe it is practicable. What is more, I have no knowledge that cotton was used entirely in the manufacture of paper money during the war. Can the gentleman submit the evidence in respect to that?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am very much interested in the paper item. As I understand it now, 25 per cent of the material used in the manufacture of the currency paper is cotton.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Has the gentleman information of the experiments being conducted by the Bureau of Standards in respect to the quantity they expect to recommend?

Mr. BYRNS. No.

Mr. TREADWAY. So that the talk about more cotton is more or less general—there is nothing definite.

Mr. BYRNS. There is nothing definite except the Treasury concedes that a greater amount of cotton can be used, but they say they do not want to go to it all at once; they want to proceed gradually.

Let us now take up the Bureau of Customs. The appropriation for the Customs Service is carried in the sum of $22,700,000, which is $1,283,600 under the current year, and $350,000 under the Budget estimates. The Budget recommended a decrease of $933,600, which was accounted for mainly by reduction in the field personnel, decreased contingent expenses, subsistence expenses, equipment purchases and installations, and payment of awards. These decreases logically have followed the diminution of customs business due to the depression. Vacancies in the field forces are not being filled and will not be filled until there is need for them. The committee, in view of these conditions, has effected a further decrease of $350,000 in the estimate by the elimination of amounts for automatic increases in salary for field clerks, and in the belief that greater decreases should and can be made in the expenses for rents, repairs, fuel, and other items where decreasing prices affect the situation Included in this committee decrease of $350,000 is the sum of $153,800, representing the abolition of 29 presidential offices.

These offices which have been omitted from this bill, and which will be eliminated from future appropriation bills if this provision goes into effect, are the offices of surveyors, appraisers, and comptrollers, with the exception of the position of appraiser in the city of New York. I think no harm would have resulted if we had eliminated the appraiser in the city of New York, and the only reason I can give for retaining that position is the fact that at least 60 per cent of the entire revenues from customs is collected in the port of New York, and the appraiser there has some 900 people under him.

However, I want to call attention to the fact that every one of these positions, without exception, was created between the years 1799 and 1889. They are obsolete. They do not perform any useful purpose that can not be performed by others now in the service.

Now, I want to give you a picture of this situation, because I think it is important. The committee is proposing the abolition of all presidential officers at any port except the collector of customs, with one single exception, and that is the appraiser at the port of New York.

There is one collector of customs for each of the 48 customs collection districts. Collectors are appointed by the President and are charged with the collection of the customs revenue and the enforcement of the customs revenue laws, the neutrality laws, and such other laws as they may be directed to enforce by the Secretary of the Treasury. They are also charged with the administration of certain navigation laws, certain functions under the immigration laws, and other laws pertaining to the Department of Agriculture.

In 32 of the 48 customs districts there are no appraisers appointed by the President, and in such districts the collector is the only officer appointed by the President, and he has complete jurisdiction over the customs organization within his particular district. The responsibility for enforcing the customs laws is placed in him alone, and the authority and responsibility are not divided as it is in the few ports where there are appraisers, surveyors, and comptrollers in addition to the collector of customs. In the ports where there is only one presidential appointee, namely, the collector of customs, the duties performed by appraisers and surveyors are expeditiously and efficiently conducted by officers under the jurisdiction of the collector. A deputy collector or a chief inspector performs the duties of the surveyor, and an examiner or other officer performs the duties of the appraiser under the additional title of acting appraiser. In such districts where there is only a collector the customs procedure is carried on smoothly and just as much revenue is collected at less expense.

Surveyors of customs are appointed by the President, and out of the 48 customs districts there are only 7 ports at which surveyors are appointed. In these seven ports the surveyor is the outdoor executive officer of the port and is required to superintend and direct all outdoor officers such as inspectors, guards, and laborers. These officers board and search vessels, supervise the unlading and inspection of merchandise and baggage imported by vessels, trains, automobiles, or otherwise. An anomalous situation arises in that while the surveyor, who is appointed directly by the President, supervises the work of the inspectors, guards, and laborers, those employees are selected for appointment by the collector of customs. Such a procedure is not good organization.

In the other 41 customs districts there is no surveyor, and the duties described above are performed by the same class of employees, namely, inspectors, guards, and laborers, under the jurisdiction of a deputy collector or chief inspector, who reports directly to the collector of customs.

There are 16 appraisers of customs appointed by the President, and their duties are to examine and appraise all imported merchandise, and to furnish to the collector of customs all information necessary for the assessment of duty on such imported merchandise in accordance with the terms of the tariff act. The employees under the jurisdiction of the appraiser consist of assistant appraisers, examiners, verifiers, openers, packers, clerks, samplers, and laborers. A certain percentage of the number of cases in each importation is sent to the appraiser's stores for examination and appraisement. Section 500 of the tariff act of 1930 states that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to designate an officer of the customs as acting appraiser at a port where there is no appraiser appointed by the President. This section of the tariff act also states that such acting appraiser shall perform all the duties and possesses all the powers of an appraiser.

There are 48 customs districts, which include approximately 300 ports of entry, and there are only 16 ports at which there are appraisers appointed by the President; the other 284 ports have each an officer designated as acting appraiser. At ports where there are no appraisers appointed by the President—and some of these ports are of considerable size, such as Seattle, Los Angeles, and Galveston—the customs business is handled efficiently and expeditiously and, of course, at less expense.

The committee does not abolish the position of appraiser at the port of New York on account of the volume of customs imports at that place. About 60 per cent of the total customs receipts are collected at the port of New York, and the appraiser at that port has approximately 900 employees under his jurisdiction. The second port in size, so far as numbers of employees in the appraiser's stores is concerned, has about 100 employees, or one-ninth of the number of such employees in the appraiser's stores at New York. Furthermore, the appraising officers throughout the country depend a great deal for advice as to the value of imported merchandise from the appraiser at the port of New York.

There are seven comptrollers of customs, each appointed by the President. The comptroller of customs is an auditing officer, and his duties are to examine the collectors' accounts of receipts and disbursements of money and receipts and disposition of merchandise. The 48 customs districts are divided into seven comptroller districts, and each of the seven comptrollers of customs examines the accounts of the various collectors within his—the comptroller's—district.

The examination of the collectors' accounts is very technical work and can only be performed by officers well trained in customs procedure. There are seven assistant comptrollers, one in each comptroller's office, who are civil-service employees, well trained overa long period in customs matters. The assistant comptroller is really the active head of the office, as it can not be presumed that a comptroller appointed by the President could have the technical knowledge required to examine the accounts of the various collectors of customs.

If the seven positions of comptroller of customs are abolished, the assistant comptrollers will carry on the work under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury in the same manner and just as efficiently as it has always been carried on, and, of course, at less expense.

I shall include as a part of my remarks the following table, which shows the principal ports, the total receipts for the fiscal year 1931 at each port, and comparative columns showing the presidential officers now provided for the various ports:

Principal ports, presidential officers, and receipts, 1931

An effort was made—and it originated with the Committee on Appropriations as far back as 1912—to eliminate these useless offices and strike them from the pay rolls of the Government. Under the action of the Congress in 1912, the President of the United States, our beloved President Taft, was authorized to reorganize the Customs Service so as to provide for a reduction of $350,000 in its expenditures. I take it that, yielding to the immense pressure which was undoubtedly brought upon him, he did not recommend the abolition of these offices. In this period when economy is so badly needed, now is the time to strike from the rolls every man who is not rendering service consistent with, or justified by, the salary which is being paid him.

Now, I want to call attention to this, to show you how inconsistent and how ridiculous this whole proposition is. Understand, most of these positions were created a hundred years ago, as I can show if I had the time. At Portland, Me., they collected in the fiscal year 1931, $212,818.81 in customs. They have a collector at $6,400, an appraiser at $3,800, and a surveyor at $3,200, all appointed by the President. In the city of Norfolk, where they collect nearly $3,000,000 in customs, all the work in connection with customs is performed by the collector of customs and his regular force; yet, in Portland, Me., where we collect $212,000 in customs, it is costing the Government $97,000. Now, we ought to cut out these surplus offices.

A few years ago a vacancy occurred in the position of surveyor in San Francisco and also in New Orleans and for three years they were permitted to remain vacant. Why? Because everyone realized that it was not necessary. If it had been necessary, we know that the vacancies would have been filled. I have no information about it, but I venture the suggestion, it was only filled possibly after distinguished gentlemen in position of high power and influence had brought such pressure to bear upon the White House that made it impossible for the President to refuse their request to fill the place.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As I understand, by this bill we are abolishing the office of appraiser in every port in the country with the exception of New York. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNS. That is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In St. Louis there is an appraiser, a very competent lady. I must say I have never gone into the customshouse that I did not find that lady in her office. They clear shipments in St. Louis. They come in in bond from the ports. In abolishing this office the collector of customs is to assume the duties heretofore performed by the appraiser. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; if I understood the gentleman's question correctly.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The collector of customs will assume the duties of the surveyor?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. In other words, he will have entire charge of the office.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The personnel under the appraiser has not been disturbed?

Mr. BYRNS. No.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There is no intention to close the office?

Mr. BYRNS. No.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And the committee is treating them all alike, with the exception of New York?

Mr. BYRNS. All with the exception of New York. If I were asked with reference to New York, I could only give the reply that I gave before. I do not know whether that is a good answer or not.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Was this done by the unanimous vote of the committee?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. I want to say to the gentleman that in the office in St. Louis, and all over this country, I am not questioning the fact that the appraiser does not go to the Federal building and sit there, but I do say that that work can be done by the competent assistants under civil service under the direction of the collector of customs better than under the present set-up. These offices are simply appendages, being paid for during all of these years at these very handsome salaries, possibly to make a political berth for some man, and that has been true under Democratic administrations as well as under Republican administrations. I think the time has come to get rid of them.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The offices in St. Louis are separate. The appraiser has charge of all the examiners in St. Louis, as well as of the packers, and so forth. They are separate and they are not in one building.

Mr. BYRNS. The entire force should be under the collector of customs, who is a presidential appointee, who has deputy collectors appointed under the civil service and who are responsible to him. Here you have this sort of a situation: You have a collector of customs and an appraiser in St. Louis, and maybe a surveyor.

Mr. DYER. The collector of customs and the surveyor is one and the same person.

Mr. BYRNS. If that is true, why have these surveyors at other ports? If the collector of customs at St. Louis can do the work without a surveyor, why have a surveyor at other places? That furnishes an additional reason for the abolishment of these positions. I say to the gentleman that this work can be performed by deputy collectors and will be performed by deputy collectors just as it is now, but the trouble is that you have an appraiser and a collector of customs in St. Louis, two presidential appointees, and that does not make good administration. Who is the boss?

Mr. DYER. Each bosses his own department.

Mr. BYRNS. But the fact is that the collector of customs gives a bond, and he is the man who is responsible for every dollar collected, and he should have the authority since he has the responsibility.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. DYER. I am sure the gentleman from Tennessee will not object to this statement, that universally the House has the very greatest regard and affection for him as well as confidence in his judgment. Of course, naturally, we are against anything that tends to destroy the usefulness of the Government in St. Louis in the discharge of public business there. The gentleman from Tennessee, however, states, as I understand, that the service will not be detrimentally affected in any respect by transferring the duties of the surveyor to the collector of customs. The work will go on just the same. And what will the Government save, if the gentleman can give me that information? At the office in St. Louis, of course, the appraiser occupies space in a Government building.

Mr. BYRNS. They will save there at least the sum of $4,600, which is the salary of the present appraiser, not an inconsiderable sum.

Mr. DYER. What about the employees who are in that office?

Mr. BYRNS. They are all civil-service employees, and they will continue under the collector of customs.

Mr. DYER. In other words, you are simply abolishing the office of appraiser, an office which, as my colleague says, is now very well filled by an excellent lady, which no one would doubt, in view of the fact that she is a Republican, and we would not expect anything different.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say to the gentleman that, regardless of her politics, I am sorry to see her lose her job; but we have somebody else to look after besides job holders, and that is what we are trying to do by the abolition of these offices.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. CLANCY. The gentleman is trying to achieve economies in the Customs Service. I asked one of the chiefs in the Customs Service what would be the effect if Canada put an embargo on liquor.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not want to become involved in that. The gentleman must not bring that subject in, because that has absolutely nothing to do with this. I decline to yield to my friend in that connection, because I am not going to have this discussion become involved in something wholly foreign to what we are now talking about.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I think it appropriate at this time to call the attention of the Chair to the almost universal infraction of the rules which takes place here every day, namely, that when a speaker declines to yield, some gentlemen insist on making statements to go into the RECORD. I think the rule in that regard should be enforced.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. Let the Chair in all kindness also plead with the membership to hereafter observe the general rule of not interrupting a speaker without first having addressed the Chair for that purpose. The Chair does not seek any recognition on his own account, but the Chair is here to enforce the rules of the House as far as possible, and the Chair requests that in the proceedings following the rules be reasonably observed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, in order to effectuate that ruling, if any of the remarks of the gentleman have been taken down by the reporter after the gentleman from Tennessee declined to yield to him, they should be stricken from the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is a reasonable request under the rules.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman from Alabama is out of order, because the gentleman from Tennessee has not yielded to him.

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama, if necessary, for the interruption.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BYRNS. No; I do not yield; and I want to say this in explanation to the committee: The gentleman from Michigan and I are good, warm, personal friends. I am willing to yield for any legitimate question based upon what is being discussed before the committee, but I am not willing to yield and start a controversy over a matter that is wholly foreign to anything that is under consideration and be kept here and detain the committee probably with a useless discussion of matters which are not before the committee at this time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield on a matter that is in the bill?

Mr. BYRNS. If it is pertinent to the bill and to this particular proposition, I yield; otherwise not.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Maryland will yield, the Chair would like to put the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama did not have the floor and could not properly make the motion which he submitted.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri is well taken.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, is a parliamentary inquiry in order?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will state to the Chair, if the gentleman from Tennessee will yield for a moment——

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I was seeking simply what I consider to be proper conduct of proceedings in the Committee of the Whole. I called the attention of the Chair to the frequent infraction of the rule, and that is in order, and the Chair has the right to enforce it and require the Reporter of Debates, if the Chair sees fit to do so, to strike such offending words from the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state for the benefit of the gentleman from Alabama and all others that it was impossible for the Chair to determine whether the words were offensive or whether they were gentle. The Chair could not hear them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I did not use the expression "offending words" in that sense; I meant offending against the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair could not tell. Does the gentleman desire the words read?

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask if it is in order for the gentleman to submit a parliamentary inquiry while I have the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. Only with the consent of the gentleman who has the floor.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not yield for that purpose, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield if the gentleman has a question bearing on the particular matter I am discussing.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. BYRNS. Under those conditions; yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I really do not know the exact proposition the gentleman was discussing, but I do want to ask a very important question. On page 11, line 16, I notice the bill provides:

> The offices of comptrollers of customs, surveyors of customs, and appraisers of merchandise (except the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York), 29 in all, with annual salaries aggregating $153,800, are hereby abolished.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman mean to say that he is going to abolish the appraiser in Baltimore and in all the other important ports?

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that I admit, judging from the past, it is a rather unusual thing to abolish any Government office, but that is just what the committee proposes to do, and what we hope the House will do when this bill is passed.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Upon what is that based, because we have a very important office in Baltimore?

Mr. BYRNS. I have just spent about 15 minutes here telling the committee why we have sought to do this.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman just give me three minutes and explain that?

Mr. BYRNS. I hate to repeat, but the best I can say to the gentleman is because they are not needed in any sense of the word. All this work can be done by the collector of customs, who is a presidential appointee, and who has a large force under him.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Why make an exception of New York?

Mr. BYRNS. I have just stated to the committee that the only reason I could give is that we collect 60 per cent or more of the revenue from customs in the city of New York. The appraiser there happens to be a pretty important person on account of the immense amount of merchandise that comes through that port. He has 900 people under him, and we thought, possibly, under the circumstances, we might leave the appraiser at New York in the bill; but if the gentleman presses me, I may say I really do not know of any particular reason why the collector of customs could not attend to that work as well as his other duties.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I am very sorry to see the committee going this far. The gentleman by my side here has asked me whether we have any deserving Democrats, and I may say that we certainly have—very deserving.

Mr. BYRNS. I know the gentleman anticipates that some deserving Democrat might hold this office after next March 4, and I rather join him in that anticipation, but even though he may be a Democrat, I do not think we ought to take money out of the Public Treasury to pay him or any other unnecessary employee.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. This recommendation by the committee is exactly contrary to the recommendation of the Budget; that is, there is no recommendation of this sort from the administration?

Mr. BYRNS. No; there is no recommendation from the Budget for the elimination of these positions.

Mr. DYER. And no hearings were had on this matter in the committee?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; we had hearings in the committee.

Mr. KELLER. Was it a unanimous report?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. Now, this idea is not new; it dates back to 1912, when Hon. John J. Fitzgerald was chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. DYER. I am not quarreling with the chairman or complaining.

Mr. BYRNS. Now, let us take up the question of tax refunds. For the current fiscal year an appropriation of $26,000,000 was carried for the refund of taxes illegally or erroneously collected. No direct appropriation was included in the Budget estimates for 1933 but a reappropriation of unexpended balances was submitted.

Mr. GOSS. I hope the gentleman will explain how the Government can pay back these illegally and erroneously levied taxes if there is no appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS. The bill carries the reappropriation. Expenditures for refunds during the fiscal year 1931 totaled approximately $70,000,000. For the first six months of the present fiscal year the expenditures for refunds have been $40,182,000, or at the monthly rate of $6,700,000. On this basis expenditures for 1932 will reach $80,364,000. The amount on hand July 1, 1931, with which to pay 1932 refunds, was $111,861,000. Deducting from this figure the estimated expenditures during 1932 of $80,364,000, there will remain as an estimated balance to be reappropriated by this bill for the fiscal year 1933 of only $31,497,000. The bureau estimates that on the basis of the figures as to refunds compiled when the estimates for 1933 were submitted to the Bureau of the Budget the expenditures for the fiscal year 1933 would amount to $63,076,500. Comparing this anticipated expenditure with the amount of the reappropriation contemplated by the Budget estimate of $31,497,000, there is an indicated deficiency at this time for the fiscal year 1933 in excess of $31,500,000. There is pending at this time a judgment against the United States for tax refunds rendered by a United States district court involving with the interest approximately $17,000,000. That case is being appealed. If the Government loses in the appellate court, the 1933 expenditures will be increased to approximately $80,000,000.

Mr. GOSS. And then that shortage could be taken care of in the deficiency bill?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. Now, gentlemen, just a minute on the subject of public buildings, in which undoubtedly you are all interested. Gentlemen will find it on page 13 of the report. The total amount recommended for the Supervising Architect's office and for the construction, maintenance, repair, operation, and equipment of public buildings is $133,406,930, a gross increase over the appropriation for the present year of $25,991,000 and a decrease under the Budget recommendation of $12,785,840.

The appropriation for mechanical equipment of buildings, vaults and safes, operating force for buildings, furniture for buildings, and operating supplies all show substantial increases over 1932, due entirely to the new buildings anticipated to be placed in commission during the next fiscal year.

The appropriation proposed for sites and construction of public buildings is $108,000,000, an increase of $31,200,000 over 1932 and a decrease of $12,000,000 under the Budget estimate. In connection with this appropriation of $108,000,000, the committee is proposing a limitation upon the amount which may be expended for buildings in the District of Columbia of $15,000,000, leaving $93,000,000 for the remainder of the country.

I may say that under the estimate proposed, over $21,000,000 was to be expended for the District of Columbia. Your committee felt that to take one-sixth of the amount for 1933 for the District, with which Congress has already been exceedingly liberal in pushing forward the erection of public buildings, was asking a little too much, in view of the condition of the Treasury in 1933. This leaves $93,000,000 for outside work.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Do you make any provision for new projects, where allocations have already been made?

Mr. BYRNS. No. And I will say that there is good reason for that, because if we made provision for it the money so appropriated could not be used. I have been disappointed in the case of a building in my district, and the gentleman probably has in the case of buildings in his district. Probably that applies to all gentlemen here. The Budget has determined not to send in the sixth installment until December. I expect when it sends in that sixth installment of buildings, such as the one to which the gentleman has referred, it will, of course, accompany it with a recommendation as to the amount of money necessary to do the work. Of course, we are not anticipating something that has not happened.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman refers to Knoxville and Nashville?

Mr. BYRNS. No.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. They are in the fifth installment.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes. I am referring to those buildings which have been allocated, but which have never been reported to and passed on by the Congress. In other words, the Secretary of the Treasury has indicated that there are certain buildings on his list, and we thought they were to have been sent up this last December, but for reasons which are apparent to everyone they have been delayed until next December, until a more propitious time, so far as the Treasury is concerned.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. McMILLAN. With reference to the building situation in the District of Columbia, what action, if any, has the committee taken with regard to the Post Office Building, the Southern Railway Building, and the District Building?

Mr. BYRNS. This bill carries a limitation in so far as the State, War, and Navy Building is concerned. It provides that no money appropriated in this bill shall be used for the purpose of remodeling that building; but I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the deficiency appropriation bill, which passed in December last, carried a provision which prevents the demolition of the three buildings to which the gentleman refers until Congress takes some positive action.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. It has been stated with reference to the Federal building-expension program that it is to help relieve the depression and the employment situation. Did the Committee on Appropriations decide that it should not request information from the Department of the Treasury because the Budget indicated that the sixth allocation should not be presented at this time and appropriated for?

Mr. BYRNS. If I understand the gentleman's question correctly, of course the Committee on Appropriations would not be expected to make recommendations for appropriations for buildings which have not been authorized by the Congress, or which are not in the act of being authorized. The gentleman knows that under the law the Secretary of the Treasury allocates the public buildings and selects the site and determines when they shall be built and how much money shall be expended.

Mr. SCHAFER. He did determine that as I understand it, and submitted his determination to the Director of the Budget, but was turned down.

Mr. BYRNS. That is the sixth installment to which we have referred, which will come up in December.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why does it not come up now? We have unemployment conditions now throughout the country.

Mr. BYRNS. Because it has not been submitted, in the first place, and in that I heartily commend the Secretary of the Treasury, because he thought, even though not elected as the gentleman and I are, that the burden which confronts the people of exceeding $1,400,000,000 threatened deficit in June, 1933, should be taken into consideration. That is the only answer that I can give the gentleman. I thoroughly and heartily commend the Secretary of the Treasury in his endeavor to conserve the public money.

Mr. SCHAFER. Then the gentleman is not in favor of a big public-buildings program such as the $5,000,000,000 bond issue.

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, no; I am not in favor of any such proposition, and I hope the gentleman is not.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Is it true that provision is not made for any of these buildings for which allocation is made, due to the fact that there was no recommendation made by the Budget?

Mr. BYRNS. That is correct.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. In view of the fact that building costs are appreciably lower than they were when the appropriations were made, is the gentleman able to give us any information as to whether, by reason of the fact that a definite amount is allocated for buildings in a lump sum, there is to be somewhat of expansion of the buildings program, with the money available?

Mr. BYRNS. It is to be hoped so, and I see no reason why that should not result, because we all know that materials have decreased in value and the cost of construction has decreased in many respects.

Mr. KETCHAM. In some of the cases brought to my attention it appears to me that where the estimates are made for a $100,000 building they have been able to let the contract for 30 per cent less and sometimes 40 per cent less.

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Because of this difference in the cost of materials.

Mr. BYRNS. And it is my honest judgment that this estimate might have been still further reduced for the reason the gentleman has indicated; but we do not want to do that.

Mr. KETCHAM. Is it a fair statement to say that even though a substantial cut has been made in this appropriation it will not materially lessen the number of projects over the country to be constructed?

Mr. BYRNS. In my judgment it will not lessen them.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. I want to know what action this Congress will have to take to get the sixth zone we all sit in before this body for consideration. I want to know how to do it.

Mr. BYRNS. I can not tell the gentleman, except to say that we are under very positive promise that that sixth installment will come up here next December unless something extraordinary prevents it. Even if it were to come now, having to go through both Houses, I do not think we would gain anything by it if we could force it up for consideration at this time.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to accept the gentleman's judgment, as I do on most matters, but I may be compelled to differ with the gentleman on this; and if I do, I would like to know how to go at it.

Mr. BYRNS. I say I think it would not amount to much for the reason that, after all, when we make this appropriation, the Secretary of the Treasury executes it; and if he does not desire to begin this work before December, he will not do it.

Mr. KELLER. But could we not instruct him to do it?

Mr. BYRNS. What good will it do?

Mr. KELLER. Will he not obey if Congress tells him when to do it and how? Our instructions ought to be controlling.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Is there enough public work provided and appropriated for to keep the departments of planning and construction busy for the next fiscal year?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; they will put all of their projects under contract not later than the latter part of October.

Mr. PARSONS. Then that is quite different from what I was reliably informed by a gentleman who is in a position to know. He stated that those projects had largely been provided for, and that in order to keep the organizations busy there should be an appropriation made for another $80,000,000 this year so that the organization could be planning for construction to begin July 1, 1933.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, if Congress desires to make an additional emergency appropriation that is one thing, but I am speaking of the projects which are under this particular appropriation.

Mr. PARSONS. I understand, but I just wanted to get that observation here.

Mr. BYRNS. But I take it that if we were to make an appropriation of $80,000,000 in addition to this appropriation, we would be required to provide a much larger force than they now have. It is not necessary for the purpose of keeping these organizations busy to make that appropriation.

Mr. PARSONS. Does not the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee believe we should have an emergency appropriation toward the close of the session of probably $80,000,000, so that these buildings could be planned and construction could begin July 1?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not at this time prepared to answer that inquiry.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the lady from California.

Mrs. KAHN. I would like to ask the gentleman if it would be possible to so amend this bill as to provide that nothing but American-made materials could be used in public construction?

Mr. BYRNS. I am happy to say that there is a provision in this bill dealing with domestic articles, where the cost will not be unreasonable, in the judgment of the Secretary.

Mrs. KAHN. But what determines the unreasonableness of the cost?

Mr. BYRNS. That is up to the Secretary.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. DALLINGER. In line with the question asked by the lady from California, is it true that in letting the contract the specifications for the new Supreme Court Building require that Italian marble should be used? Does the gentleman know.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not know. My information is that there is some foreign marble to be used in that building.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I can answer the gentleman's question if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. While the Architect of the Capitol opposed the use of Italian marble, the Supreme Court Commission overruled him, and the Supreme Court room, proper, will be in marble that will come from Italy.

Mr. BYRNS. Now, just a word with reference to the Post Office Department.

The Budget estimates for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1933 aggregate $813,559,487.

The appropriations for the fiscal year 1932, including supplemental amounts granted at this session in the first deficiency act, total $842,883,777.

The Budget estimates for 1933 show a reduction under the total appropriations for the current fiscal year of $27,724,290.

The amount recommended to be appropriated by this bill for the fiscal year 1933 is $805,586,575.

This recommended amount is $7,972,912 less than the total of the Budget estimates and $37,297,202 less than the aggregate of the 1932 appropriations.

The continuation of the business depression in the country has resulted in a further substantial reduction in the volume of the mails. The revenues for the fiscal year 1930, which was the last high year prior to the depression, were $705,500,000; for the fiscal year 1931 they decreased to $656,000,000; and on the basis of present indications and status of business they will not exceed $600,000,000 for the fiscal year 1932.

The appropriations for the service for the fiscal year 1932 were based upon estimated revenue of $730,000,000, a figure which it now seems will shrink to $600,000,000 unless there is marked improvement. In consequence of the decline in the amount of postal matter to be handled it has not been necessary to expend during the current fiscal year large portions of the appropriations made for that period. With the exception of a small increase in two items for clerical services in the department in Washington, every other appropriation, both for the department and the field, remains either stationary in amount or shows a marked decrease under the present year except in the instance of the appropriation for transportation of mail under subsidy contracts entered into under the merchant marine act of 1928. The increase for this purpose is $2,216,000. Eliminating this item from consideration, the total of all appropriations for the department and the Postal Service shows a net decrease under 1932 of $39,513,202.

The decrease in postal expenditures during the period of depression is not in any comparable proportion to the decrease in the volume of business or revenues. While revenues for 1930 amounted to $705,500,000, the gross expenditures were $804,000,000; the revenues for 1931 were $656,000,000 and the expenditures $803,000,000. For the present fiscal year revenues are indicated at $600,000,000 and expenditures approximately $808,000,000, which latter figure the department expects, if present conditions continue, will be still further reduced. In connection with the increase in expenditure between 1931 and 1932 it should be recalled that the 44-hour week was inaugurated on July 1 last, and it is estimated that for the entire service this new law will increase expenditures by about $7,000,000. Proportionate decrease in expenditures with a falling off of revenue does not necessarily follow. Some expenses of the Postal Service continue constant without regard to the volume of mail. The largest single factor of expenditure is the item for salaries and wages, estimated for the next fiscal year at $570,000,000, or about 70 per cent of the gross total cost of the service, including ocean and air mail subsidies.

Decreases in the appropriations and Budget estimates have been made possible largely through the falling off of business, lowered costs for rent, and decreasing commodity prices. The amounts recommended in the bill are predicated upon present conditions. Should they improve, it is evident that it may be necessary to provide additional appropriations to those carried in the bill. Should present conditions continue, it is probable that the amounts carried in the bill may be more than is necessary for the next fiscal year.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am particularly interested in the air mail item of $19,000,000. Is it contemplated to include in this $19,000,000 any extensions of the air mail service? That is, will additional routes be established?

Mr. BYRNS. Well, I will say frankly to the gentleman that I very much fear there will be no extensions unless Congress shall increase the amount recommended by the committee. The Bureau of the Budget submitted an estimate of $19,000,000, which is $1,000,000 less than the amount carried for this year. They did so with the idea that that sum would be sufficient to maintain the present service and possibly increase the frequency of some of the routes, and perhaps remotely enable night flyers on some of the routes which are not now so served. They made a reduction in the rates. The gentleman will understand that the contracts which are made by advertisement are not subject to change; but under the law as it exists to-day, the Postmaster General is given the right to make extensions upon certificates without the necessity of advertising. In those certificates is reserved to the Postmaster General the right to reduce the rate or to rearrange the rates from time to time as his judgment may dictate.

Effective January 1, 1932, he reduced the rates of the air mail contractors on an annual basis which amounted to about $1,240,000. That brought the expenditures, of course, down to about $19,000,000, and, based on that, the Bureau of the Budget has submitted the estimate which the bill carries. The actual expense for this present service is going to be over $19,300,000, but it is very clear that the Postmaster General can make further reductions in these air mail contracts so as easily to bring the cost of the present service within the amount appropriated.

I want to say it is my judgment, from testimony that was presented to the committee, and which appears in the hearings, that he can make considerable reductions. There were some people who appeared before the committee who said they were willing to take every contract the Government had on hand for approximately one-half of what is now being paid. I do not say that is possible. I am not passing on the merits of their proposition; but I do say this: That when a company with $55,000,000 in assets, so they tell us, $15,000,000 of which is in cash, says it is willing to take every contract now in the hands of the Government at approximately one-half of what is being paid, it is clear to me that some greater reduction can be made in the present contracts. Whether that is a fact or not, I do not know. I want to say this, however, in all fairness and in all justice to the Postmaster General.

When that matter was called to his attention he stated that there had been no written proposition made to him to that effect. Then he mentioned some other objections, in which he said that the company which had been making these representations was not provided with radio and other up-to-date appliances such as were required of the contractors who are now carrying the mails. But I am satisfied, and the Postmaster General has assured the committee, that he will make a further study of the situation with a view of reducing the rates. If the rates can be further reduced, it is possible a considerable amount of money will be saved and then it will be possible to put in additional routes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for his comprehensive answer to my question.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. Carrying out the argument concerning the air mail and the possibility of saving further appropriations, let me say that the Post Office Committee of the House will hold hearings, beginning on the 1st of March, to consider the matters referred to by the chairman of the committee and the objections which have been made by the Postmaster General.

I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question which pertains to the language found in the last proviso on page 67 of the bill. I can see where the committee has aimed to protect the substitutes in the service and to maintain the high standard of the Postal Service. The language of that proviso reads as follows:

> That when any vacancy is caused by the retirement, removal, resignation, or death of a postal employee in a position the duties of which make it necessary to assign permanently a substitute for an 8-hour daily period—

And so forth. In my judgment, it would be much better if, instead of saying:

> In a position the duties of which make it necessary to assign permanently a substitute for an 8-hour daily period—we inserted some language like this:

> Which make necessary eight hours regular daily service.

I have this in mind: If, for example, a death or vacancy occurred in the clerical force of any post office, nothing would hinder the postmaster, under the language of this bill, from placing two substitutes at work, one for four hours on the morning shift and one for four hours on the afternoon shift, whereas if we wrote into the bill the language I just suggested, which provides for eight hours daily service, it would then be necessary for the postmaster to designate a substitute and make him a regular employee of the Postal Service, and I think that would in no way violate the law.

Mr. BYRNS. I catch the force of the gentleman's suggestion and I want to say there is no difference between the gentleman and the committee as to what is intended to be accomplished. We will discuss that matter before this item is reached.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. I did not hear all of the gentleman's speech, and I have not read the report. I was wondering whether the expenditures provided here are based on a 2-cent rate for letters?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. There was some talk of a 3-cent rate.

Mr. BYRNS. It is based on the present rate.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Last summer the Post Office Department advertised for bids on twine, and they accepted a bid for cotton twine. After accepting it they rejected it and took jute instead, notwithstanding the fact that New England mills as well as southern mills bid on this contract, and they accepted the contract of a southern mill. Will the gentleman tell me what provision, if any, has been made by the committee to provide that the department shall purchase American goods?

Mr. BYRNS. It will not take long. I will read section 7 of the bill, which appears on page 69.

> In the expenditure of appropriations in this act the Secretary of the Treasury in the case of the Treasury Department, and the Postmaster General in the case of the Post Office Department, shall, unless in his discretion the interest of the Government will not permit, purchase, or contract for, within the limits of the United States, only articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States, notwithstanding that such articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States may cost more, if such excess of cost be not unreasonable.

I will say to the gentleman that is the same provision which is carried in the Navy bill and the War Department bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Under this provision, then, the Post Office Department would use approximately 7,000 bales of cotton in twine for one year, and the gentleman is firmly convinced that we will have nothing like we had last summer, when they turned down American products for foreign products.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, under this provision the Postmaster General would have to find that the difference in cost was not unreasonable, and I apprehend that no such finding would be made. The committee was interested, as the gentleman is and as we all are, in seeing that our own citizens receive the benefits of these expenditures in so far as it is possible.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me to make a suggestion, I may say that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House has reported a bill, which is now on the calendar, carrying out the suggestions the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. BYRNS. I am delighted to hear that.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. This bill carries an appropriation of $115,000,000 for carrying mail by the railroads. Can the gentleman tell us the basis of payment by the Government to the railroads?

Mr. BYRNS. It is on a space-rate basis fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am not in position to give the gentleman the schedule of payments, because it is exceedingly intricate. All I can say to the gentleman is that these space rates are fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the law.

Mr. GIBSON. Not by contract, but fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. BYRNS. That is true.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. I have been receiving telegrams from some of my constituents protesting against any change in contracts for the air mail, on the theory that the new contractor does not pay union wages and that he does not give as good service and does not have as good airships as the former contractor, whoever that was. Does the gentleman's committee know anything about that, or is that up to the Post Office Department?

Mr. BYRNS. I think the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is making an investigation of the whole air mail contract situation.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. In other words, if a new contract is going to be given out for the purpose of saving money, all things being equal, I think we ought to have service almost as good as what we had before.

Mr. BYRNS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. And I would like to go on record as favoring that.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, this committee has not cut the foreign air mail or made any change in that item. Most of them are 10-year contracts, and the same is true of the domestic contracts made through the Postmaster General. They are made under law, and the same is true of the ocean mail subsidy contract on the ships. The law provides that the Postmaster General may enter into these contracts, and the contracts have been made for a term of years. Of course, Congress can not impair such a contract, and there was nothing for the committee to do, and nothing, so far as I can see, for the Congress to do, so long as these contracts continue, except to make the appropriations necessary to meet them.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Evidently there are new contracts about to be given out, and that is why these telegrams are coming in.

Mr. BYRNS. That is in reference to ocean mail.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. No; this is in reference to air mail.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not imagine there will be any new contracts under the air mail appropriations unless savings can be effected, as I have explained.

I am very much obliged to the committee. [Applause.]

HOW SURPLUS CLOTHING MAY BE PURCHASED

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the matter of securing surplus clothing from the War Department by the American Legion and other organizations.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JOHNSON of Texas). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I am receiving numerous letters from various American Legion posts, individuals, and other organizations, not only from my home State of Oklahoma but all over the country relative to my remarks appearing recently in the RECORD with reference to House Joint Resolution 273, to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to sell surplus clothing to patriotic and charitable organizations for distribution to provide clothing for the unemployed and destitute people of the United States.

Under the resolution passed by the Military Affairs Committee of the House and agreed to by the War Department, this $40,000,000 worth of surplus clothing is now available and the following will give an idea of the present prices at which the clothing supplies can be purchased:

Caps	$0.10
Woolen underwear	.20
Shoes	.25
Gloves	.10
Mittens (canton flannel)	.02½
Overcoats	1.00
Leggings	.05
Socks (wool, heavy)	.03
Breeches (wool, new)	.25
Breeches (wool, reclaimed)	.12½

HERE IS THE NECESSARY "RED TAPE"

I am advised by the War Department that the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Red Cross, United Charities, and other approved organizations may purchase the surplus clothing in question through their corps area commander immediately, with the proviso, however, that such organizations shall comply with the usual red tape. I am further advised that, under the plan of the War Department, all such relief agencies must be certified to the corps area commanders by the governors of the respective States. Such precautions were taken, I was assured, not for the purpose of working a hardship on the American Legion and other approved organizations but as a protection against any possible abuses on the part of individuals or alleged charitable organizations seeking to profiteer. Organizations desiring to purchase such supplies should state that all clothing thus purchased would be distributed to the needy only and without expense to the Government. The clothing order should be sent to the commanding general of the corps area. For Oklahoma applications should be made to Maj. Gen. Edwin B. Winans, commander Eighth Corps Area, Fort Sam Houston, Tex. He will transmit the order to the Quartermaster General, Washington, D. C., and I am advised that clothing will be shipped freight collect from the nearest ordnance depot where it is now held.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. THATCHER. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON].

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to devote a little time this afternoon to a discussion of the reorganization problems of the Government. A number of things have occurred during the session which have resulted in a good deal of feeling, and I think has done a great deal of harm to the reorganization efforts of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Things have been said and done that would tend to reflect upon the work of this committee and that indicate that the Democratic leadership in the House does not believe it is functioning properly. If this is not the case, why set up a select committee to carry on the work which the Committee on Expenditures was organized to conduct? Because this is so, I desire to devote just a little time to a discussion of the work of the committee since it was organized.

The Committee on Expenditures was organized and held its first meeting on January 17, 1928. From the first it was apparent that the committee would have to fight to get control of bills that properly belonged to it under the rule fixing its jurisdiction. Whatever it got must of necessity be taken from other committees. The chairman repeatedly protested to the Republican floor leader and Speaker and spent considerable time arguing with the parliamentarian, but up to the end of the Seventieth Congress but a small volume of business came its way and most of the bills were of no great importance. Such bills as did come to the committee, however, were given careful consideration. None were reported without hearings. Upon some of them these hearings were extensive. It should be said in that connection that the very nature of the committee's jurisdiction brings to it bills that are highly controversial in character and for that reason require study and time for reconciling differences.

The committee considered, reported, and secured the passage of a number of bills for transfers and eliminations of bureaus and reports that in the aggregate resulted in considerable savings to the public treasury.

It held extensive hearings on the Wyant bill which had for its purpose the transfer and consolidation of all public works activities of the Government in the Department of the Interior. These hearings extended through several weeks and were exhaustive in character. Every phase of the problem was studied by the committee. The testimony is carefully digested and undoubtedly affords the best summary for and against the proposal that is extant. Sharp differences of opinion occurred in the committee.

It became apparent that if it should be forced out of the committee it would be hotly contested on the floor by a considerable number of the committee members, with prospects of enactment decidedly slender. The committee therefore decided to lay it aside.

The committee also held lengthy hearings on the Johnson (South Dakota) bill, which authorized the President to consolidate and coordinate all veterans' activities. Here we met with the most stubborn opposition of the heads of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and the Pension Bureau. The Secretary of the Interior also opposed the measure. A vast amount of lobbying was done against the bill by its opponents. Many Members of the House were very much against the proposed merger and lost no chance to line up their friends against it.

Here, too, differences of opinion developed in the committee, but the hearings had been sufficiently thorough and convincing in character to pretty badly demolish the opposition. A milk and water bill could have been reported that would have brought about some coordination under one head, but the chairman refused to consider anything less than a genuine consolidation under a head with authority to get results, and, rather than accept anything less, let the bill die. In taking this stand he had the support of a considerable number of his committee colleagues and of the President.

In the meantime the chairman had devoted much time and labor to a study of the whole reorganization problem, with a view to having each successive step fit into a well-considered scheme, which in the end would leave the Government organized upon sound principles with duplicate activities merged and related activities definitely grouped under one head. The most incongruous activities are now thrown together in inappropriate bureaus and departments. Manifestly, the Government can not operate with maximum efficiency nor with the greatest service to the public until its manifold activities are grouped according to major purpose.

TRANSFER OF PROHIBITION AND VETERANS' CONSOLIDATION

By the time the Seventy-first Congress convened the committee's jurisdiction had been pretty well established and it soon became apparent that it would have all the work it could properly consider. The chairman had also had time to formulate an outline of reorganization which permitted him to work toward a definite objective.

A number of investigations relating to expenditures and economies were undertaken and hearings were held upon numerous bills, some of which were highly technical and difficult to put into satisfactory form. A considerable number of bills of importance were reported. Some did not get through the House for lack of opportunity for consideration or because of objections raised when brought up on the consent calendar. Others passed the House and died in the Senate. Some 10 or 12 became law.

Among the more important measures may be mentioned the bill to transfer the Bureau of Prohibition Enforcement from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice. The merits, and particularly certain provisions, of this bill were hotly contested in the committee. The hearings were lengthy and excited national interest. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney General appeared in person and testified at length, as did representatives of their departments. The spokesmen of many private interests and industries were heard. When it came to completing the draft in executive session sharp differences had to be reconciled and some changes had to be made. Many days were spent in a minute word-for-word study of the measure. The final draft was perhaps as perfect for the purpose sought as any bill that has been submitted to the House in recent years. It became law without change.

Another measure of first-rate importance was the bill to create a Veterans' Administration and to consolidate therein the Pension Bureau, the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and the Veterans' Bureau. The consideration of this measure took weeks of time. The most painstaking investigation and study of all the problems involved were made that have ever been undertaken on the subject. The phraseology of this bill was carefully scrutinized and worked out.

In a sense, the committee was pioneering and laying the foundation for similar legislation in the future. It was the beginning of a great program that had for its purpose a complete reorganization of the Government, with a view to assembling related activities under appropriate administrative and executive heads and cutting out duplication and overlapping as far as possible. The bill was bitterly fought with every weapon known to the skillful debater and parliamentary tactician. In the end it became law as reported by the committee.

HOUSE GOES DEMOCRATIC

At the opening of this session the House went into Democratic hands, and my able colleague, Mr. JOHN J. COCHRAN, of Missouri, became chairman. He has continued the reputation of the committee for painstaking work and intelligent consideration of bills. Like myself, he has found that great speed is impossible with the character of bills that come to the committee, but I submit that fair progress has been made and that if the committee is given a chance it will give this House an opportunity to pass upon some exceedingly important legislation.

Like myself, he also has had to fight for the prerogatives of the committee and to prevent the destruction of its usefulness by the hostile moves of some who should be the most interested in the success of its program.

It is not possible, nor do I think it worth while, to attempt anything like a complete review of the activities of this committee since it joined its sister committees of the House, but I believe I have said enough, in view of the highly controversial character of the legislation it handles and the unrelenting opposition it has encountered in every reform and reorganization it has undertaken, to show that it has been functioning, not only with reasonable speed, but with a degree of intelligence that has won the confidence of the House.

BRICKBATS

I now want to devote some time to the brickbats the committee has encountered in the name of economy. Economy under present conditions is not only a word of great charm but of great political potency, and therefore one to be conjured with. Instead of leaving the matter of reorganization with the standing committee that has been studying the problem and that has already made a good start in dealing with the more promising reforms that will result in large savings to the Public Treasury, the Democratic leadership of the House has attempted to frustrate its work and capitalize the reforms proposed by the President.

Typical of the brickbats are House Joint Resolutions 136 and 147, introduced by my genial but "foxy" Democratic colleague from Tennessee, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. BYRNS].

Had either of these resolutions become law, it would have sheared the Committee on Expenditures of every shred of prestige and usefulness for the session. Fortunately for the committee, it had a fighting chairman from Missouri, who brought the resolutions to an untimely demise without benefit of clergy by a few well-directed shots.

No sooner were they dead than another appeared, much milder and so intriguing and seductive in character that even our staunch and courageous chairman yielded to its charms. So now we shall have the aid of a most distinguished company of gentlemen who have set out to revamp the whole Government structure in the space of six weeks, and the tragic part of this pretentious effort is that our fighting chairman and his predecessor in interest have become involved in this prodigious effort to save the dear people of the United States from being bogged down in a morass of debt. Lest I be misunderstood, let me say now that I shall lend my best efforts to make the findings and recommendations of the select economy committee worth while, and I am sure the Committee on Expenditures will deal with its recommendations in accordance with their merits. Let us hope, however, that it will not result in unduly hampering the Committee on Expenditures in the very important program of economy in which it is engaged on its own account.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF CERTAIN BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS CHALLENGED

I now want to deal with another class of resolutions which would give the President almost limitless powers of reorganization and which, in my judgment, seeks to bestow upon him functions which are peculiarly legislative in character. Among these may be mentioned House Joint Resolution 298, by Mr. SIMMONS; House Joint Resolution 302, by Mr. HOLADAY; Senate Joint Resolution 76, by Mr. GEORGE; and House bill 9492, by Mr. DALLINGER.

I believe in the soundness of segregating the executive, legislative, and judicial functions of government. Their separation is laid down as fundamental to the maintenance of a republican form of government in the Federal Constitution. So important is the principle involved that I am unwilling, even to gain some temporary advantage, to yield any of the prerogatives of the Congress to the President of the United States, however great or wise. The Executive is jealous of the powers granted him under the Constitution, and has rightly refused to permit Congress to impair them. Congress should guard with equal zeal its own distinctive functions.

For the sake of clarity, and with the permission of my distinguished and able colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], I have selected for discussion his bill, H. R. 9492, now pending before the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. There is no "nigger in the woodpile" in this bill. It is entirely honest. Its terms are clear and explicit. Under its terms the President could reorganize the Government in any way that he thought in the interest of efficient administration and service to the public.

ANALYSIS OF BILL

Under the Dallinger bill (H. R. 9492) the President is "authorized and empowered":

First. Section 1: To remove from office all officers and employees appointed by him or by heads of departments whether in the classified service or not.

Second. To abolish "all departments, divisions, bureaus, and commissions by him found to be unnecessary."

Third. Section 2: After dismissal of officers and employees and "reorganization of any department, or any division or bureau thereof" to restore such reorganized activities to the classified service.

Fourth. Section 3: "To appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate such employees and officials as he deems best for the service."

Fifth. To "establish by proclamation any new department, division, bureau, or commission that he deems necessary for the public business; and * * * to transfer divisions and bureaus from one department to another, and to consolidate or combine departments, divisions, bureaus, and commissions * * * as he deems best for the public service."

POWERS GRANTED LEGISLATIVE IN CHARACTER

Under this bill, for example, it is clear that the President is authorized, should he deem it best for the public service, to abolish the War and Navy Departments and by proclamation to establish a new department of defense with a secretary at its head and under secretaries for war, navy, and aviation.

The establishment of executive departments and new governmental activities is peculiarly legislative in character and has been exercised by Congress since the foundation of our Government. Section 8 of Article I of the Federal Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to "raise and support armies" and to "provide and maintain a navy." The creation of the War Department and the Navy Department by the first Congress was in strict accord and compliance with the Constitution. That their creation or abolishment is a legislative function requiring judgment and discretion does not seem to me to admit of doubt.

An examination of the bill makes it clear that without the exercise of legislative power by the President the bill remains incomplete so that the legislative will has not been made fully known. There is nothing in the bill to indicate what departments shall be abolished nor what activities shall be consolidated, neither does it indicate what new ones shall be created. In order to make the bill operative, if enacted into law, the President must exercise his judgment and discretion with reference to these matters. Such agencies can not exist except by the legislative will, which must be expressed in statutory enactments. To permit the President to abolish or consolidate existing departments without indicating what departments are alluded to and to set up new ones whose functions are not indicated is to endow him with legislative power which is inhibited by the Constitution. 12 C. J. 840.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Would the gentleman's constitutional objections be cured if the President was to make recommendations and report back to Congress?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No. I do not think that would meet the constitutional objection, because his acts would not be legalized by the inaction of Congress.

Mr. LANKFORD of Virginia. Will the gentleman suggest who he thinks is better qualified to make the survey and regulations?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I am not going to discuss who is best equipped, but in view of the experiences of the committee of expenditures during the last few days, I am not so sure that Congress can reorganize the Government departments at all. Sooner or later we may have to seek some means, within the Constitution, to let the Executive do it.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I will.

Mr. FIESINGER. One of the criticisms of the bill by the gentleman is that it provides only six weeks to do this work.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. Is it not a fact that for 10 years there have been studies made of this matter, and that all the committee has to do is to recapitulate the work that has already been done and make a study of that?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. My guess is, and I am on the Select Economy Committee, that the committee will have to do a great deal of investigating on its own account. There is only one way, in my judgment, to get at reorganiaztion, and that is to know absolutely what the activities are in every department of the Government and what their functions are. This information is indispensable if we are to locate duplication. Until that is done the committee can not deal intelligently with the subject.

Mr. FIESINGER. Do not the studies that have already been made show that?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; the studies made in 1920 are of practically no value to-day. The committee will have to go over the entire subject again, notwithstanding the reports already made.

Mr. FIESINGER. There have been several studies since 10 years ago.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes, I know; and I am familiar with them.

Now, let me go back to the constitutional discussion where I left off.

LEGISLATIVE POWER CAN NOT BE DELEGATED

Cooley, in his sixth edition of Constitutional Limitations, at page 137, lays down the following as settled constitutional law:

One of the settled maxims in constitutional law is that the power conferred upon the legislature to make laws can not be delegated by that department to any other body or authority. Where the sovereign power of the State has located the authority there it must remain; and by the constitutional agency alone the laws must be made until the Constitution itself is changed. The power to whose judgment, wisdom, and patriotism this high prerogative has been intrusted can not relieve itself of the responsibility by choosing other agencies upon which the power shall be devolved, nor can it substitute the judgment, wisdom, and patriotism of any other body for those to which alone the people have seen fit to confide this sovereign trust.

In the case of the St. Louis Merchants Bridge T. Ry. Co. v. U. S. (188 Fed. 195), which involved the constitutionality of certain quarantine regulations of the Department of Agriculture, the court said:

But it (Congress) can not delegate its legislative power, its power to exercise the indispensable discretion to make, to add to, to take from, or to modify the law.

A leading case dealing with the subject is Field v. Clark (143 U. S. 649, 692–694), in which Justice Harlan states the law to be:

That Congress can not delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution. * * * "The true distinction," as Judge Hanney, speaking for the Supreme Court of Ohio has well said, "is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made." * * *

The legislature can not delegate the power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action to depend.

To abolish a department established by an act of Congress is in effect a repeal of the law creating it. Such a power can not be delegated to the President.

Directly in point is the case of Boston v. Chelsea (212 Mass. 127; 98 N. E. 620), in which the court says:

Power the exercise of which would affect the repeal of existing provisions of the general law may not be delegated. * * * Manifestly the determination of the functions of counties and the distribution of governmental authority among them is purely legislative in its nature. * * * Moreover, the effect of the report (of the commissioners) when confirmed by the court would be to repeal statutes now in force, which would of itself be a legislative rather than a judicial act.

Some years ago the Legislature of South Dakota authorized the State bank examiner to require State banks to keep their reserves on deposit within the State and to establish within the State "reserve cities." This law was attacked as being unconstitutional and in disposing of the case the Supreme Court of the State, in a well-considered decision, said, among other things:

The legislature has no power to delegate to an executive or ministerial officer authority to require reserves of any bank to be kept within the State, since such delegation would be in contravention of the State constitution which vests all legislative power in the legislature or retains it in the people through the initiative. * * *

The banking act does not provide that when the public examiner shall find and declare certain facts and conditions to exist, the whole or some portion of the reserves of State banks shall be kept within the State. Neither does it attempt to confer upon the public examiner authority to ascertain and declare facts or conditions as to cities within the State, whereupon certain cities shall become "reserve cities," and banks within such cities shall become "reserve banks."

St. Charles State Bank v. Wingfield (S. Dak.), 155 N. W. 776.

SIMILAR LEGISLATION

Congress has enacted into law a number of bills carrying provisions far less sweeping but somewhat similar to H. R. 9492. Among these is the act of February 14, 1903 (32 Stat. 830, par. 12), which reads that—

The President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by order in writing, to transfer at any time the whole or any part of any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific work, from the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior, to the Department of Commerce and Labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred by law upon such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof so transferred, shall be thereby transferred with such office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service, or the part thereof which is so transferred.

Under the authority of this provision the President has transferred the Patent Office and the Bureau of Mines from the Interior Department to the Department of Commerce (Executive Orders 4175 and 4239, March 17 and June 4, 1925; see also 34 Op. Atty. Gen. 500).

The act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 434) provides that:

The President is authorized to reorganize the customs service and cause estimates to be submitted therefor on account of the fiscal year 1914 bringing the total cost of said service for said fiscal year within a sum not exceeding $10,150,000, instead of $10,500,000, the amount authorized to be expended therefor on account of the current fiscal year 1912; in making such reorganization and reduction in expenses he is authorized to abolish or consolidate collection districts, ports and subports of entry and delivery, to discontinue needless offices and employments, to reduce excessive rates of compensation below amounts fixed by law or Executive order, and to do all such other and further things that in his judgment may be necessary to make such organization effective and within the limit of cost herein fixed; such reorganization shall be communicated to Congress at its next regular session and shall constitute for the fiscal year 1914 and until otherwise provided by Congress the permanent organization of the customs service.

The constitutionality of this provision does not appear to have been directly passed upon by the courts; but the President's plan of reorganization, communicated to Congress March 3, 1913, was put into effect and (with certain modifications) is undoubtedly in effect at present. It appears to have been recognized as valid by a Federal district court in Ferguson v. Port Huron & Sarnia Ferry Co. (13 Fed. (2d ser.) 489.)

The act of May 20, 1918 (40 Stat. 556, ch. 28), reads in part as follows:

For the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces, the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as, in his judgment, shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary, which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record: Provided, That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for six months after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or at such earlier time as the President may designate: Provided further, That the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued pursuant to this act and during the time that this act is in force: And provided further, That the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war. * * *

Should the President, in redistributing the functions among the executive agencies as provided in this act, conclude that any bureau should be abolished and it or their duties and functions conferred upon some other department or bureau or eliminated entirely, he shall repert his conclusions to Congress with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

The transfer of the Coast Guard from the Navy Department to the Treasury Department by the President, under authority of this act, was upheld by a Federal circuit court of appeals in United States v. Houston (273 Fed. 915). See also Hartsville Mill v. United States (271 U. S. 43, 45) and United States v. McFarland (15 Fed. (2d ser.), 825).

The act of June 15, 1929 (Public, 10, 71st Cong.), under the general head of "Avoidance of Duplication," contains this provision:

(e) The President is authorized, by Executive order, to transfer to or retransfer from the jurisdiction and control of the board the whole or any part of (1) any office, bureau, service, division, commission, or board in the Executive branch of the Government engaged in scientific or extension work, or the furnishing of services, with respect to the marketing of agricultural commodities, (2) its functions pertaining to such work or services, and (3) the records, property, including office equipment, personnel, and unexpended balances of appropriation, pertaining to such work or services.

Under this provision the Bureau of Marketing in the Agricultural Department has been transferred to the Farm Board.

DISCUSSION OF SIMILAR ACTS

The enactment of the first of these acts—1903—was clearly within the power of Congress, as it was limited to the transfer of bureaus and divisions "engaged in statistical and scientific work." What bureaus were so engaged was a question of fact for the President to decide, and their transfer under the law was an administrative function.

The 1912 act authorized the President to reorganize the Customs Service in pursuance of a policy laid down by Congress so as to bring the expenses of its operation within a specified sum. While the act gave the Executive some discretion and permitted him to exercise his own judgment as to the internal reorganization of the service, his duty with respect to such reorganization was quite clearly defined. Even so, the power granted to the President trenches closely upon congressional prerogatives that may not be delegated.

The act of May 20, 1918, was clearly a war measure, and it is doubtful whether its constitutionality can be sustained upon any other theory. The Congress was careful to limit its operation for the duration of the war and not to exceed six months thereafter. But even so, it is a cautiously guarded measure and is nowhere as sweeping in its terms as H. R. 9492.

The authority of the President is limited to "such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary" to meet the exigencies of the war. He was not authorized to abolish any activity created by law, but was required to report to Congress in the event that he should conclude that any bureau should be "eliminated entirely" or "abolished and its duties transferred to some other department." Upon such report Congress might take such action as it deemed appropriate.

The wary language used throughout this measure is highly suggestive of the thought that Congress felt that in enacting the law it was stretching its constitutional authority in delegating the power that it did to the executive branch of the Government.

The provision in the farm relief act is in all respects similar to the act of February 14, 1903, supra, and specifies the activities which may be transferred to the Farm Board. It was carefully drawn with a view to bringing it within the constitutional powers of Congress.

WHAT MAY BE DELEGATED

I am not unmindful of the long series of opinions that hold that the Congress may delegate authority to make needful rules and regulations to that part of the executive branch charged with the administration of the law, but the courts have repeatedly held that it is not competent for Congress to delegate to the President or the head of an executive department the power to declare what facts shall constitute an offense. The language of the act must be sufficient to fully declare and define the crime and affix the punishment. This can not be done by rule or regulation. (U. S. v. Louisville, etc., Ry. Co., 176 Fed. 942; U. S. v. Breen, 40 Fed. 402–403; U. S. v. 11,150 Pounds of Butter, 195 Fed. 657.)

Nor am I unaware of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which hold that Congress may delegate to the President or to an executive or administrative agency the application of general rules legislatively prescribed to particular situations and ascertained facts; that Congress may delegate the power to fill up details where it has indicated its will in the statute to be administered; that Congress may delegate the power to determine just, fair, and reasonable rates for the transportation of goods in interstate commerce; that to meet changing conditions and cost of production at home and abroad Congress may delegate the power to make readjustments of tariff rates within certain limits to give effect to the principle and standard upon which the statute proceeds; and that Congress may delegate the power to determine the facts or state of things upon which the statute shall become operative or nonoperative. (Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co., 224 U. S. 194 (see also 231 U. S. 423); United States v. Grimand, 220 U. S. 506; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, New Orleans & Texas Pacific Ry. Co., 167 U. S. 479; Hampton & Co. v. United States, 276 U. S. 394; Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649.)

CONCLUSION

But I have found no decision from which a conclusion can be reasonably drawn that such an act as is contemplated by H. R. 9492 would be constitutional. The legislative will is not made known with respect to what departments, bureaus, divisions, or activities shall be transferred, abolished, or consolidated. It lays down no principle or guide for the President to follow. It prescribes no facts or conditions to be ascertained by him upon which the statute shall become operative.

On the contrary, it delegates to him unlimited authority to disregard all laws with respect to the establishment of existing executive departments, and to set up new departments, agencies, and functions not contemplated or provided for by existing law.

It may be contended that the very general provision that the President may reorganize the executive departments in such manner as "he deems necessary for the conduct of the public business" is sufficient, but by no process of reasoning can this expression be held to be a declaration of the legislative will as to what departments shall be retained, abolished, or consolidated. Congress has not exercised any discretion in the matter whatsoever. On the contrary, the Executive is left free, without restriction, guide, or rule, to abolish any and all existing agencies and set up any sort of an executive organization that he sees fit without regard to whether such organization has any sanction in law. If the above observations are correct, the bill is perforce unconstitutional.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Congress has the power under the interstate commerce act to regulate the rates in interstate commerce, has it not?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Is it not a fact that Congress has delegated that entire power to the Interstate Commerce Commission? Has that act ever been declared unconstitutional?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. No; that has been upheld. I may say in that connection, however, that Congress in defining the powers of the commission endeavored to set up a yardstick for the determination of rates as a guide for the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it is because of this guide that the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the rate-making powers of the commission.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's legal argument. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is no question about the legality of Congress making the investigation proposed in the resolution adopted here a day or two ago?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Oh, none whatever.

Mr. FIESINGER. Is it the gentleman's contention that they could not effectuate the results of the investigation?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Oh, no; Congress can do that, certainly. That is its business.

Mr. FIESINGER. I thought the gentleman said that was impinging upon Executive authority.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Oh, nothing of the kind. On the contrary, I think the creation and elimination of Government activities is a legislative function. It is for Congress to declare what activities and bureaus we shall have, and not for the Executive. I do not think Congress has the right to delegate that to the President—the discontinuance of bureaus created by Congress. The Congress alone can repeal the law.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman have any question about the validity of legislation to authorize the different departments, the Secretaries of the Cabinet, for example, to organize in an administrative way their own departments and to consolidate bureaus and divisions in their departments?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That authority can unquestionably be delegated, if it does not go to the extent of permitting the abolition or removal of activities which are creatures of law. If they are creatures of law, I do not think we can delegate the authority to eliminate them, because that amounts to a repeal of the law which created them.

Mr. MAPES. Could not the same result be better accomplished by consolidating different bureaus, and perhaps eliminating part of the force in one bureau and cutting down the appropriation and in that way limiting the activity of the bureaus, than by a straight-out repeal of the law?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. There is no doubt about that. You can pinch them out by refusing appropriations. You can take bureaus and put them together and authorize the Executive to do that, because in that case you are not authorizing an executive officer to change or repeal the law which created the bureaus involved. If this Congress limits the appropriation to such an extent that they can not carry on, they are pinched out.

Mr. MAPES. As a matter of practical procedure, would not more be accomplished by authorizing the Secretaries to rearrange the work in their own departments, than to attempt to say that this or that particular activity should be abolished by legislation?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. That might well be so.

Mr. FIESINGER. As a practical proposition they would not do that, would they?

Mr. MAPES. I think as a practical proposition they are more apt to do that than Congress is. I think, with the urge now on the part of the public and on the part of the President, that the time is very opportune to get them to do it if they are given that authority.

Mr. FIESINGER. These bureaus are babies under the different Cabinet officers, and it is pretty hard to get a man to destroy his own baby, from a practical point of view.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, fortunately, the message of the President transmitted to Congress on February 17, 1932, and on the same day referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, recommending the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government, does not call for legislation of an unconstitutional character. The recommendations made are sound in principle and in the interest of economy and efficient administration, and the country will not look with favor upon any movement that tends to thwart its general purpose.

I have already pointed out some of the bills and resolutions introduced with a view to carrying out the recommendations in the President's message that I believe give to the President legislative authority.

There are some that do not, and among them is a carefully prepared bill by the learned gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER]. With his usual nice regard for constitutional limitations, he has succeeded in so drafting his proposal as to avoid constitutional pitfalls, though he certainly could not have proceeded much farther without at least getting into the twilight zone. He maintains a considerable measure of congressional control and at the same time insures that something effective and constructive will be done.

Yesterday I introduced H. R. 9695, which, if enacted into law, will enable the President to reorganize the executive, administrative, and regulatory branches of the Government along the lines suggested by him in his message.

I am very confident that if the President is given the authority granted in that bill, he will quickly bring together related activities, consolidate others, and put an end to much duplication and overlapping of functions and effort. Such reorganization will not only result in very large economies in the way of reduction of overhead but in greatly added efficiency. It will also have a very notable advantage for the public in that the people will know where to proceed to get services and not be compelled to go to a half dozen bureaus, as is now often the case, when desiring information or services that should be provided by a single agency. [Applause.]

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY].

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, first let me thank gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee—the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER]—for yielding me this time. I was apprehensive that because I am known as a Member of Congress who is opposed to the eighteenth amendment and the law for its enforcement, I would not be given time. I asked my good friend the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], if he would yield to me. He cordially refused to yield to me, because, evidently, he thought I might bring in the prohibition question.

I do not think the country is pleased with the way this House has been acting lately on heavy and unjustified prohibition enforcement appropriations.

A gentleman on the Committee on Appropriations objected to-day to grant five minutes to one of the leading Members of this House, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, when he wanted to explain to this House that there is a petition on the Speaker's desk which the Members might sign if they believed in signing it.

By a parliamentary maneuver the other day a large percentage of the Members of this House representing the wet sentiment of the American Legion, the American Federation of Labor, the American Bar Association, the American Medical Association, the American Bankers Association, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and a great majority of the people of the United States, as shown by the poll of the Literary Digest, were denied the right to vote by roll call on any prohibition phase of the bill under consideration, and a hospital item was substituted on a motion to recommit. That is not fair, and many people of the country will express their resentment. The drys of this House, who are in close districts, will pay the penalty for such tactics.

I wanted to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when he was explaining cuts in the Customs Bureau, in order to establish economies, about some prohibition-enforcement items which run into millions of dollars. I was in the Federal administrative service for nine and one-half years and was a customs official, and I know what I am talking about. I asked one of the highest officials in the Treasury Department what they were going to do about the customs border patrol when Canada put the embargo on liquor. He said:

> We will cut down our forces on the Canadian border because we can safely do so. There is very little liquor coming over now; but if Canada places an embargo on liquor exports, their officials are honest and efficient—they will shut out practically all the liquor.

Every one of our high officials say the Canadian preventive measures are efficient. Ogden Mills, Seymour Lowman, Admiral Billard, and Commissioner Eble say they are efficient. What are you going to do about it? The drys object to the border force being taken away, and they are only slightly cut down, although many men are needed on the southern front.

There is great wastage in the Customs Bureau on the Canadian border. There is great wastage in the Coast Guard on that border.

Speaking of fairness, I want to be courteous to the older Members of this House, to the dignified, able men who are members of the Committee on Appropriations.

One of the Members said facetiously the other day that the Committee on the Judiciary must be stacked because there was a sizable wet vote on this amendment which is now on the Speaker's desk. The Anti-Saloon League used to say, when they induced a candidate to run against me as a wet, but had him sign a statement that he would vote dry when he was needed to vote dry, that they would protect this fake wet as they had certain committees of the House "stacked," that is, loaded with enough dry votes to kill wet legislation in committee. What is the truth with regard to the Committee on Appropriations? This bill includes almost three times as much money for prohibition enforcement as the Justice Department bill, yet I challenge anyone to point out to me one wet among the six members of the subcommittee.

I challenge any Member to point out to me among the 10 members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Deficiency Appropriations one wet. I challenge the membership to name more than two wets of the six Members who handle the Justice Department appropriation bill. Does that mean that the Appropriations Committee is stacked with drys?

Everybody who has been in the service knows that the old honest American type of official in the Customs Bureau and the Coast Guard resents the terroristic prohibition enforcement activities that were pushed upon them. What did those six dry members do when they had the high officials of the Treasury Department before them to explain items? They did not ask them any embarrassing questions on prohibition enforcement.

There have been shootings, outrages, battles between State courts and Federal courts, much wastage, and yet no questions were asked of the Treasury officials which would embarrass them. There is a dispute as to whether we shall have many ships or more airplanes in the Coast Guard; whether the main functions of the Coast Guard are to save lives and property or prohibition enforcement, seeking with tremendous expense a needle in a haystack, one little sloop or motor boat carrying rum, in the broad reaches of our Atlantic and Pacific coast lines.

The other public business in which I think the House is deficient is its handling of the Government wheat bills which have come from the Senate. I again want to pay tribute to the Senate.

The Senate passed unanimously the Capper wheat bill providing for the distribution to starving men, women, and children and to starving livestock some 40,000,000 bushels of Government-owned wheat, which is a part of the 160,000,000 bushels which the Government bought in a vain effort to stabilize wheat prices in the country.

It also passed the Norbeck wheat bill, unanimously.

Senator CAPPER says that some of this wheat is now beginning to rot. It is costing the United States Government $28,000,000 per year for storage purposes and this money is being practically thrown away in a period when Congress fights desperately to cut a $5,000 appropriation which may have considerable merit.

About 10,000,000 bushels of this wheat is stored in Canada and some of the elevators are close to Detroit, such as those at Sarnia, at Goderich, Collingwood, and in the elevators at Canadian Lake Erie ports.

The United States Government is paying about $2,500,000 storage charges to Canadians for this wheat.

In the meantime there are millions of hungry men, women, and children in the United States to whom this wheat should be given, as many of these people are being fed out of the public treasury of city, county, and State welfare funds, which are raised through general taxation.

My native city of Detroit has almost gone bankrupt in paying out tens of millions of dollars to feed hungry men, women, and children.

Recently I have been told by school-teachers that there are at least fifty to sixty thousand school children who are going to school each day hungry, and their sufferings have been so heart-rending that teachers have provided funds out of their meager salaries to feed these children, although the city finances are in such desperate condition that in the near future these teachers may not be paid their salaries and may face payless pay days.

What kind of statesmanship is it to keep this wheat in warehouses in the United States and Canada when it is beginning to rot and when it is costing the United States Government $28,000,000 per year to maintain, while worthy Americans are starving?

I have protested vigorously on the floor of this House several times against this cruelty and selfishness, and I will keep protesting until this wheat is released and this economy is achieved and this philanthropy and welfare relief win out.

I have taken up with other Members on my side of the House, notably Mr. FISH and Mr. LAGUARDIA, both of New York, the urgency of putting through a petition under the liberalized rules of the House to discharge the House Agriculture Committee from further consideration of the Capper and Norbeck wheat relief bills. The House Agricultural Committee has considered the Capper wheat bill several times and has voted to keep the bill in the committee, thus practically to kill it.

I also aim to go on the air in nation-wide radio hook-ups to tell the people of the country about this vicious condition. I am confident that if the spigot of publicity is opened on this sort of tactics the House Agricultural Committee and the House will be compelled to act favorably.

When we get favorable action I am going to organize the public-welfare agencies of Detroit and Wayne County and of the American Legion and of the American Red Cross to rush this wheat, particularly in the form of flour and bread, to hungry men, women, and children in Detroit and Wayne County just as rapidly as possible.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein some data of official character in order to carry out the corollary of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, on Friday last a new star appeared in the legislative firmament; a new leader appeared on the floor of Congress; a new Moses to lead both parties into the promised land; a new Daniel come to judgment; and for fear that his remarks might not have received the attention which they deserved I want to call the attention of the Members to a few of the inconsistencies of those remarks. He starts off by saying:

> In the beginning I wish to state that in my opinion the opportunity that the present crisis affords this Democratic House of Representatives to bring the country out of chaos by enacting constructive legislation can only be measured by the needs of the rank and file of our people, which all of us admit are without parallel in the history of the Nation.

Then he asks the question:

> Has our party met the issues courageously or has it refused to accept the responsibilities that inevitably rest upon the shoulders of the victor?

He follows that by very severe criticism of practically everything his own party, the Democratic Party, has sponsored or has carried through during this session. Then, after getting through with this tirade of criticism he turns to ridicule and he places in the RECORD, at the expense of the taxpayers, a jingle which is nothing more or less than a piece of political apple sauce. He says:

When this legislation was suggested to Congress, it would have been ludicrous, had it not been so distressing, to see Democratic Congressmen falling over each other to support it.

In other words, everybody on that side of the House was out of step except this new leader who appeared on Friday last.

Then he turns to threats. He says:

Although I pride myself on being a Democrat, and despite the fact that I have swallowed many a bitter pill, sugar-coated with Democracy, I thank God that these are two sins against my people that I shall not have to answer for. I suspect I just do not know enough to follow the lead and have not sense enough to keep my mouth shut.

That was the nearest to a statement of fact that he made in his whole speech. Then he goes on to say:

I make this promise, however: If the leaders of my party do not go straight, I reserve the right to blaze my own trail.

I do not know what this gentleman from Georgia is going to do in his district or in his State, whether he is going to form a new party in opposition to the Democratic Party in the South or whether he proposes to go into some other section of the country in order to secure followers. Then he says:

When I go back to Georgia and render to my people an accounting, I shall meet them face to face, and not one of them can charge me with having forgotten the land of my birth, the tillers of the soil that nurtured me, nor the principles and policies of the party I love—the Democratic Party of Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and Wilson.

His excuse for taking the floor on Friday last was to advocate a piece of legislation which he had introduced but which the Presidents he mentioned as being the idols of the Democratic Party would have vetoed had it been passed by Congress, because it is an absolute repudiation of what I understand to have been the attitude of these great leaders of Democracy.

Now he comes to another phase. He flatters himself that he is receiving a tremendous amount of support and he says:

I find now that many of our Democratic Senators and Representatives are beginning to think as I think, and some of them are beginning to talk as I talk.

The new Democratic leader.

He says:

Nor do I care whether or not I am returned to Congress. I would much prefer to return to my people from Congress with a clear conscience and possessed of that satisfaction that comes to those only who are courageous and unafraid to answer "Here am I" when duty calls.

A splendid sentiment. I am reminded of a story which Tom Heflin used to tell in old Congress Hall about a man who was going along the street and saw a large crowd gathered on the corner. He asked a negro who was standing near by what the man was talking about, and the old negro said, "Well, sah, I don't know what he is just talking about, but he do sure recommend hisself highly." [Laughter.]

I will not attempt to go through all of his speech, but I will call your attention to the insertion in the RECORD, absolutely against the policy which has been established by this House, and again at the expense of the taxpayers, of an editorial from a paper published in his district, which "sure do recommend him highly."

This man may have talked for home consumption only, for I am sure he does not represent the bulk of the Democratic Party and I do not believe he represents on this floor anyone but himself. He criticizes his own party for the part it has played in an endeavor to bring about a restoration of confidence and to meet the present serious crisis for the sake of making political capital for himself.

I hold no brief for the Democratic Party. There are men enough on that side of the House who are abundantly able to take care of any reflections and aspersions that are cast upon them or upon their party. I do, however, feel called upon to refute the statement he made in reference to President Hoover and to present facts which prove his inaccuracy or ignorance. Again I quote from his remarks in the RECORD:

Our President had already told us in plain English what his attitude would be toward the unfortunates throughout the country when the people of the Mississippi Valley were dying like rats from hunger and exposure. Disaster had already overtaken them and they were naked and suffering when relief for them was suggested. Despite the fact that America had previously helped the people of other nations in times of peril and disaster, Mr. Hoover proclaimed from the housetops that the Government should not contribute one dollar for relief. Will Rogers and others of his type had to go about the country and raise the $20,000,000 of funds that were needed for this purpose as best they could.

These are the gentleman's views upon a series of events familiar to a large majority of the Members of this House; and they are so at variance with the facts of record that I can only explain his statement by quoting his own words of a few moments later, when he said:

My trouble may be that I am lacking in experience. I was not elected to Congress until September 10, 1931.

That possibly does explain it. It is possibly also a specimen of the abuse which the President of the United States is subjected to by some political partisans who do not allow the facts to cramp their style.

The President never used any such terms or implications as the gentleman states. Furthermore it was President Hoover's prodigious and effective efforts in behalf of the sufferers from the drought of 1930 of the South which saved that situation. The facts are so familiar to the Democratic Members of the preceding Congress that I am sure no one of them would have made charges so patently mistaken.

Very briefly I shall recapitulate exactly what those measures were for the information of the gentleman from Georgia:

On August 5, 1930, President Hoover was the first to announce the impending drought and stated that he had ordered the Department of Agriculture to undertake a detailed survey of the drought situation and to report upon the condition in each area in the country.

Three days later President Hoover issued a detailed analysis of the situation based upon these reports outlining its probable effect both on the people and their livestock. He showed that the livestock would quickly be affected and that a food shortage would develop later in those areas. He had persuaded the railroads to reduce freight rates by one-half so that cattle could be shipped from stricken areas to unaffected feeding grounds, and so that feed could be shipped to the cattle in stricken areas where that procedure would solve the problem and directed the Farm Board to provide loans and assistance in providing feed. He pointed out further that:

There will be a great deal of privation among families in the drought areas due to the loss of income and the financial difficulties imposed upon them to carry their animals over the winter. The American people will proudly take care of the necessities of their countrymen in time of stress or difficulty. Our first duty is to assure our suffering countrymen that this will be done, that their courage and spirit shall be maintained, and our second duty is to assure an effective organization for its consummation.

This statement made on August 8, 1930, bears no resemblance to the views attributed to the President by the gentleman from Georgia.

Six days later the President invited the governors of 10 of the drought-stricken States, who, with the proxies of three others, conferred in person with the President in Washington, to decide on the form which the cooperation of the Federal Government should take. This conference agreed that the governors should appoint State drought committees, and that the President should appoint a national drought committee to cooperate with them. In reporting the conclusions of the conference the President said that information secured by State and National surveys had been carefully canvassed and that while—the extent of the damage can not yet be determined, it is certain there are at least 250 counties most acutely affected where some degree of relief must be provided.

The procedure of appointing committees was promptly followed by all parties concerned, including President Hoover, who named for the national committee the chairmen of the Federal Farm Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Federal Reserve Board, the Red Cross, and the Under Secretary of the Treasury, the president of the American Railway Association, and a distinguished banker.

The President said, in naming the committee on August 19, that continuing reports confirm the severity of the situation and the inevitability of distress over the winter in the acutely affected counties, which "now apparently number something over 300." Evincing his grasp of the problem, he asserted that the relief would be much more exacting "over the winter than at the present moment."

On the same day he received a telegram from Governor Holloway, of Oklahoma, expressing his "full approval of the steps you are taking to aid the drought-stricken areas of the country."

The national committee functioned actively and effectively throughout the drought emergency, under the personal leadership of President Hoover. The agencies embraced in this committee at once provided credits and other assistance. At the request of the President's call to duty, the American Red Cross in August established at once a preliminary fund of $5,000,000 and organized agencies for the distribution of relief in every county where help was needed.

When Congress convened in December of 1930 President Hoover's first message recommended appropriations to rehabilitate the stricken farmers.

The President called upon Congress in a communication dated January 5, 1931, to appropriate $45,000,000 for this purpose, and Congress answered the call.

The President directed the Department of Agriculture in creating an organization which effectively did its part in the problem.

On January 13, 1931, the President issued a powerful appeal to the people of the United States to contribute immediately a further $10,000,000 to the Red Cross for human relief in the drought areas.

To make the appeal fully effective, the President, on January 18, assembled a committee of 100 leading citizens, announcing that a national emergency was being faced, that the people in the drought-stricken areas were not in a position adequately to help themselves, that the American way of meeting the situation was through voluntary effort, and that such effort for years had been centered in the American Red Cross. Despite the times, the appeal met with immediate response, and the $10,000,000 was provided, making a total of $15,000,000 for human relief. With these funds, over 3,000,000 people were provided with food and clothing and medical attention. Not only was any and all suffering prevented, but a new and abundant crop was assured for that year.

For the information of the gentleman from Georgia, it may be well to explain the status of the Red Cross. He may, perhaps, indulge the common error of supposing that this great organization is a purely private affair, run by well-meaning people of kind heart in the haphazard fashion all too common in purely humanitarian enterprises.

On the contrary, the facts are that the full name of this society is the American National Red Cross, and that it is the official disaster and emergency agency of the Federal Government, listed in our own Congressional Directory along with the other independent offices and establishments of the executive branch of the Government. The President of the United States is the president of the Red Cross, and when he calls upon the American people for funds to relieve human suffering, he addresses them in his official capacity, and his call is heeded by the people as a moral obligation upon their voluntary generosity. No system of enforced taxation approaches this ingenious system of self-taxation in promptness, equity, and effectiveness. The complete success was a splendid indorsement of the wisdom of President Hoover and an indication of his good judgment. It is one of the most remarkable evidences of the powers latent in self-government, and possible only in a free and generous nation like ours.

To resume, the President delivered a radio appeal from the White House on January 22, urging his fellow citizens to contribute promptly and in accordance with their means to aid their stricken fellow countrymen. It was this appeal that made absolutely certain the Red Cross would not lack for funds.

I regret to add that the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia, disparaging the zealous sympathy and practical help of President Hoover in drought relief, comes with particularly poor grace from a representative of his particular State. Under President Hoover's recommendations and appeals, over $65,000,000 was provided for these people. Of all the States benefiting by this great sum, only one other State (and that another Southern State) received anywhere near so large a share as did the gentleman's own State of Georgia.

The South, more than any other section of the country, has benefited from the humanitarian actions of the President, whether in time of drought or in time of flood. I have recounted very briefly the record of the President in the aid of the drought sufferers. For the benefit of the gentleman from Georgia, I wish merely to add that the President has been equally zealous in his efforts in behalf of flood victims in his own section of our country. The Mississippi flood found his services instantly available. He went to the aid of the victims of that disaster, providing care for 1,500,000 people and raising $25,000,000 to aid them. I trust this brief summary will contribute to the understanding of the gentleman from Georgia. I suggest to him with all kindliness as he begins his career in statesmanship that he ascertain the accuracy of the statements he makes before he resorts to oratory.

And this goes, gentlemen, for his criticisms of the Democratic Party and his reflections and misstatements with regard to President Hoover. At this point I will insert in the RECORD the data which I mentioned in my request for extension of remarks.

In a statement issued the President said:

AUGUST 5, 1930.

The drought situation has been the subject of several conferences between Secretary Hyde, Chairman Legge, and myself. The Department of Agriculture has undertaken a detailed survey of the situation. They will report next Monday upon the condition in each area in the country. The information so far indicates great variation in the effect of the drought, both as between States, between counties in those States, and even between farms in the same counties. There can be no doubt as to its most serious character in many localities, and that unless relieved there will be real suffering. The maximum intensity seems to lie in a belt roughly following the Potomac, the Ohio, and the Mississippi Rivers.

The measures of assistance that the Farm Board and the other agencies of the Federal Government can and should undertake are being determined. It is evident already that large measures of feed movement to livestock in the drought areas, or movement of animals out of the worst areas, will need be undertaken later in the fall. It is too early to determine the precise character of relief; much depends upon the further spread of the drought, but no stone will be left unturned by the Federal Government in giving assistance to local authorities. I have asked the railways to investigate the situation from a transportation point of view.

The President said:

AUGUST 8, 1930.

As a result of conferences of the last few days, which embrace the Cabinet, members of the Farm Board and the Farm Loan Board, together with Presidents Thompson, Tabor, and Huff of the farm organizations, I have decided to ask the governors of the States most acutely affected by the drought to meet with us in Washington next Thursday in order to consider definite plans for organization of relief. Such organization will need first to be undertaken by the States, and through them the counties, with whom the various Federal agencies can cooperate.

I now have the preliminary survey of the Department of Agriculture of the situation as of August 1. It shows that the shortage of animal feed crops is most acute in southeastern Missouri, northern Arkansas, southern Illinois, southern Indiana, southern Ohio, Kentucky, northern West Virginia, and northern Virginia, with spots of less dimensions in Montana, Kansas, Iowa, and Nebraska—the latter three States being the less acutely affected. I shall ask the governors of those States to attend. The feed crops in some other States are also reduced, the amount of ultimate reduction depending upon rain during the next two weeks. It may develop that we shall need to ask the governors of one or two other States also to attend. In any event, in the most acute areas we should now lay the foundation for effective local and State organization, the object of which is to prevent suffering amongst farm families deprived of support, and to prevent the sacrifice of livestock more than is necessary.

In the acutely affected area which I have mentioned there are approximately 1,000,000 farm families who possess approximately 2,250,000 horses and mules, 6,000,000 cattle, and 12,000,000 hogs and sheep. This represents approximately 12 per cent of the animals in the country. Obviously the individual farmers in the acute area are differently affected. Their losses run all the way from a few per cent up to their entire animal feed crops. The actual numbers who are in distress will, therefore, be less than those gross figures.

Secretary Hyde has instructed the county agents to make a further, more searching, and definite report upon the later progress of the drought and the nature of the relief that will be necessary in the different counties. We are in hopes that we shall have this information in hand ready for the meeting of the governors.

The situation is one to cause a great deal of concern, but it must be borne in mind that the drought has mainly affected animal feed, the bulk of the direct human food production of the country being abundantly in hand. Nevertheless, there will be a great deal of privation among families in the drought areas due to the loss of income and the financial difficulties imposed upon them to carry their animals over the winter. The American people will proudly take care of the necessities of their countrymen in time of stress or difficulty. Our first duty is to assure our suffering countrymen that this will be done, that their courage and spirit shall be maintained, and our second duty is to assure an effective organization for its consummation.

The President reported the following conclusions have been so far arrived at by the conference:

AUGUST 14, 1930.

We have canvassed the information secured by State and national surveys as to drought conditions. While the extent of the damage can not yet be determined, it is certain that there are at least 250 counties most acutely affected where some degree of relief must be provided. It was the view of the conference that the burden of effective organization to meet the situation over the winter in the acutely affected counties rests primarily upon the counties and the States themselves, supplemented by such cooperation and assistance as may be found necessary on the part of the Federal Government.

The objective of such relief is:

(a) To assist families over the winter who are deprived of means of support through failure of their crops.

(b) To prevent unnecessary sacrifice of livestock.

(c) Protection to public health.

This is to be accomplished by:

(a) Placing of loans privately or where necessary with assistance of State or national agencies.

(b) Red Cross assistance.

(c) Employment.

(d) Reduced railway rates for food, feed, and livestock to the distressed districts.

This relief can be achieved justly and effectively only upon, first, a determination of the counties where such assistance is required; and, second, upon an accurate determination of the needs of each family. In order that such determinations may be made and assistance supplied as each case may require, the following organization is agreed upon:

1. Each governor who considers that a situation requiring emergency relief exists within his State shall create a drought-relief committee under the chairmanship of a leading citizen, and embracing in its membership a State agricultural official, a leading banker, a Red Cross representative, a railway representative, and such farmers and others as the situation may require. This committee to take general charge of relief measures within the State.

2. The State committee to determine the drought counties where there is need for organized relief and to organize a committee in each such county, likewise under the chairmanship of a leading citizen, and embracing the county agricultural agent, a leading banker, county Red Cross leader, farmers, and others.

3. The county committees will receive individual applications for relief and recommend the method of treatment and coordinate the various agencies in service thereto by way of loans, Red Cross assistance, employment, etc., the State committees, in cooperation with the county committees, to determine which counties are in need beyond the resources of the people of the county and in what direction, i. e., whether loans are required beyond the ability of the local banks or Red Cross assistance beyond the resources of the county chapter, what quantities of imports of feed or food are required, etc., the State committee to cooperate with national agencies if these requirements are beyond the State resources.

4. The President will set up a committee comprising representatives of the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Farm Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Red Cross, the American Railway Association, the Public Health Service. This committee, through its chairman, will coordinate national activities and national support to the State and county committees.

5. The methods for provision of credit beyond local or State resources for the purchase of feed, seed, movement of livestock, or support of families over the winter will be developed by State committees in cooperation with the Federal Farm Board, the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Intermediate Credit System, and other Federal agencies.

6. The Red Cross will organize its own committees in each drought county, the chairman of which will be a member of the county drought-relief committee. The National Red Cross has made a preliminary allocation of $5,000,000 pending determination of the aggregate need.

7. The railways have already generously reduced rates by 50 per cent on food and feed inward to the drought counties and livestock movement outward to dealers and persons who are entitled to relief and so designated by the county agents or the committees created above.

8. The Department of Agriculture will secure and disseminate information as to sources of feed supply and localities to which livestock may be shipped. It will examine the possibilities of advancing State road allotments to drought areas in order to increase employment.

9. In the States of Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, and others having a surplus of feed, it is recommended that a State committee be set up to cooperate with the committees in the States of surplus livestock.

AUGUST 14, 1930.

The following participated in the President's conference on drought relief: The President; the Secretary of Agriculture; Governor Caulfield, of Missouri; Governor Emmerson, of Illinois; Governor Leslie, of Indiana; Governor Cooper, of Ohio; Governor Conley, of West Virginia; Governor Pollard, of Virginia; Governor Erickson, of Montana; Governor Weaver, of Nebraska; Governor Hammill, of Iowa; Governor Reed, of Kansas; Harvey T. Harrison, as proxy for Governor Parnell, of Arkansas; Senator Robsion, as proxy for Governor Sampson, of Kentucky; Commissioner Fitts, as proxy for Governor Horton, of Tennessee; Mr. Alexander Legge, Federal Farm Board; Mr. James C. Stone, Federal Farm Board; Mr. Charles S. Wilson, Federal Farm Board; Mr. Horace Paul Bestor, farm loan commissioner, Federal Farm Loan Board; Judge John Barton Payne.

The President said:

AUGUST 19, 1930.

In accordance with the conclusions of my conference with the governors, I have appointed Secretary Hyde to undertake coordination between Federal and State activities as chairman of the National Drought Committee. The members of this committee are: Chairman Legge, of the Federal Farm Board; Chairman Bestor, of the Federal Farm Loan Board; Governor Young, of the Federal Reserve Board; Chairman Payne, of the Red Cross; Chairman Aishton, of the American Railway Association; Under Secretary of the Treasury Mills; Mr. Henry M. Robinson, chairman of the First National Bank of Los Angeles.

These members from the different national organizations will appoint alternates or additional members from those agencies from time to time to undertake the special problems before the committee. Mr. Robinson has consented to serve on the committee for purposes of coordinating Federal with State and private credit activities. The headquarters of the National Drought Relief Committee are being set up in the Department of Agriculture.

The governors of the various States are moving rapidly in the creation of their organizations. The Governors of Illinois and Virginia have reported their committees, comprising men of high leadership in their States. Their State committees are:

Illinois: Melvin A. Traylor (banker), Chicago; E. N. Hurley (manufacturer), Chicago; Earl C. Smith (president Illinois Agricultural Association), Pittsfield; Victor A. Olander (secretary-treasurer Illinois Federation of Labor), Chicago; L. A. Downs (president Illinois Central Railroad), Chicago; Harvey J. Sconce (farmer), Sidell; Julius Postel (miller and farmer), Mascoutah; John M. Krebs (farmer, banker, and representative of Red Cross), Carmi; Stuart E. Pierson (director department of agriculture), Springfield.

Virginia: Ex-Governor Harry Flood Byrd, chairman; Frederick W. Scott (banker), A. C. Needles, R. H. Angell (representative Red Cross), John R. Hutcheson.

These committees are already actively creating their county organizations.

Continuing reports confirm the severity of the situation and the inevitability of distress over the winter in the acutely affected counties, which now apparently number something over 300. The rains of the last few days have stemmed the spread of the drought and greatly improved the situation outside of the acutely affected area. In those areas the destruction of crops has proceeded to a point that is beyond any great degree of recovery, although pasturage should improve. It must be borne in mind that from a relief point of view the burden of the problem in the acute area will show very much more vividly over the winter than at the present moment.

I have received from all sections of the drought area high appreciation of the railways for their prompt and constructive action. It is a notable act of courageous cooperation and has been undertaken in the face of seriously reduced income due to the depression. It emphasizes the public interest of maintaining the strength and financial stability of our railways that they shall be able to cooperate in times of national difficulty.

In order that there may be no failure to cover any case of distress pending the time when the States have completed their detailed organization, the Red Cross has given instructions to all their county agencies to take care of the situation.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., August 19, 1930.

The PRESIDENT, Washington, D. C.:

As the Governor of Oklahoma, I wish to express my full approval for the steps you are taking to aid the drought-stricken areas of the country. I thank you for your telegram of to-day advising that Oklahoma will receive your full cooperation and assistance in your plans. To-day we perfected the organization of a state-wide drought committee, which I appointed last Saturday. In a few days we will have perfected the full organization down to the counties, as suggested by you in press reports. The Oklahoma committee will cooperate 100 per cent with Federal Government in bringing about necessary assistance to those States which need it. At our meeting to-day I stated to the state-wide committee that while I fully appreciated the wise and timely steps being taken by the Federal Government, I thought it was a mistake for Oklahoma to expect the Federal Government to do anything for Oklahoma which Oklahoma could do for herself.

Our State is rich in resources, and our citizens expect to do everything possible themselves to relieve situation. I think it unjust and unwise for any State to expect the Federal Government to furnish all the aid necessary in this crisis. While we are anxious for any and all benefits that the Federal Government may furnish Oklahoma, yet you may expect Oklahoma to do her full part in solving her own problems.

Governor W. J. HOLLOWAY.

AUGUST 20, 1930.

The following additional State drought committees have been reported to the President:

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., August 19, 1930.

The PRESIDENT,

The White House, Washington, D. C.:

The following men will constitute the state-wide drought relief committee for Missouri: L. W. Baldwin, of St. Louis, president Missouri Pacific Railroad; John G. Lonsdale, of St. Louis, president Mercantile Commerce Bank & Trust Co. and president American Bankers Association; F. B. Mumford, of Columbia, dean of Missouri College of Agriculture; Sherman Houston, of Malta Bend, widely known farmer; Walter S. McLucas, of Kansas City, chairman of board, Commerce Trust Co.; Russell Dearmont, of Cape Girardeau, State senator, representing Red Cross; and Arnold G. Stifel, of St. Louis, broker.

HENRY S. CAULFIELD.

FRANKFORT, KY., August 19, 1930.

The PRESIDENT,

The White House.

I have to-day appointed the following persons as members of the Drought Relief Committee for Kentucky: Hon. Harry Volz, of Zorn & Co. Seed & Grain Co., Louisville (chairman); Hon. C. Frank Dunn, secretary Kentucky Progress Commission, Frankfort and Lexington; Hon. Newton Bright, Commissioner of Agriculture, Frankfort; Dean Thomas Cooper, Agricultural College, University of Kentucky, Lexington; Hon. A. B. Sawyer, president Kentucky Farm Bureau, St. Matthews; Hon. Nicholas Dosker, vice president Louisville Trust Co., Louisville; Hon. W. E. Morrow, secretary board of trade, Louisville; Hon. Marion Rust, American Red Cross, Columbus; Hon. Addison R. Smith, vice president and traffic manager L. & N. R. R., Louisville; Dr. A. T. McCormack, secretary State board of health, Louisville; Hon. D. C. Stimpson, farmer and lumber dealer, Owensboro; Hon. Curtis Park, farmer and legislator, Richmond; Col. W. A. Thomasson, farmer and breeder, Paris; Hon. Joe McCarroll, banker, farmer, Hopkinsville; Hon. Charles Land, president Farmers Union, banker and farmer, Lexington; and we are ready to proceed with the work, having already compiled a great deal of information and in large part completed survey of conditions. District and county organizations are being perfected.

FLEM D. SAMPSON, Governor.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., August 19, 1930.

The PRESIDENT,

The White House:

Drought relief committee appointed and organized: J. H. Skinner, director of experiment station and extension service, dean of agriculture, Purdue University (chairman); Albert Wedeking, chairman State highway commission (secretary); William H. Skettle, president Indiana Farm Bureau; Elmer Stout, president Indiana Bankers Association; William Fortune, director Indiana Red Cross.

Gov. HARRY G. LESLIE.

DES MOINES, IOWA, August 18, 1930.

Hon. HERBERT HOOVER,

The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR PRESIDENT: As a result of the conference and in accordance with your wish, I have appointed the following persons to represent Iowa on the drought committee: Mark G. Thornburg, secretary of agriculture, Des Moines; H. H. Epperson, Sioux City; Earl Elijah, Clarence; W. Harold Brenton, Dallas Center; W. G. C. Bagley, Mason City; C. J. Weiser, Decorah; Roy Murphy, Burlington; Harry Hopley, Atlantic; R. M. Gunn, Buckingham.

I want to again commend your high purpose and fine spirit in the interest of the welfare of mankind in promoting this relief program for the drought district.

Believe me with high personal regards,

Very truly yours,

[From the President's message, December 2, 1930]

Aside from the misfortune to agriculture of the world-wide depression we have had the most severe drought. It has affected particularly the States bordering on the Potomac, Ohio, and lower Mississippi Rivers, with some areas in Montana, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. It has found its major expression in the shortage of pasturage and a shrinkage in the corn crop from an average of about 2,800,000,000 bushels to about 2,090,000,000 bushels.

On August 14 I called a conference of the governors of the most acutely affected States, and as a result of its conclusions I appointed a national committee comprising the heads of the important Federal agencies under the chairmanship of the Secretary of Agriculture. The governors in turn have appointed State committees representative of the farmers, bankers, business men, and the Red Cross, and subsidiary committees have been established in most of the acutely affected counties. Railway rates were reduced on feed and livestock in and out of the drought areas, and over 50,000 cars of such products have been transported under these reduced rates. The Red Cross established a preliminary fund of $5,000,000 for distress-relief purposes and established agencies for its administration in each county. Of this fund less than $500,000 has been called for up to this time, as the need will appear more largely during the winter. The Federal Farm Loan Board has extended its credit facilities, and the Federal Farm Board has given financial assistance to all affected cooperatives.

In order that the Government may meet its full obligation toward our countrymen in distress through no fault of their own I recommend that an appropriation should be made to the Department of Agriculture to be loaned for the purpose of seed and feed for animals. Its application should as hitherto in such loans be limited to a gross amount to any one individual and secured upon the crop.

The Red Cross can relieve the cases of individual distress by the sympathetic assistance of our people.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 5, 1931.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, amounting to $45,000,000, for the fiscal year 1931, to remain available until June 30, 1932, for the purpose of making advances or loans to farmers, as contemplated by the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of farmers in the drought and/or storm stricken areas of the United States," approved December 20, 1930.

The details of this supplemental estimate of appropriation, the necessity therefor, and the reason for its transmission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget transmitted herewith, with whose comments and observations thereon I concur.

Respectfully,

HERBERT HOOVER.

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, January 5, 1931.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith for your consideration a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, amounting to $45,000,000, for the fiscal year 1931, to remain available until June 30, 1932, for the purpose of making advances or loans to farmers.

Seed grain, feed, and fertilizer loan, 1931 ..... $45,000,000

The purpose of this supplemental estimate of appropriation is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of farmers in the drought and/or storm stricken areas of the United States," approved December 20, 1930. The funds provided by this estimate will, upon written application, be used in making loans or sales to farmers as contemplated by the joint resolution. A small part of the funds will also be used for salaries and expenses of employees whose services will be used in making and collecting the loans and for printing and miscellaneous expenses.

This estimate of appropriation is required to provide for legislation which has been enacted since the transmission of the Budget for the fiscal year 1931, and its approval is recommended.

Very respectfully,

J. CLAWSON ROOP,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDENT.

Supplemental estimate of appropriation required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, by the Department of Agriculture

Seed grain, feed, and fertilizer loan: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of farmers in the drought and/or storm stricken areas of the United States," approved December 20, 1930, including the employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, printing, purchase of law books not to exceed $1,000, rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for the collection of moneys due the United States on account of loans made thereunder, fiscal year 1931, to remain available until June 30, 1932, $45,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $80,000 may be expended for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia (submitted) ---------- $45,000,000

JANUARY 13, 1931.

To My Fellow Countrymen:

There must be a very material increase in the resources of the American Red Cross to enable it to bear the burden which it has undertaken in the drought area and smaller communities over 21 States during this winter. Within the last 10 days the Red Cross has had to increase the rate of expenditures to an amount greater than during the entire preceding four months.

The American Red Cross is the Nation's sole agency for relief in such a crisis; it is meeting the demand and must continue to do so during the remainder of the winter.

The disaster reserve of the Red Cross which was pledged to this emergency last August is not sufficient to meet the increased demands. It is imperative in the view of the experienced directors of the Red Cross that a minimum of at least ten million dollars be contributed to carry the relief program to completion.

The familiarity of this situation, due to months of press reports of its progress, should not blind us to the fact that it is an acute emergency, nor dull our active sympathies toward our fellow-countrymen who are in actual want and in many cases will lack the bare necessities of life unless they are provided for.

As President of the United States and as President of the American Red Cross, I, therefore, appeal to our people to contribute promptly and most generously in order that the suffering of thousands of our fellow-countrymen may be prevented. I am doing so with supreme confidence that in the face of this great humanitarian need your response will be immediate.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 18, 1931.

At the request of Hon. John Barton Payne, the chairman of the Red Cross, the President has invited a committee of leading citizens to sponsor and aid the National Red Cross and its local chapters in the drive for funds in aid of the drought sufferers. Acceptances have so far been received from Hon. Calvin Coolidge, honorary chairman; Hon. John Barton Payne, chairman; Hon. Alfred E. Smith, vice chairman; Hon. John W. Davis, vice chairman; Gen. John J. Pershing, vice chairman; Gen. Abel Davis, vice chairman.

Members: Mr. William E. Boeing, Seattle, Wash.; Mr. William Butterworth, Moline, Ill.; Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. Herbert J. Case, New York City; Mr. Winthrop Murray Crane, jr., Dalton, Mass.; Mr. William H. Crocker, San Francisco, Calif.; Mr. George Howard Crosby, Duluth, Minn.; Mr. Harvey C. Couch, Pine Bluff, Ark.; Mr. Charles I. Denechaud, New Orleans, La.; Mr. Charles Donnelly, St. Paul, Minn.; Mr. George Eastman, Rochester, N. Y.; Mr. Howard W. Fenton, Chicago, Ill.; Mr. Herbert Fleishacker, San Francisco, Calif.; Mr. William Fortune, Indianapolis, Ind.; Bishop James E. Freeman, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Joseph E. Friend, New Orleans, La.; Mr. Thomas S. Gates, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. William P. Gest, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. Walter S. Gifford, New York City; Cardinal Patrick J. Hayes, New York City; Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, Louisville, Ky.; Mr. Samuel Insull, Chicago, Ill.; Mr. A. Johnston, Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. Jesse H. Jones, Houston, Tex.; Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, St. Paul, Minn.; Mr. Thomas W. Lamont, New York City; Mr. John L. Lewis, Indianapolis, Ind.; Mr. John G. Lonsdale, St. Louis, Mo.; Mr. Ernest W. Marland, Ponca City, Okla.; Mr. Samuel Mather, Cleveland, Ohio; Miss Gertrude McNally, Washington, D. C.; Mr. John B. Miller, Los Angeles, Calif.; Mr. Frank Morrison, Washington, D. C.; Mr. Ralph T. O'Neil, Indianapolis, Ind.; Hon. Redfield Proctor, Proctor, Vt.; Mr. William Cooper Procter, Cincinnati, Ohio; Mr. George Rand, Buffalo, N. Y.; Mrs. Corinne Roosevelt Robinson, New York City; Mrs. F. Louis Slade, New York City; Mrs. John F. Sipple, Washington, D. C.; Mr. Myron C. Taylor, New York City; Mr. Melvin Traylor, Chicago, Ill.; Hon. Elbert Lee Trinkle, Roanoke, Va.; Mr. Felix M. Warburg, New York City; Mr. Daniel G. Wing, Boston, Mass.; Rabbi Stephen Samuel Wise, New York City; Mr. A. F. Whitney, Cleveland, Ohio; Dr. Mary Woolley, Holyoke, Mass.; Hon. Owen D. Young, New York City; Mr. Joseph Wayne, jr., Philadelphia, Pa.; Mr. William Green, president American Federation of Labor.

The President's request read as follows:

I am appointing a nation-wide committee to sponsor the American Red Cross effort to raise $10,000,000 for the relief of the sufferers in the drought-stricken areas. Mr. Coolidge has consented to act as honorary chairman. Knowing your public spirit, I am most desirous that you should be a member of this committee.

We are faced with a national emergency. Those in need in our larger cities are being and will be provided for through the generosity and self-reliance of the citizens of those communities. The people, however, in the drought-stricken areas in 21 States are not in a position adequately to help themselves and must look to their fellow citizens for temporary assistance.

The American way of meeting such a relief problem has been through voluntary effort and for many years this effort has been centered in the American Red Cross, created by the people themselves to act in just such emergencies. It has met its responsibilities magnificently in times of war and of peace.

It is essential that we should maintain the sound American tradition and spirit of voluntary aid in such emergency and should not undermine that spirit which has made our Red Cross the outstanding guardian of our people in time of disaster.

HERBERT HOOVER.

Speaking over the radio from the White House in connection with the Red Cross appeal Thursday evening, January 22, 1931, the President said:

The American Red Cross is a great voluntary organization, created by the people themselves, on whom the Nation places reliance in time of need. For some months the Red Cross has been providing for those of our fellow citizens who have suffered from the devastating effects of the long-extended drought. The area affected is roughly limited to the States bordering upon the Potomac, Ohio, and Mississippi Rivers, with limited acute areas in some Southwestern and Northwestern States. The people in this area lost a large part of their crops; and many thousands are even short of food supplies. The Red Cross now appeals for $10,000,000 of additional funds in order that that essential task may be adequately performed. There is no question but that they are needed. It is unthinkable that any of our people should be allowed to suffer from hunger or want. The heart of the Nation will not permit it. It is to the heart of the Nation that I am appealing to-night. I urge all of my fellow countrymen to contribute promptly and in accordance with their means. It is a call to citizenship and to generosity in time of trial, but it is a call for protection to our greatest American institution of charity and above all a call on behalf of those in need.

I want to take this occasion to thank the thousands of devoted members of the Red Cross throughout the land who in the drought-stricken areas are devoting their time and effort to the relief of suffering and in the other parts of the country to providing the means of doing so. In the face of calamity let us unite in a common effort to drive suffering and want from our country. There can be no higher duty. To the call of that duty the Nation will respond.

The President said:

FEBRUARY 3, 1931.

Certain Senators have issued a public statement to the effect that unless the President and the House of Representatives agree to appropriations from the Federal Treasury for charitable purposes they will force an extra session of Congress.

I do not wish to add acrimony to a discussion, but would rather state this case as I see its fundamentals.

This is not an issue as to whether people shall go hungry or cold in the United States. It is solely a question of the best method by which hunger and cold shall be prevented. It is a question as to whether the American people on one hand will maintain the spirit of charity and mutual self-help through voluntary giving and the responsibility of local government as distinguished on the other hand from appropriations out of the Federal Treasury for such purposes. My own conviction is strongly that if we break down this sense of responsibility of individual generosity to individual and mutual self-help in the country in times of national difficulty, and, if we start appropriations of this character, we have not only impaired something infinitely valuable in the life of the American people but have struck at the roots of self-government.

Once this has happened it is not the cost of a few score millions, but we are faced with the abyss of reliance in future upon Government charity in some form or other. The money involved is indeed the least of the costs to American ideals and American institutions.

President Cleveland, in 1887, confronted with a similar issue, stated in part:

"A prevalent tendency to disregard the limited mission of this power and duty should, I think, be steadfastly resisted, to the end that the lesson should be constantly enforced that, though the people support the Government, the Government should not support the people.

"The friendliness and charity of our countrymen can always be relied upon to relieve their fellow citizens in misfortune. This has been repeatedly and quite lately demonstrated. Federal aid in such cases encourages the expectation of paternal care on the part of the Government and weakens the sturdiness of our national character, while it prevents the indulgence among our people of that kindly sentiment and conduct which strengthens the bonds of a common brotherhood."

And there is a practical problem in all this. The help being daily extended by neighbors, by local and national agencies, by municipalities, by industry, and a great multitude of organizations throughout the country to-day is many times any appropriation yet proposed. The opening of the doors of the Federal Treasury is likely to stifle this giving and thus destroy far more resources than the proposed charity from the Federal Government.

The basis of successful relief in national distress is to mobilize and organize the infinite number of agencies of self-help in the community. That has been the American way of relieving distress among our own people and the country is successfully meeting its problem in the American way to-day.

We have two entirely separate and distinct situations in the country; the first is the drought area; the second is the unemployment in our large industrial centers; for both of which these appropriations attempt to make charitable contributions.

Immediately upon the appearance of the drought last August I convoked a meeting of the governors, the Red Cross, and the railways, the bankers, and other agencies in the country and laid the foundations of organization and the resources to stimulate every degree of self-help to meet the situation which it was then obvious would develop. The result of this action was to attack the drought problem in a number of directions. The Red Cross established committees in every drought county, comprising the leading citizens of those counties, with instructions to them that they were to prevent starvation among their neighbors and, if the problem went beyond local resources, the Red Cross would support them.

The organization has stretched throughout the area of suffering, the people are being cared for to-day through the hands and with sympathetic understanding and upon the responsibility of their neighbors, who are being supported in turn by the fine spirit of mutual assistance of the American people. The Red Cross officials, whose long, devoted service and experience is unchallenged, inform me this morning that except for the minor incidents of any emergency organization, no one is going hungry and no one need go hungry or cold.

To reinforce this work, at the opening of Congress I recommended large appropriations for loans to rehabilitate agriculture from the drought and provision of further large sums for public works and construction in the drought territory, which would give employment in further relief to the whole situation. These Federal activities provide for an expenditure of upward of $100,000,000 in this area, and it is in progress to-day.

The Red Cross has always met the situations which it has undertaken. After careful survey and after actual experience of several months with their part of the problem they have announced firmly that they can command the resources with which to meet any call for human relief in prevention of hunger and suffering in drought areas, and that they accept this responsibility. They have refused to accept Federal appropriations as not being consonant either with the need or the character of their organization. The Government departments have given and are giving them every assistance. We possibly need to strengthen the Public Health Service in matters of sanitation and to strengthen the credit facilities of that area through the method approved by the Government departments to divert some existing appropriations to strengthen agricultural credit corporations.

In the matter of unemployment outside of the drought areas important economic measures of mutual self-help have been developed, such as those to maintain wages, to distribute employment equitably, to increase construction work by industry, to increase Federal construction work from a rate of about $275,000,000 a year prior to the depression to a rate now of over $750,000,000 a year, to expand State and municipal construction—all upon a scale never before provided or even attempted in any depression. But beyond this, to assure that there shall be no suffering, in every town and county, voluntary agencies in relief of distress have been strengthened and created and generous funds have been placed at their disposal. They are carrying on their work efficiently and sympathetically.

But after and coincidently with voluntary relief, our American system requires that municipal, county, and State governments shall use their own resources and credit before seeking such assistance from the Federal Treasury.

I have indeed spent much of my life in fighting hardship and starvation both abroad and in the Southern States. I do not feel that I should be charged with lack of human sympathy for those who suffer, but I recall that in all the organizations with which I have been connected over these many years, the foundation has been to summon the maximum of self-help. I am proud to have sought the help of Congress in the past for nations who were so disorganized by war and anarchy that self-help was impossible. But even these appropriations were but a tithe of that which was coincidently mobilized from the public charity of the United States and foreign countries. There is no such paralysis in the United States, and I am confident that our people have the resources, the initiative, the courage, the stamina, and kindliness of spirit to meet this situation in the way they have met their problems over generations.

I will accredit to those who advocate Federal charity a natural anxiety for the people of their States. I am willing to pledge myself that if the time should ever come that the voluntary agencies of the country together with the local and State governments are unable to find resources with which to prevent hunger and suffering in my country, I will ask the aid of every resource of the Federal Government because I would no more see starvation amongst our countrymen than would any Senator or Congressman. I have the faith in the American people that such a day will not come.

The American people are doing their job to-day. They should be given a chance to show whether they wish to preserve the principles of individual and local responsibility and mutual self-help before they embark on what I believe is a disastrous system. I feel sure they will succeed if given the opportunity.

The whole business situation would be greatly strengthened by the prompt completion of the necessary legislation of this session of Congress and thereby the unemployment problem would be lessened, the drought area indirectly benefited, and the resources of self-help in the country strengthened.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. GUYER. Was President Hoover the first President who ever suggested any such thing or under whose administration was that done?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Perhaps he was the first President to be confronted with such a difficult problem. I do not say we have not had fire and flood and drought and other catastrophes before, but it seems as though everything under the canopy of heaven has come to plague this man since he took his seat in the White House, and no one in this country has ever shown a more earnest, a more honest, a more patriotic and unselfish effort to meet every situation and bring every possible avenue of relief to the stricken people of our country, irrespective of place or policies. It is almost beyond my imagination that a most bitter partisan should attribute to President Hoover the sentiments and statements contained in the speech which the Member from Georgia made on Friday last.

I have taken this floor at various times in defense of Congress. I am jealous of our public officials from the President down, and I think this constant reflection upon Congress, this constant reflection upon members of the Cabinet, this constant reflection upon the President of the United States only weakens the confidence of the people in their form of government; and if this form of government is not a success, to what are you going to turn?

A government with dictatorship, a government like the Soviet of Russia, a government without a head, a pure democracy, which has been absolutely futile and failed all through the years of history. This is the best form of government ever devised by the mind of man, framed by men actuated only by the highest motives, when they tried to build a firm foundation for this Government, and map out a true, safe course for us who follow after them.

Mr. PARSONS. Would the gentleman advocate the passage of an alien and sedition law against criticism that was justly due?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Oh, no; we differ on men and measures, and fight it out, but I do insist, as I have through all my remarks—and I speak of all my colleagues with the kindliest feelings—that a new Member of Congress should stick to the facts when he resorts to oratory, whether that be for his own personal political advantage, or whether it be for the purpose of arousing class hatred, prejudice, passion, partisanship, sectional, or racial sentiment. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee, I am greatly disturbed that the gentleman from Massachusetts should be displeased with the remarks I made on the floor of this House last Friday. I wish to say, however, that I made no attempt whatever to please him in what I had to say, as I shall not attempt to do on this occasion.

I am the last man who would say an unkind thing about the President of this great country of ours that is not capable of proof. I maintain that I made no statement in the speech that I made last Friday that is not true. I realize that I can not answer the gentleman from Massachusetts fully at this time. I shall get his speech after it shall have been reduced to writing and placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I will study it and see what he has said, and I promise you I will come back before you one day next week and reply to him in full. I will prove conclusively that I made no statement on last Friday that is not absolutely true.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, we are in the midst of the greatest emergency affecting the interests, welfare, and happiness of the American people that has occurred in the lifetime of any Member of this House. Up to now the Democratic Party, which is in power in the House of Representatives, which has organized this House and all of its committees, which has elected a very able and distinguished Member of the House to be its Speaker, and is at the present moment in control of the entire proceedings of the House, has failed to do anything to relieve the suffering and undernourishment among millions of our own people. I rise to ask what the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives has done in the last three months, or since the Democrats organized the House early in December, to relieve human misery in this great affliction? I have voted with the majority party in the House to relieve corporations, banks, and railroads.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Has not the gentleman's party control of the Executive branch of the Government, and has it not "bust" the Treasury?

Mr. FISH. That is not an answer to my question, but the weakest kind of evasion. I have voted with the majority party in this House to provide funds, millions of dollars, billions of dollars, to the corporations, to the railroads, and to the banks in this emergency, but I want to know from the Democratic leaders in all sincerity and good faith what they have done to relieve the human misery, suffering, and destitution, particularly among the millions upon millions of unemployed in our own country, where there is much undernourishment and virtual starvation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman has asked a question. Of course, I am not one of the Democratic leaders, and am only a private in the ranks.

Mr. FISH. Oh, I regard the gentleman from Alabama as one of the outstanding Democratic leaders.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman refer to relief for the destitute of the country by direct appropriations out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. FISH. I am referring particularly to those who are hungry, undernourished, destitute, and in absolute want and distress among our unemployed. I am urging that the Capper wheat bill be enacted into law immediately.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Who is the titular leader of the Republican Party in this country?

Mr. FISH. Oh, the gentleman knows that we are able to legislate in the House of Representatives, even under the Democratic organization, without suggestions from the White House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but does not the gentleman know, and will he not be fair enough to say——

Mr. FISH. I shall be fair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That the President of the United States, who is the leader of his party in this country, in his message to the Congress of the United States, expressed unalterable opposition to any act that might be passed by the Congress of the United States giving what he called a dole to the destitute of this country, so what good would it do for us to pass such a thing if we could?

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman refers to a dole or unemployment insurance, that is correct. I did not know that the Democratic Party stood for unemployment insurance or for the dole. I have heard none of their leaders express any such idea. What I am talking about is that some months ago the Senate of the United States sent over here, by unanimous vote, a bill introduced by one of the farm bloc Senators providing that 40,000,000 bushels of wheat owned by the Government of the United States be turned over to the National Red Cross to be processed into flour to be distributed by the Red Cross and other charitable organizations in the country wherever there was any distress, undernourishment, and hunger. That is not unemployment insurance or a financial dole placing a premium on unemployment.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yet the Democratic Party up to now has been deaf, dumb, and blind on this particular bill, and no action has been taken except to shelve it in the committee. I rise to ask when you expect to report that bill out to afford relief to millions of undernourished Americans, and give this grain owned by the Government to the Red Cross to be processed into flour and distributed wherever there is suffering and want in the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is that on the President's relief program?

Mr. FISH. That bill passed the Republican Senate and came over here by a unanimous vote, and you Democrats have the responsibility for legislation here. You organized the House, you organized the committees of the House, you have the absolute responsibility either to report that bill out or to kill it. The distinguished Democrat from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] has introduced an almost identical bill, and that is still pending in the committee. The Democratic Party in the House of Representatives has so far failed to do anything to relieve the misery of our people in this affliction or to relieve the distress, starvation, and undernourishment among millions and millions of American people who are not able to come into this House and voice their views and make their wishes known.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman know how the members on the Republican side of the aisle in committee voted on that proposition when it was being discussed, and certainly the gentleman knows what the President's attitude was toward relief last year, toward a similar measure to this, when it was up for discussion in the Seventy-first Congress.

Mr. FISH. I do not know how any single member of the committee voted and I do not believe it is right for any other member to make a statement on this floor as to how a member of his committee or any other committee voted, but I say that the Committee on Agriculture was organized by the Democratic Party and there is a Democratic majority on that committee and they must bear the responsibility for legislation. I do not think that any leading Democrat wants to shirk that responsibility.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Does the gentleman know how much it is costing to keep that wheat in storage now?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman from Indiana asks how much it costs to keep this wheat in storage. It costs between 15 cents and 18 cents a bushel. It costs approximately $24,000,000 per year to keep this wheat in storage. Is that correct?

Mr. LUDLOW. I think that is substantially correct. Can the gentleman give any reason on earth why this wheat should not be given to the hungry people of this country?

Mr. FISH. I can not give the slightest reason why this bill, which passed the Senate two months ago by unanimous vote, as an emergency measure, should not be passed. It had the support and vote of all the wheat Senators and the farm bloc. The purpose of my speaking at the present time is to try to find out why it is being held up.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. I, of course, agree with the gentleman that this House should pass the bill which I introduced. It is obvious that I would say that. What objection there can be to it I do not know, since this wheat is a dead load on the people of the United States and hangs like the sword of Damocles over the farmer. The best purpose in the world to which it can be put is to relieve hunger. I know the gentleman wants to be fair. The gentleman has shouldered the blame for killing this measure on the Democratic side.

I think it is a matter of understanding and it has been stated on the floor that all Members on the gentleman's side voted to kill it in the committee. So let us be fair. This should not be regarded as a political matter.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Is the gentleman making the charge that the Democratic members of the Committee on Agriculture are responsible?

Mr. FISH. Oh, not the individual members.

Mr. JONES. I challenge the gentleman to call the roll of the different members and ask them how they voted and see who is responsible.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows we can not do that. I will say to the gentleman I know how the gentleman voted himself in the committee. I do not know how other Members voted, but at the same time I do not think that it is in order to divulge individual committee votes in the House, because it is contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. JONES. I understood that was the very point the gentleman was making.

Mr. FISH. Not at all. I make the point that the Democratic Party is responsible for legislation in this House. The Democratic Party has organized the gentleman's committee.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman think the Democratic Party has the responsibility of whipping the Republican Members into line?

Mr. FISH. Not at all. If every Republican Member voted against the bill, it would not make any difference. The Democratic Party has a majority on the committee and in this House, and the responsibility is theirs.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman does not think there is any responsibility on the part of the Republican Members?

Mr. FISH. I do not yield any further, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to get into any controversy as to how individual Members voted in the Committee on Agriculture. All I am trying to do is to get some action on this bill or some similar bill, whether it is the bill introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] or the bill introduced by Senator CAPPER or some other bill; it does not matter.

Now, let us be fair. Is the gentleman trying to dodge the fact that the Democrats have a majority on his committee? Is the gentleman trying to dodge the fact that it is a Democratic committee, organized by the Democratic Party? Is the gentleman trying to shirk responsibility for legislation? That is all there is to it. Is the gentleman trying to have the Republicans legislate for him? If the gentleman wants to resign as chairman of the committee, or if the Democratic Party wants to resign as a majority, very well; but as long as the Democratic Party has the majority it has and must have the responsibility that goes with majority control.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I do not yield any further.

Now, I want to recall the fact that in 1921, when there was a famine in Soviet Russia, when human beings were starving on the banks of the Volga River—5,000 miles away—we appropriated in this House of Representatives $20,000,000 to relieve the suffering, destitution, and starvation in Soviet Russia. I want to recall to the Members of this House that in 1924 I introduced a bill providing $10,000,000 to send foodstuffs to the starving women and children in Germany. That bill passed the House of Representatives by a vote of two to one, authorizing the expenditure of $10,000,000, and yet, with all the distress in our own country, the richest nation in the world, with an overabundance of foodstuffs, with Government-owned grain bulging in every granary in the land, paying even to Canada $2,500,000 a year for extra storage of wheat owned by the Government, yet the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives has had two months to report the Capper bill passed unanimously by the Senate, but it is still buried in the archives of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Iowa. Does not the gentleman think we all have individual responsibility here, and does the gentleman not believe that we modified the rules in regard to bringing bills out of committee for the purpose of bringing out just such a bill as the gentleman is speaking of to-day, and does the gentleman not feel, under the circumstances, that the gentleman, as the champion of the people who are starving, ought to bring forth a petition in which I am sure a great many of us will join?

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion, and I assure the gentleman that within three days' time there will be a petition on the Speaker's desk for Democrats and Republicans alike to sign, and then we can definitely find out where the exact responsibility lies among the individual Members of the House, but in the meanwhile the Democratic majority can not evade its responsibility for orderly legislation in the House.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has been bawling around like a sick calf for about two months upon this proposition, as if it were a matter of life and death. The gentleman knows as well as any Member of this House that there is an individual responsibility on the part of the Members of the House, both in the House and in the committee, and that each individual Republican has a vote which counts as much in the committee as a Democratic Member's vote. There has never been any great amount of politics in the Committee on Agriculture. I do not feel at liberty to disclose how the different Members voted, but I challenge the gentleman from New York or anyone else to ask every individual member of that committee how he voted, and to put that vote in the RECORD. [Applause.] Then the gentleman will know, of a truth, that his party is more responsible than the Democratic Party, by the result of that vote.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield for a question.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman does not deny that the Democratic Party is in control, in membership, of the Committee on Agriculture, as well as other committees, and could bring out a bill if they wanted to?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman knows the slender majority the Democrats have in this House. He knows that all summer it was uncertain who would organize. He knows that in nearly all cases where there is a division of sentiment that division runs across party lines. He knows the difficulty in such circumstances of handling any measure unless some of the members of the other party will join.

This was not a partisan question, and the gentleman does himself no honor in endeavoring to make it so. In endeavoring to do so he grows very careless with his facts.

The gentleman assumes that the Members who opposed the measure—and they may speak for themselves—voted blindly, without any consideration of the facts.

I hold no brief for them, but I believe in fairness to them some of the reasons they assigned should be stated.

Another body which passed the measure did not have a line of hearings; it did not get any facts and did not get any basis for its action. The House committees try to proceed intelligently. It developed at the two days' hearings that if we were to go into this program that there were some both on and off the committee who felt that other commodities should be included. There were some cotton men on the committee who felt we should include cotton. There were some rice men on the committee who felt we should include rice. Some one suggested that the Farm Board had some coffee and that we might distribute some coffee; other commodities were suggested. Then it developed the board had money borrowed on this wheat, and that they would need a reappropriation of funds to reimburse them in order to enable them to carry out such a program. Some then claimed that if it were necessary to go into this kind of a program it would be better to take the money and buy wheat in the open market, because, perhaps, it could be bought cheaper in that way. Then it developed that if this program were as serious as some contended we had better adopt a bigger program which would take care of the situation and not have a measure that would be insufficient. That was the viewpoint of some of the Members and that was developed in the hearings.

The American National Red Cross did not recommend it. They said they would be willing to administer it if it were laid at their feet. I offer these facts to show that the Members who saw fit to withhold approval did not refuse to give the matter thought and consideration.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I would like to state for the information of the committee that the bill I introduced carried the verbiage which was suggested by the chairman of the Federal Farm Board so that at least it had that official approval.

Mr. FISH. What happened to the gentleman's bill?

Mr. LUDLOW. It is still in committee.

Mr. JONES. As I have stated, the representatives of the Federal Farm Board made a statement to the effect that there was money borrowed on this wheat and it would be necessary to have a reappropriation of funds in order to reimburse them. That was developed in the hearings.

There were many angles to the proposition and it was not at all a one-sided issue. There was a good deal of feeling on the part of those who saw the matter that way, and there were some Democrats and more Republicans who took this view. Many felt that if it became necessary for our country, with its many and varied resources, to keep people from starving, it would take a much bigger program than this to handle the situation.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. JONES. I do not mind stating how I stood on it. I voted for it. The gentleman accused the committee of smothering it, but they were not doing that. It was apparent there was a division of sentiment, and the Chair felt and stated in open meeting that anyone at any time might make a motion to report out that measure and he would recognize him for such purpose. [Applause.] That matter is in the RECORD. It was felt by some of them—and, I believe, by all of the members of the committee—that if it were a question of starvation, if the question became that serious, that a larger program would be required in order to keep people from starving. They felt that in view of certain developments and in the light of circumstances which had developed it might be wise, if the emergency grew to greater proportions, to recognize that to accomplish any great good it would be necessary to go into a much bigger program than that which was then under consideration.

I felt that as the Farm Board had the wheat, and it was costing something to carry it, it was more like discarding an old overcoat or an old suit of clothes that is not needed; that it was distinguishable from a dole; and for that reason I felt it would be wise to go ahead with that measure of relief; that it would relieve a portion of the suffering, and for that reason, under the circumstances, should be reported and passed.

However, I rose to state to the gentleman from New York that the statement which he makes that the Democratic Party is responsible for this action is unfair, unjust, and untrue. [Applause.] I challenge the gentleman to get a list of the committee vote. I believe every member would be willing to tell the gentleman how he voted, and I would suggest that the gentleman get such a list and put it in the RECORD.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas. The gentleman from New York stated that he introduced a bill, and secured its passage, to appropriate $10,000,000 for the starving people of Germany. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether the gentleman or any of his crowd in 10 years of Republican control, or the President of the United States, have made any suggestion about appropriating that much money for the relief of the starving people of the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. I think that question answers itself; but I will state to the gentleman from New York, inasmuch as he is talking about responsibility, that his party is responsible for getting the country into the debacle in which it finds itself to-day [applause], and it is ridiculous for him to say that 10 members of the Committee on Agriculture have no responsibility when it comes to voting and taking action in that committee and that the 13 members must get together in a solid phalanx on the Democratic side and expect the Republicans to indulge in sculduggery. This is a reflection on the gentleman's party that I do not join. Does the gentleman feel that his party, having gotten this country into its present sorry state, can escape all responsibility for helping to pull it out? Does he think that his party, having had tremendous majorities and with control of both branches and the Presidency for several years, and having adopted policies that have brought about the worst depression in our history—its members may now wash their hands of the whole affair? It is too much to hope that the Democrats can in a few weeks cure the results of 12 years' Republican misrule.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why does he ask that the 10 men be on the committee if they are not to assume any responsibility? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JONES. Anybody with a reasonable degree of intelligence, much less a man of the sharpness and brilliance of the gentleman from New York, knows he is playing the demagogue. [Applause.]

I would not have said anything if the gentleman had got up here and aired himself once. But every time he runs out of anything else to say, the gentleman gets up and jumps up and rehashes the same old speech describing a situation which his party is more responsible for than ours. There are problems—tremendous problems—that must engage the attention of the Congress and the Nation. They call for the best thought the Nation affords. A solution of these great problems will not be furthered by petty bickering and strife. Our country calls for a broader-gaged view than this. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Hastings.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to pursue this controversy any further. It is my hope to pour a little oil on the troubled waters and I am going to ask permission, in advance, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, part of our tax problem can be solved and much-needed revenue assured by the adoption of either the proposed tariff on foreign petroleum and its refined products or the imposition of an excise tax upon these. Neither the tariff nor the tax is sufficiently high to shut off these importations. Should either one of these be adopted by Congress, the foreign-oil importer will still have a considerable margin of advantage over the American producer. The profits on imported petroleum would be reduced, of course, but this product could still be laid down at our Atlantic seaboard at a lower price than would be possible for American petroleum. It has been estimated that the tariff would produce an annual revenue of approximately $118,000,000. The excise tax might produce $102,000,000. Simple mathematics will demonstrate this.

Even if the oil importers should be right in their claim that either the tariff or the excise tax would effectively act as an embargo on foreign petroleum, both the Federal Government and State governments would greatly profit by either measure. Many of the oil-producing States levy gross production taxes. These taxes have necessarily decreased through the impossibility of domestic producers competing with the foreign oil. Should the inflow of foreign oil be greatly reduced or entirely stopped—it is hard to understand how anyone can seriously accept this inconclusive claim of the oil importers—the increase in State revenues of many millions of dollars annually would be worth while. That increase would be paralleled by a very marked increase in the corporation taxes and in the income taxes received by the Federal Government from sources which have run dry with the closing down of so large a part of the independent industry. At the very time when we are somewhat desperately seeking new objects of taxation which will not jeopardize our chances of economic recovery, we can not afford to overlook the double-barreled possibilities in revenue from incoming foreign petroleum and an equal or greater revenue from taxation of the domestic product.

A somewhat blatant attempt to influence the action of Congress upon this question is being made through the distribution to Members of this body of a publication entitled "O'Shaughnessy's Oil Bulletin." To the uninformed or the casual reader this may appear to be an unbiased and unprejudiced report. If one observes closely, however, one may note in fine type this phrase on the very first page of the bulletin: "Published by South American Oil Reports (Inc.)." Naturally the interests of those who are conducting this bulletin may be assumed to be South American. It might not be amiss to remind Members of this body that the Mr. O'Shaughnessy, who is the editor of this bulletin, is a gentleman who appeared at the hearings of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House in February last year in opposition to the proposed tariff on petroleum and its related products. At that time, in answer to questions put to him by Mr. GARNER, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, after evading the point through a dialogue which extended over most of a printed page of the published hearings, was finally pinned down by Mr. GARNER to a direct reply. I might quote the conclusion of that colloquy:

Mr. GARNER. Would you mind, for the record, stating just who requested you to come and testify?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. Nobody requested me, Mr. GARNER; I just said my views on this subject are very well known, and they thought it was useful.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask who they were that suggested it was useful?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. The only people in the oil business, apparently, who are taking any interest in this legislation is the Pan American.

Mr. GARNER. The Pan American?

Mr. O'SHAUGHNESSY. The Pan American.

Mr. GARNER. That is all.

With this background in mind, one may understand the reason behind some of the baseless and inaccurate matter in this bulletin, the distribution of which to Members of the House can not be entirely gratuitous. In the first place, Mr. O'Shaughnessy asserts that: "South American crude and fuel oil is imported into the United States only to provide the fuel oil and asphalt requirements of eastern seaboard consumers." Possibly if this Congress should place an embargo upon all petroleum and all its products from Venezuela except "fuel oil and asphalt requirements of eastern seaboard consumers," Mr. O'Shaughnessy would revise his bulletin more in accord with the facts in the case. He ignores here the whole question of the importation of gasoline or other products of petroleum, basing his argument largely upon the importation of fuel oil.

The American petroleum industry supplied the fuel-oil requirements of the eastern market until the advent of foreign fuel oil displaced them, a fact ignored by Mr. O'Shaughnessy, who makes the indefensible claim that nowhere in the United States can a sufficient amount of oil be secured of a similarly low grade to that produced in Venezuela to supply these fuel-oil requirements, except in California. The whole history of the fuel-oil business through the past is a sufficient refutation of that. Here, he urges, that since the Pacific Coast States have no supply of coal their economic life depends upon their reserves of low-grade oil and gas, which, he says, are not sufficient to warrant California operators depleting them to supply eastern consumers. In California to-day there are 99,000,000 barrels of fuel oil in storage available at distress prices. California production has been held up by lack of a market. If we make possible the utilization of this tremendous amount of fuel oil awaiting a consumer, the American merchant marine will be given a new lease on life transporting this oil from the Pacific to the Atlantic seaboard. Eastern consumers, however, would not be forced to rely upon California oil, for, Mr. O'Shaughnessy to the contrary, the mid-continent section could amply supply all the requirements of the eastern consumer.

The suggestion that an excess production of gasoline, wrecking the mid-continent industry, would result from an attempt to furnish eastern consumers with fuel oil, is as ill founded as other assertions made by Mr. O'Shaughnessy. Here are the facts:

In the first 11 months of the year 1931 there was an approximate average of 70,000 barrels per day of Venezuela crude imported to the United States and this, on the basis of a 69 per cent yield, would give 48,500 barrels per day of fuel oil. In addition there were imported from Venezula and the Netherland West Indies 68,500 barrels per day of fuel oil as such. An approximate estimate of fuel oil derived from Colombian crude imported during the same period is 4,000 barrels per day. This gives a total of 121,000 barrels of fuel oil per day. This same fuel oil could have been produced by refining 200,000 barrels of west Texas crude per day for a 40 per cent gasoline yield, leaving approximately 60 per cent fue loil. At current cost for west Texas crude transportation and refining and at current bulk prices for gasoline of 4½ cents per gallon Gulf coast, fuel oil can be produced at a Gulf coast refinery at a cost of approximately $1 per barrel (this without any profit to the refiner). At current charter rates this fuel oil could then be delivered to the Atlantic seaboard at a total cost of $1.15 per barrel. Current prices for fuel oil, San Pedro, Calif., range from 55 cents to 70 cents per barrel, and with current charter rates of 43 cents delivered price Atlantic coast would be from 98 cents to $1.13 per barrel.

The net result of the production of fuel oil by the mid-continent industry would be lower-priced gasoline and lower-priced fuel oil, with employment given to American workers, the only ones not profiting being the South American industry, in which Mr. O'Shaughnessy displays so much interest.

A tariff or excise tax on fuel oil or crude oil would not interfere with the bunkering business from our Atlantic coast ports to European ports, as claimed by Mr. O'Shaughnessy, unless the spirit of resentment impelled the ship owners to purchase this oil abroad at a much higher cost than in this country, due to the high duties imposed by other nations on Venezuelan oil.

The whole history of tariff protection suggests that prices of petroleum or its products would not be increased because of the adoption of a tariff or an excise tax. The usual effect of a tariff has been to open the home market to the home products, increasing production, making possible better organization of markets with the consequent decrease in production costs, and a lowering of the price paid by the ultimate consumer. This theory lies behind the tariff policy generally. On the other hand, if the great oil-importing companies are encouraged in their procedure toward a practical monopoly of the petroleum industry in this Nation, one may expect the usual price increases which are always associated with the monopoly. The only protection the consumer may have against such future increase must depend upon the amount of healthy competition existing, which can only occur if the American petroleum industry is permitted to live.

Both the fallacy and the sophistry which pervade Mr. O'Shaughnessy's bulletin are illustrated by his statement that only a noisy minority of the American Petroleum Institute is in favor of a tariff, although the figures he quotes in the same paragraph concerning the vote taken by that institute in its tariff referendum show only 433 members out of 3,673 members opposing such a tariff, while 1,047 voted for it. The usual rule that those not voting for a measure are presumed to vote in the affirmative, since an interested opposition may always be relied upon to express itself in the negative, justifies us in believing that the full strength of the tariff opposition was registered in this 433 votes out of 3,673. If there is a noisy minority, that minority is opposed to and not in favor of the tariff.

The American petroleum industry has done everything in its power to stabilize the market and to conserve the petroleum resources of the country. No other industry has a similar record for self-denial. Thousands of wells have been closed in and hundreds of others have been absolutely closed up in the vain attempt to keep production within the bounds of the market which is still permitted to American production. State regulation of the industry has been obtained in many States through the efforts of the American petroleum producer. All these efforts to stabilize the market have been repeatedly upset by the uncontrolled importation of cheap foreign oil, which has steadily engrossed more and more of the American demand.

The issue on the oil question seems fairly clear cut. The Federal Government can realize over a hundred million dollars a year in revenue from either a tariff or an excise tax, or else the Federal Government will receive increased income taxes and corporation taxes from the reviving American petroleum industry, while the oil States of the Union may look once more for the resumption of payment of the large gross-production taxes upon which their budgets rely. Accompanying these benefits there will be greatly increased employment throughout the oil-producing States, where over 300,000 oil workers are now idle. The reemployment of these will create new markets for the factories in our industrial section and more freight movement for our railroads. Practically every phase of our national economic life will be favorably affected through such a tariff or tax. No increase in the cost of either fuel oil or gasoline may properly be expected, since the great oil-importing corporations are now absorbing as their profit the advantages of the lower cost of foreign oil. The only item that would appear on the opposite side of the ledger would be the decrease in the enormous profits now being reaped by the oil importers, some of whom are paying dividends of over three quarters of a billion dollars annually, while they profiteer at the expense of an American industry, American labor, and the financial well-being of the whole Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the bill passed this morning and to include therein a short editorial from a paper in my home town, touching the legislation itself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the editorial?

Mr. DYER. An editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would the gentleman mind waiting until the gentleman from Massachusetts is present, and then make his request?

Mr. DYER. This editorial refers specifically to the bill itself, or to a portion of the bill; otherwise I would not ask such permission.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But the gentleman from Missouri will recall that just this afternoon the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] engaged in a rather bitter attack upon my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARKER] for inserting an editorial, which he said was against the recognized policy of the committee.

Mr. DYER. I trust the gentleman from Alabama will not object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But I am sure that the gentleman from Massachusetts would be very much incensed if in his absence we allowed a matter of this sort to go through. I commend that to the gentleman, and I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Missouri one minute more.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, this morning the appropriation bill for the Departments of Justice, State, and Commerce passed the House. It was desired, I believe, by a majority of the Members to include a limitation to the expenditure of the money appropriated for the enforcement of prohibition, so that none of it could be used in the tapping of wires to obtain evidence for the purpose of prosecutions. Due, however, to the fact that a member of the Committee on Appropriations insisted on his preference to offer a motion to recommit on another matter, which he must have known would not carry, no one in favor of the limitation as regards wire-tapping was able to offer a motion as to this.

I know of nothing more despised by the citizens generally than the allowing of prohibition agents to obtain evidence by tapping private telephone wires to listen in on private conversations. Such methods as this is doing more than anything else to bring general disrespect for the prohibition law. If these most despised means of obtaining evidence are not ended, the time will soon arrive when the Congress will refuse to appropriate any funds whatever for prohibition enforcement. A majority of the States prohibit by statute this practice of the Federal Government in tapping wires in prohibition cases. I am surprised that the Department of Justice permits this when the people and the press so severely condemn it. I include an editorial from the Post-Dispatch of St. Louis, Mo., of February 23, 1932, voicing the sentiment of the press and, I am quite sure, a great majority of the citizens of the United States. The editorial is as follows:

THE GOVERNMENT AS A WIRE TAPPER

Notwithstanding both Attorney General Mitchell and the Chief of the Prohibition Unit, Mr. Woodcock, have denounced wire tapping as a means of gaining evidence in liquor cases, the Government is resorting to this practice both in St. Louis and East St. Louis.

In the cases of Meyer and Sam Eastman, with offices in the Victoria Building; John Bertels, in the Railway Exchange Building; and Leo Dougherty and his wife Marie, living in East St. Louis, all now in the local Federal courts, the entire evidence was secured by tapping wires. Appearing before a United States commissioner when these people were arrested, B. F. Hargrove, chief of the squad of agents responsible for their cases, testified that the evidence had been secured by wire tapping. He said an expert on the squad had done the tapping in cable boxes by putting jumpers on the phones. The Illinois case has particularly pertinent connotations, for wire tapping is a felony under the State law.

A little more than a year ago Mr. Mitchell publicly stated that the Government would no longer countenance the practice of wire tapping as a means of getting evidence in prohibition cases. Shortly afterwards, when it was proposed to clean up Washington, D. C., by subjecting the people to unreasonable search and seizure, the Attorney General said in a letter of protest sent to Senator CAPPER:

"The Government, by violating the constitutional rights of the citizen, should not be placed in a better position than it otherwise would be in. In the long run nothing will be gained for the cause of law enforcement by such means."

Acting upon advices from Washington in September, 1931, an assistant United States attorney in Brooklyn voided cases against 15 men and 2 women upon the score that wire tapping and other unlawful means had been employed in getting evidence against them. Yet here are in St. Louis a number of such cases in which no pretense is made that the evidence was gained in any other way. It is therefore fair to ask what the policy of the Government is. Is it one thing in the public declarations of Messrs. Mitchell and Woodcock and another thing in the practices of the Federal dry forces in St. Louis and East St. Louis? Is it fish in Brooklyn and fowl in St. Louis? Has the Government one policy for political uses and another policy for criminal procedure?

It is these contradictions that have given rise to a feeling in Congress that the Government does not know what its policy is. In June, 1928, the United States Supreme Court held in a case coming up from the State of Washington that evidence of private conversations gained by wire tapping is admissible in prohibition cases. In dissenting from this opinion Justice Brandeis said:

"If the Government becomes a lawbreaker, it breeds contempt for law; it invites every man to become a law unto himself; it invites anarchy."

Senator BLAINE and Representative BOILEAU, both of Wisconsin, have introduced in the present Congress a bill which would outlaw the tapping of telephone wires to obtain evidence by making such evidence inadmissible in the Federal courts. The American Civil Liberties Union says of this bill:

"Its object is to reverse the 5 to 4 wire-tapping decision of the United States Supreme Court, which even the Department of Justice thinks it unwise to follow. Obviously this power to tap telephone wires is dangerous; once established, it could be used for obtaining evidence of all sorts. It opens the way to prying into the private affairs of individuals and to presenting evidence of so loose a character as to make fair trials in such cases difficult, if not impossible."

As an illustration of what can happen under such abominable practices, practices which resulted after centuries of protest in such instruments as our own Bill of Rights, State Senator E. B. Benn, of Washington, has submitted to the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress a statement of what happened in his State in the cases which were ultimately carried to the United States Supreme Court. Mr. Benn was at the time a United States marshal in Seattle. The evidence was obtained by tapping wires. It consisted of pencil notes made under conditions which were not conducive to very good handwriting. Mr. Benn says:

"The alleged evidence was gone over by the legal adviser and the district attorney's office, and rewritten. New conversations were deliberately and falsely added, altered, and many times changed. This book was unbound and rebound five or six times * * * and the agents were required to swear that they were true copies of the original notes which had been lost. * * * By means of this damnable evidence about 20 convictions were secured. * * * Several of the wire-tapping agents afterwards confessed their part of the crime and * * * signed confessions."

The tradition of liberty in St. Louis is one of the strongest of our characteristics. It has made itself felt in the Nation from the time of the Dred Scott decision. It is incredible that the Government, after renouncing the authority given it by the United States Supreme Court, and after abandoning its practices under it over a wide area, should choose St. Louis as the field for a fresh attack upon the Bill of Rights. The Bill of Rights is the ultimate guaranty of American freedom. It is not in defense of bootleggers that we protest against any such time serving as that which would violate these guaranties to make good an unpopular law. We protest against it upon behalf of the people themselves, whose greatest heritage it would destroy.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, in order to evade responsibility, both for his committee and for the Democratic majority, instead of resorting to arguments resorted to abuse and personalities.

I want the record to stand just as it is, that the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives has not done one thing in the last three months to relieve human misery or to afford relief to the millions of unemployed, the millions of undernourished and hungry among the American people, and this is the record. Evade it as you will, the facts remain the same; no bill affording relief to the hungry, the destitute, or those in need or distress has been reported from the Committee on Agriculture, of which the gentleman is chairman, or from any other committee of the House in this session of Congress. The fact is the same, and no personalities and no abuse and no amount of angry denials will confuse the issue or change the record unless the Democrats themselves, holding a majority of the House, do something to afford relief to our own people in this emergency.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. JONES. Did not the gentleman make practically the same statements and did not the same conditions exist last winter when his party was in the majority in the House, and did they do anything along the line he suggests?

Mr. FISH. Of course, I put the same proposition up to the Republican Party, and the Committee on Agriculture then said there was no need for any emergency relief.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman did not expect anything then?

Mr. FISH. The situation has changed. The gentleman knows that, and my Democratic colleague from Indianapolis knows that. He has introduced a similar bill since then. What has happened to his bill? If you will not give us the Senate bill, give us a Democratic bill.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GARBER].

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and incorporate therein a letter from a citizen upon the subject of adequate protection of the oil industry.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, to furnish jobs for the unemployed still remains the most important problem before this country to-day. There is no substitute for the actual job furnished the unemployed. He does not ask charity but just the opportunity to earn a livelihood for himself and family. Through no fault of his own he is without employment, and only those who have experienced such a misfortune can appreciate in any degree the anguish of mind of the head of a family, with a wife and three or four children at home hungry and without sufficient food to meet their needs and without prospect of relief.

And thus far our unemployed, numbering between six and seven million, many of whom are entering upon their third year of unemployment, have proven and demonstrated a high quality of citizenship rarely seen in any country during any period. There has been no mob violence nor organized disobedience to law nor disregard of the rights of property. It is evidence of a self-controlled, law-abiding, orderly citizenship under the most trying circumstances.

The Federal Government should respond to meet this law-abiding citizenship in the exercise of its powers to furnish employment. This can be done to a large extent through protective legislation without the appropriation of the tax moneys of the people.

During the years 1929 to 1931, inclusive, there was admitted, free of duty, oil and its refined products of the value of $377,321,374. This oil and its products was produced from the cheap concessions and peon labor of the subsidiaries of the major oil companies in foreign countries. These subsidiary producing companies in foreign countries pay no taxes here, contribute nothing to the maintenance of government here, nothing to the employment of labor here. In fact, they made their investments in cheap concessions of enormous tracts of land for the express and deliberate purpose of producing oil for export into this country in direct competition with American labor and American capital invested at home.

By reason of these imports of oil into this country our producers have been forced to curtail their production, which curtailment was as low as 1½ per cent, 3 per cent, 5 and 7 per cent in the flush production fields of this country, or as low as an average of 9 per cent of their potential production. In fact, we had to close down our own producing fields to as low as on an average of 9 per cent of what they would produce in order to reduce our oversupply to the consumption demand and to stabilize the production end of the industry. We even had to undergo the restrictions of military rule when the fields in Oklahoma and Texas were placed under martial law and not permitted to produce anything in excess of the proration production.

This policy of drastic curtailment cut off the only supply of revenue coming to the independent producers upon which they were dependent to pay their obligations in drilling their wells and conducting their operations. Cutting off such supply for several years and their obligations coming due forced many into bankruptcy and the disposal of their property at forced sales. Curtailment of production forced curtailment of leases to the farmers in a total amount of $46,000,000, of royalties to the farmers in an estimated value of $117,000,000, of the discharge of 350,000 workers in the oil fields, of an annual wage of $735,000,000.

During this period of desolation and destruction in the producing industry and the discharge of labor and employees, and at a time when we were in the greatest need of all the assistance possible, through free imports to the Big Four oil companies in this country, we gave the preference to foreign production and peon labor over our home producers and American labor in production of the value of $377,321,374. The question naturally arises, with such an oversupply of oil and refined products in our own country, why should we buy the products of foreign countries? Why not buy at home?

Curtailment with free imports is simply the cunning device of the major monopolistic companies to destroy our independent producers, and yet it is being supported by those in high position in the public affairs of the Nation.

The oil program should and must be a tariff or a tax on the imports of oil and its products sufficiently high to shut out the foreign products, giving our home market to our home people and reemploying our unemployed workers in the oil fields. Then, through the exercise of the police power of the several States, regulate production by the control and regulation of the drilling of wells and the requirement of storage. [Applause.]

The next number is the exercise of Federal power in the divorcing of the pipe lines from the production industry, the same as the railroads have been divorced from hauling their own coal.

We attach a letter received from a personal acquaintance with 30 years' experience in the oil business, which will be of interest to the students of the many problems arising from the production end of the industry:

FEBRUARY 19, 1932.

Hon. M. C. GARBER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GARBER: A compact between oil-producing States has been advocated as a nation-wide system of conservation and proration.

In a letter to the Enid News, written and published in October of last year, I stated my position on proration of oil production, and, as you may recall, I said my theories were based on 30 years of actual experience in the drilling and handling of oil wells.

It is probable that an attempt will be made to introduce and secure passage of a bill, a conservation bill, based on the curtailment of production, and in anticipation of that event, and knowing that you will hear plenty of testimony and arguments from so-called experts and others favoring such a procedure, I am writing you this letter.

Curtailment of production (proration) is not conservation. True conservation is strict regulation of drilling and proper storage. It ought to be obvious to all men that we can not seal so efficiently the oil and gas bearing strata as it has been sealed by nature. Literally, thousands of unnecessary wells have been drilled, and the very companies that are loudest in their opposition to the oil tariff and the most insistent for proration have been the leaders in this wasteful drilling.

Through conversations with my father, who started in the oil business in 1865, and my own observations, I have never known, nor do I believe it has ever been recorded, that the Standard Oil Co. ever gave up an advantage when once gained. Therefore it is my prediction that if you succeed in your efforts for a tariff or a tax on imports, the importers will force enough new development to offset the imports shut out thereby. To somewhat bear me out in this statement, I am inclosing clipping taken from the Daily Oklahoman of February 16.

"INDIANA STANDARD PLANS EXPANSIONS

"Subsidiary companies of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana are said to have made plans for an extensive expansion program in the south Texas district, in case a tariff is placed on crude oil and its products. The Indiana's directors are reported to have been considering a proposal that total of $18,000,000 be spent in expansion of the company's interests in Texas. This would include a well-rounded program of production development, pipe-line building, refinery construction, etc.

"Execution of the plans is contingent upon passing of the tariff measure. Should importation of foreign oil be cut off or limited, it is likely that the details of the expansion program will be announced."

I sincerely hope that we do get the much-needed tariff, but I am just as sincerely convinced that the national conservation bill, soon to be pending, should consider not proration of production but the regulation of drilling and storage.

Proration is wasteful; for one thing, it centers attention on flush fields, and the older fields and smaller wells are neglected. Many small wells are being abandoned simply because they are small wells and not needed, and it does not pay to recondition when they have immense potentials from giant gushers to draw from. The Wolfe farm, of which you know, in the Garber field, has been entirely abandoned, all 14 wells plugged, yet there are producing offsets on all four sides.

If I had the space, I could show the wastefulness of proration in many other ways.

I have mentioned storage; there is oil in tanks to-day that has been in storage and not moved for many years. All oil going into the market channels should go through storage; that is, in plain words, storage should be emptied and refilled at least every two years to prevent undue evaporation.

With the set-up as we have it now, it is possible to determine fairly accurately the consumption demand from month to month, or for 12 months ahead; therefore there should be a maximum and minimum amount of oil to be kept in storage.

Proration ought to be outlawed once and forever.

If we are really interested and want to conserve our oil and gas, the limitation of drilling and scientific storage is the proper way. And I hope you and your fellow legislators can see it in that light.

It would help employment and encourage competition. Employment in production is only about 25 per cent of normal now. I would hesitate, as an independent, to drill a well under proration, not knowing whether I could produce it. The operators are confused; they have done nothing only make matters worse.

I hope Congress does do something.

Very respectfully,

C. A. JOHNSON.

Box 22, Garber, Okla.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I arise to call the attention of the House and the country to the outrageous salaries paid to executives of affiliates of the Federal Farm Board, and to urge favorable consideration of legislation I have proposed to place a proper limitation on those salaries.

This particular group of executives comprises the millionaire's club of officialdom, as far as salaries are concerned.

It will surprise, if it does not shock, Members of this House to learn that 10 officials of the group referred to draw salaries amounting to $340,000 per annum, or an average of $34,000 per official per year. While these are the top notchers on these salary rolls, there is an amazing list of subordinates who also receive overstuffed salaries, running up into the millions.

Unless some curb is placed on these 10 officials, they will draw in less than three years more than $1,000,000 in salaries. Think of it!

This is certainly astonishing, and I can not conceive that in these times of great distress, with unemployment on every hand, with millions out of work and hungry, the Congress of the United States would permit these salary grabs to continue with its consent.

One of the officials referred to, Mr. E. F. Creekmore, vice president and general manager of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, receives a salary of $75,000 a year. In about 13 years, unless he is restrained, he will have received a million dollars in salary.

The efficient and hard-working Speaker of this House receives $15,000 a year. He will have to be Speaker for the next 67 years consecutively to attain the same salary goal that Mr. Creekmore with his plethoric salary will reach by the crosscut route in 13 years. Are we willing to concede that Mr. Creekmore is so much more valuable than our Speaker?

This millionaire's club ought to be disbanded by act of Congress, and as far back as February 8, in a letter to James C. Stone, chairman of the Federal Farm Board, I proposed a limitation on appropriation that will accomplish that purpose.

With the indulgence of the House I shall now read my letter to Chairman Stone. It is as follows:

FEBRUARY 8, 1932.

DEAR CHAIRMAN STONE: I have been greatly surprised, as I think others have been, to learn of the enormous salaries paid to executives of marketing organizations which, although not strictly governmental agencies, nevertheless have a very direct relationship to the Federal Farm Board under its sphere of influence and which are financed, or in the past have been financed, from Federal appropriations through the Federal Farm Board.

I believe these salaries are ridiculously high; that they are indefensible from the standpoint of public morals; that they are a severe and unjustifiable infliction upon the farmers of the Nation to the extent the raising of the money to pay them falls upon the cooperatives, and a severe and unnecessary infliction upon the general taxpayers, including the farmers, to the extent that the money to pay these salaries has come or is coming from the United States Treasury.

I refer, for illustration, to such salaries as the following:

E. F. Creekmore, vice president and general manager of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, $75,000 a year.

George S. Milnor, president and general manager of the Grain Stabilization Corporation and vice president and general manager of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, $50,000 a year.

J. M. Chilton, vice president and assistant general manager of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, $32,500 a year.

W. I. Beam, treasurer of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, $30,000 a year.

Henry W. Collins, vice president of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, $25,000 a year.

William Engel, vice president of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, $27,500 a year.

W. B. Joyce, district manager Farmers' National Grain Corporation, Milwaukee office, $20,000 a year.

F. W. Lake, vice president of Hall-Baker Grain Co., owned and operated by the Farmers' National Grain Corporation, $25,000 a year.

Henry G. Safford, vice president of American Cotton Cooperative Association, $35,000 a year.

Stanley Reed, general counsel of the Federal Farm Board, $20,000 a year.

The 10 employees mentioned above draw $340,000 a year, or an average of $34,000 per annum. Space will not permit me to set forth the names of all those who are drawing from $7,500 to $20,000 a year. The annual pay roll of the Grain Stabilization Corporation is about $420,000, of the Farmers' National Grain Corporation about $2,242,000, and the American Cotton Cooperative Association nearly a million dollars a year. The American Cotton Cooperative Association has 56 employees to whom it pays salaries ranging from $3,000 to $4,000 per annum, 16 who receive from $4,000 to $5,000 per annum, and 23 to whom it pays $5,000 to $7,500 per annum. I can not escape the conclusion that this makes it look more like a cooperative for the job holders than for the farmers.

The Farmers' National Grain Corporation had been financed to the extent of $47,000,000 by the Federal Farm Board up to June 30 last year and the American Cotton Cooperative Association to the extent of $63,000,000. Altogether $110,000,000 has been drained from the Federal Treasury to these activities, and it is to be assumed that part of it has gone to maintain these long and luxurious pay rolls.

To the extent the salaries paid are excessive, this is a shocking and an indefensible burden on the farmers and taxpayers in general, especially in times of acute distress like the present, when so many of our farmers are unable to meet their taxes and interest charges and are in the depths of despair. It is noted on page 289 of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry last November the following dialogue occurred:

"Senator WHEELER. What is the average income of the 185,000 farmers comprising the American Cotton Protective Association?

"Mr. CREEKMORE. I would say about $300 a year.

"Senator WHEELER. About $300 a year. And you, as a representative of those poor devils making $300 a year, are drawing down a salary of $75,000 a year?

"Mr. CREEKMORE. That is correct."

Speaking merely as one Member of Congress. I do not intend to sit idly by and permit this sort of thing to continue with my sanction. I propose to offer the following, with a suggestion that it be incorporated in the act which carries the appropriation for the Federal Farm Board for the next fiscal year:

"No part of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid or loaned to any cooperative association that has in its employ any person who receives more than $15,000 a year for his or her services in connection with the activities of said association."

The salary I propose as the limit for an executive of a cooperative association receiving Federal benefits is the salary paid to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice President of the United States. It is $5,000 more per annum than the salary of a Senator or a Representative. Members of Congress are heavily burdened, some dropping in their tracks from overwork, but they do not complain of their salaries. Executives of cooperative associations should be just as patriotic. They should not overlook the fact that they are public servants, and should be content to accept as part of their reward the consciousness that in times of deep trouble like the present they are permitted to be of service to their distressed fellow men. Why should a cooperative executive, performing public duties, receive several times the salary paid to the Chief Justice of the United States? Please understand, I am not writing this letter in a spirit of captious criticism but because I believe a wrong exists for which a remedy should be found.

For you, Mr. Chairman, I have the highest respect. You were not chairman of the Federal Farm Board when these huge salaries were fixed, nor can I believe that if you had your way you would approve them.

I am writing to tell you candidly about the legislation I have in mind and to ask your opinion in regard to it. If you can not speak for the Federal Farm Board in this matter, I would be greatly obliged if you would give me your personal opinion, with such suggestions and advice as you may be prompted by your good judgment to give.

May I hear from you soon, and oblige,

Very sincerely yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

I have not so far been favored with a reply from Chairman Stone but assume that later I shall have an answer. On February 18 I received a letter from his secretary saying:

Mr. Stone is at present out of the city, but your letter will be brought to his early attention upon his return.

I am aware, of course, that if a cooperative desires to pay $75,000 a year as a salary to one of its executives, or even a million dollars a year, Congress can not prevent it from doing so, outrageous as such action would be on the individual farmers and taxpayers who have to foot the bill, but as far as I am concerned as one Member of Congress I am not going to vote one cent of the money of the burdened taxpayers of this country to any organizations that pay such indefensible salaries, and I hope and believe that the Congress, after looking into the matter and realizing the wrong that is being done, will sustain that position with practical unanimity, and the gentlemen who have been thriving in these luxurious berths will have to take a little potluck with the rest of the country.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. I think we would be interested to know where the offices of these people are.

Mr. LUDLOW. I can not give the gentleman the detailed locations of the offices to which he refers. I collated this information from the hearings before the Senate committee.

Mr. MAPES. They are not in Washington, are they, but scattered all over the country?

Mr. LUDLOW. They are scattered over the country. The Grain Stabilization Corporation has headquarters in Chicago.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. GARBER. I commend the gentleman for his position on the question of these unwarranted salaries in connection with the organizations. The Farm Board, while not directly employing these men at high salaries, yet they occupy a position of power and influence to regulate the operations of these subsidiary organizations, and could have prevented this waste and extravagance in funds that should have been directed to proper channels for the benefit of the farmers.

Mr. LUDLOW. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. GARBER. I certainly approve of the proposed amendment to the agricultural marketing act. It is imperatively necessary, and I will support it. This Farm Board could have withheld the extension of loans to these cooperatives, if their set-up was not satisfactory, and they can not escape the responsibility for the tragedy.

Mr. LUDLOW. I am glad to know the gentleman will support the amendment. I can not fix the responsibility, because I do not know the facts, but I do know that these salaries are paid and that they are outrageous.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. While we have no direct control of the salaries of the stabilization corporations or cooperative marketing associations, do not these associations and corporations by fixing such large salaries make unpopular the Farm Board through which they obtain loans?

Mr. LUDLOW. There is no doubt about this adverse reaction on the Farm Board, and I think it was one of the contributory causes of the unpopularity of that board. The Farm Board suffers by reason of the payment of such unreasonable salaries to executives of subsidiary and affiliated organizations. That is certain.

Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House, like its companion supply bills that have preceded it in this Congress, is a substantial beginning in the direction of balancing the Budget, and as such I am sure it will be hailed with satisfaction throughout the country.

Under the wise and able leadership of the statesman from Texas, Speaker JOHN N. GARNER, and with the cooperation of both sides of the Chamber, the House of Representatives is making a splendid record of constructive service in the interest of all the people. Speaker GARNER has captivated the country by his dependability and sound judgment and has abundantly demonstrated his exceptional capacity for high office. Never in history has the branch of Government that is closest to the people arisen more unitedly and patriotically or more effectively to its responsibilities in a crisis. Never have its purposes been nobler or its wellsprings purer. It has been motivated by reason and not by radicalism, by patriotism and not by partisanship. The country is well pleased with the achievements of the House and expects its future performances to be controlled and determined by the same sincerity and poise, the same sound policies that have fashioned its program to this date.

One of the important factors toward molding public confidence in the House of Representatives is the earnestness with which the Committee on Appropriations under the leadership of its great chairman, JOSEPH W. BYRNS, is tackling the problem of reducing the expenses of government. The probe is being inserted into every unnecessary expenditure and the pruning knife is being used with telling effect. Witnesses before the committee are subjected to the most searching examination in efforts to locate administrative leaks. No excuse is sufficient to save wasteful appropriations which in the heyday of governmental extravagance were allowed to pass unchallenged. The necessity of balancing the Budget is vividly impressed on all of the members of that committee as, indeed, I think it is on all of the Members of the House. What more striking admonition of the necessity of balancing the Budget can be imagined than the fact that all of the Government bonds, including all Liberty bonds, have fallen below par, some issues dropping as low at 82 and 83? In an analytical discussion of this phenomenal drop in Government securities, and commenting on it as a danger signal, Secretary of the Treasury Ogden Mills said to our subcommittee on appropriations:

> One of the reasons is the fact that no one knows what the Government is going to do about its Budget and to what extent we are going to keep on borrowing, and until we set a dead line and adopt a sound fiscal policy, Government bonds are going to stay at a discount.

Collapse of the credit of the United States Government not only would be ruinous to America but it would precipitate a world debacle. There is only one way to make our credit sound and keep it sound and that is by balancing the Budget.

These are serious times and the thinking people of the United States are in a serious mood. They do not want nor expect any opera bouffe performance on these appropriations, a love tap here and there and let it go at that. They want an dexpect us to make real cuts. They want major operations. They want every useless bureau and commission, every useless agency of whatever kind and description, and every useless individual officeholder that is doing nothing but eat taxes, cut out of the structure of Government.

APPENDIXES RIPE FOR THE KNIFE

The human anatomy has one feature that has baffled physicians, physiologists, and scientists of all of the ages, who have never been able to find the slightest use for it. That is the appendix. Its very name indicates that it is superfluous—excess baggage, as it were. It does no good and is capable of doing a vast amount of harm. When it becomes sore and inflamed the patient gets a fever and unless relief comes through an operation he is likely to die.

The Government of the United States has become ramified throughout with bureaucratic appendixes that are ripe for the surgeon's knife. Applying the analogy to the public temperament of the times I will say that the people who think deeply on the trend toward paternalism and bureaucracy, especially business men who find enterprise halted and hog-tied by the mounting cost of government, are becoming exceedingly appendix conscious. They are becoming sore and inflamed over having to maintain so many useless bureaus and support so many officeholders who do nothing but draw their salaries. They do not intend to die, but they do propose to see that the surgeon's knife is used to cut out these cancerous excrescences of government, these tax-consuming appendixes which suck the lifeblood that should vitalize industry; and unless we who are Members of the Seventy-second Congress do the job of excision or unless we at least get the patient on the operating table, dust off the chloroform bottle, sharpen the cutting tools, and show that we mean business about it, they will elect a Congress that will apply the knife.

The Committee on Appropriations in framing the great supply bill now before the House—the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill—has cut out a lot of appendixes and it has given surgical treatment to a lot of other appendixes that probably will make those appendixes behave better in the future. It has cut out of the Customs Service alone 29 appendixes that have absolutely no justification in governmental economy. The offices in that service that are abolished are political appointments carrying salaries ranging from $3,200 to $9,000 per annum and not one of those offices has now, or ever has had, the slightest reason for existing. The offices referred to are the surveyors, comptrollers, and appraisers of customs. These offices are an outgrowth of our political system, with no more justification for ever being created than comes from the necessitous situation of a hard-pressed statesman who finds himself under the duress of having to find a luscious plum for a faithful henchman. Other appendixes that are cut out by this bill are four assay offices where the business transacted does not justify the upkeep. These are just a few of the wholesome features of this new legislation. There are many others which will be discussed as consideration of the bill proceeds.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Does the gentleman agree to cutting out the office at New York?

Mr. LUDLOW. I am told that an exception should be made in that case. It is not included among those to be eliminated because of the very exceptional nature of the office.

BEST WAY TO BALANCE BUDGET

There are two ways to balance a budget. This truism applies with equal force to the budget of the most humble citizen, inconsequential save to him alone, and to the greatest budget in the world—the Budget of the Government of the United States, which is of vital consequence to 125,000,000 people.

One way to balance a budget is to raise more revenue. The other way is to cease spending. Application of this principle to national finances suggests that one way to balance the Budget of the United States is for us, as Members of Congress and trustees of the American people, to rack our brains in devising new and ingenious methods of taxation to squeeze a few more drops of blood out of taxpayers who already are bled white. The other way is to use the pruning knife on every nonessential bureaucratic activity—to cut, cut, and then cut more.

I have the greatest respect and sympathy for the members of the Ways and Means Committee who are laboriously considering and mentally weighing every conceivable taxing device that promises to raise more revenues with a minimum of burden on the taxpayers. I know their task is not a pleasant one. I know there is not one of them who does not feel a load on his heart when he thinks of the sweat and toil that will be involved in the payment of these new levies. I know that every one of them would infinitely rather be engaged in drafting bills to repeal existing tax laws than in preparing measures to add new ones.

Somehow I can not help wondering when I behold them in their heavy labors and when I review the elaborate proposals of the Treasury Department for new taxes, whether we are not approaching this very vital undertaking of balancing the Budget mainly from the wrong angle—from the wrong end, as it were. I am wondering whether we have heretofore been giving sufficient thought to cutting down the cost of government as a method of balancing the Budget. Somehow, perhaps because I sprang from the commons and had a rough row to hoe, I can not get away from the idea that the word "economy" has vanished during the last decade from our governmental lexicon and that it ought to be restored there and that the plan of budget balancing to which every American ought to be wedded in bonds of indissoluble devotion is the one which proposes to cut down expenditures until tongue and buckle meet.

Of course, I realize that with a $2,000,000,000 deficit staring us in the face the Budget can not be balanced overnight and that it will be a process of a few years, at least, until tongue and buckle come together. I realize, also, that some emergent tax measures will be imposed upon the common burden to bring the country through its present financial crisis, but, speaking for myself, I would very much rather witness a reduced use of the taxing power and a greater use of the pruning knife.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Permit me to state to the gentleman as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means that we have a $903,000,000 deficit for 1931, which has been added to the national debt. Then we have an estimated deficit of two billion one hundred and some odd million dollars for the fiscal year 1931–32. In addition to that, there will be a $500,000,000 revolving fund for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans, and $125,000,000 for the Federal farm banks, and whatever other appropriations are made, minus $450,000,000 that we paid on our national debt. Those two deficits will be added to our national indebtedness. We are confronted with the task of trying to balance the Budget for the fiscal year 1933, with an estimated deficit of about $1,240,000,000, and it must be done through additional taxation. I agree with the gentleman that we should use the pruning knife as much as possible as a means of reducing the measure of taxation as much as possible.

Mr. LUDLOW. I appreciate the difficulties of the gentleman and his great committee.

SOW THE WIND AND REAP THE WHIRLWIND

As I conceive it, that policy of trying as far as possible to balance the Budget by using the pruning knife, applied to present conditions would be sound business and sound patriotism. The Government, no less than the individual that sows the wind of extravagance, is certain to reap the whirlwind of its folly. In these times of widespread and general distress, with business broken down and prostrate; with 7,000,000 men out of work and 25,000,000 human beings without incomes to sustain life; with millions hungry and more millions undernourished; with farmers by the thousands surrendering their farms, their homes of a lifetime, because they can not pay taxes and interest charges; with untold numbers of men and women walking the streets looking for work and finding it not, it is time for level-headed patriots to be analyzing the causes of the existing saturnalia of misfortunes and to be seeking with clear vision and steadfast purpose to find constructive remedies.

At the root of our national troubles, germinating in the soil of popular indifference and spreading with mushroom growth into every field of private and industrial effort, is the evil of waste and extravagance, now developed under fostering bureaucratic care into a reign of profligacy unparalleled in American history.

Every warning on the horizon, every dictate of common sense, is crying to us to stop, look, and listen and to apply the reverse lever. The signs are clear as noonday and he who runs should be able to read them. Plain as a flag on a pikestaff is the warning that this bureaucratic waste must stop and old-fashioned economy must be reestablished in governmental operations before social and industrial health and happiness can be restored throughout this Nation.

BUSINESS IS ADJUSTING ITSELF

Business is quicker to recognize this exigency and adjust itself to it than is government. Business began retrenchment more than a year ago. The dominant thought in the minds of thousands of business men over the United States to-day is that the solution of the fiscal problem must start with expense reduction; that the answer to deficits is not to be found in the continual increase of expenditures. These business men are holding, and I think rightly so, that the balancing of the Budget is a matter of expense reduction rather than to tax increase and that, while some temporary tax increases may be justified and may be even vitally necessary, permanent relief can come only from cutting the costs of government. All of those engaged in business have been taking large cuts in earnings and salaries. For months every business and industry in the country has been going through the process of having every unnecessary expense squeezed out of it and there is a widespread feeling that government should try the same medicine. Because our Government secures its income through the levying of taxes is no reason why it should not operate on the same sound economic principle of adjusting expenditures to income.

The retrenchment policy now in evidence in the business world if applied to government would mean that personnel would be reduced, contracts would be revised to effect savings wherever legally possible, salaries of the higher brackets would be brought down, and every nonessential bureaucratic activity would be grubbed up at the roots or clipped to a mere semblance of its present plethoric proportions. Untold millions would be saved by eliminating overlappings and duplicate overhead expenses. Thumbs would be put down on such unsound projects as the squandering of vast sums for the purchase of wheat in futile efforts to regulate the law of supply and demand and Federal Farm Board subsidiaries would no longer be drained to pay fair-haired favorites salaries ranging as high at $75,000 per annum while people are starving.

The country is in an appalling condition. Federal and State taxes are now at their height, costing the United States taxpayers in excess of $13,000,000,000 a year, more than the annual value of all of our crops. More than half a million individuals are members of boards, bureaus, and commissions, created to exercise paternalistic guardianship over the people, although, as a matter of fact, when they do function they usually do nothing more or less than push the average business and the average business man's head one more time under the water. Is it any wonder that Americans are becoming tax conscious? As they await the coming tax bill they are in about the same attitude as a man nursing a felon who knows that in a short while his sore place will be stuck with a pin.

LARGE SAVINGS ALREADY INDICATED

Mr. Chairman, while the situation is bad it is not hopeless. The great committee on appropriations has made a good start toward balancing the Budget by deep cuts in appropriations for the next fiscal year. As I sense the sentiment of the members of the committee from Chairman BYRNS down they believe that the best welfare work in which Government or any of its units can engage is in preserving the homes, the earnings, and means of livelihood of the people, not in wasting them through pretentious tax-spending schemes. They have adjourned politics in that committee and have put their shoulders to the common cause of serving the taxpayers by reducing the cost of government. How well they have performed that task is shown by the fact that the bill now before the House—the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill—comes into the House with a total $22,677,342 below the Budget estimates and $44,688,327 below the amount appropriated for those departments last year, while preceding bills have been reported with reductions below the Budget in the following amounts: General deficiencies, $13,443,900; Agricultural, $10,799,591; Interior, $6,273,020; State, Justice, etc., $5,382,818. In other words, the first five supply bills of this Congress show a saving of $58,577,551 below the Budget. The Budget Bureau first overhauls the departmental estimates with a sharp pencil, looking for places to cut, and the Appropriations Committee has followed the Budget with a still sharper pencil, finding more places to cut. In many instances the Appropriations Committee has cut below the Budget and not in a single solitary instance has it raised an item above the Budget figure.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. It is late and I must finish, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOSS. They have reduced every appropriation except the appropriation for prohibition enforcement. Is not that true?

Mr. LUDLOW. I would rather not enter upon such a wide field of discussion at this late hour.

The patriotic and nonpolitical spirit in which the committee operates is well illustrated by an incident that occurred when the present Congress convened last December. With the gallantry that might be expected of such a courteous gentleman, Mr. BYRNS went to the White House to pay his respects but especially to assure the President of the full cooperation of himself and the members of the Appropriations Committee in effectuating a greatly needed program of economy in Government expenditures.

We are committed to a program of economy, Mr. President—

He said.

We want you to know that we will be glad to work with you to that end and you may feel as free to consult any Democratic Member of that committee as you would one of your own party.

The President thanked Mr. BYRNS and in his turn gave assurance that if the committee finds it possible to still further reduce appropriations below the Budget estimates without crippling any essential activity "it will be very pleasing to me."

In this atmosphere of regard for the public interest and with no other incentive than to serve the American taxpayers faithfully and well, the committee has proceeded to make drastic cuts where cuts could be justified; and while its work to date is only a beginning, the people of America will not err if they believe that the committee, with a patriotic House of Representatives supporting it, has made a splendid start in the right direction. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOWARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9699 and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. WHITE, for one day, on account of sickness.

Mr. REID of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. ROMJUE, for 10 days, on account of death in family.

PANAMA CANAL MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a rereference of the bill (H. R. 9552) to provide for the creation of a Panama memorial commission from the Committee on Rules, to which it was referred, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I have consulted with the chairmen of these committees and they are agreeable to this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE STUDY OF SILVER

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a statement made by the subcommittee of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which is investigating the silver question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOMERS of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of the subcommittee investigating the causes and effects of the depreciation of the price of silver:

Recognizing the complexities attending the investigation of the fall in silver prices and its effect upon commodity values, the subcommittee of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, desirous of proceeding with the greatest possible efficiency, and realizing the ease with which it may be diverted from the main stem of its investigation, believes it advisable to set forth the premise from which the proper conclusions should evolve. This statement is set forth with no intent at finality but is to be used for the purpose of guiding the witnesses along the path of directness. All witnesses shall be asked to consider this statement before presenting their testimony, and are invited to sustain or disprove its contentions or to add whatever information they may consider essential. The conclusions reached are made sufficiently broad to serve as a measure of precedence upon which the maximum number might agree.

It appears to the subcommittee that the silver problem being international in scope can best be solved by international cooperation, but whether this cooperation is possible at this time is a question that must be determined. It appears desirable that a reasonable relationship should be established between gold and silver. By this it does not mean that these two metals should be placed upon the normal production ratio, nor is bimetallism envisaged. It is suggested that no nation acting alone is at present in a position to restore the falling metal. Yet the possibility of individual action, although difficult at present to discern, may at a later time be developed. In this event the subcommittee will not be disposed to reject it.

To all appearances there is no other way of restoring world values except by giving a general validity to the purchasing medium of the East, since that part of the globe embraces more than 50 per cent of the people of the world. Many different peoples are engaged in the commerce of the world; some use gold, some can use only silver. Changes in the values of these metals are therefore always disturbing, but when the difference in value is as great as at present the channels of trade naturally dry up, and the result is chaotic.

Unless international trade is revived it is not possible for this or any other nation to continue developing its natural resources and producing its wares. Therefore the urgency of immediate action in this respect is apparent to all.

Unemployment, international obligations, tariffs, and budget deficiencies, the problems which face every parliamentary body in the world, are perplexities that can never be solved until monetary equilibrium is restored, and as long as the ability to exchange the fruits of our labor is nonexistent the problem of one having too much and the other too little will be with us forever.

In laying before those interested the present low price of silver the subcommittee invites attention to the following facts:

THE COURSE OF SILVER PRICES

First. The table showing the average price of silver for the better part of a century (annual report of the Director of the Mint, fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, p. 126) reveals extraordinary steadiness for the period 1833 to 1872, both inclusive. The adoption of the gold standard by Germany in 1872, and by the Latin Union and the United States in 1873, caused a steady decline, which brought silver prices to a level of about one-half that obtaining prior to the general adoption of the gold standard by the occidental world. During the period 1900 to 1914, both inclusive, silver fluctuated between an average annual high price of about 67¼ cents (1906) and a low of about 52 cents (1909). It averaged slightly over 58⅛ cents per fine ounce.

HISTORY OF THE RISE AND FALL OF SILVER, 1914–1932

Second. The war brought about a complete change in that the fortunes of the European nations and those of the East reacted to that war in inverse ratio. The allied nations were obliged to draw on the Orient for vast quantities of men and raw materials needed to prosecute this war to a successful end, and in this wise India and China rolled up against the Allies balances of such magnitude as to make the question of their settlement a precarious one. The reason for this was that neither India nor China possessed the economic machinery which makes possible the postponement of the settlement of balances by means of bank credits or bond issues. The status of the individual oriental being what it is, few are those who lay aside funds in sufficient amount to permit of their indulging in foreign investments. Settlements of balances had, therefore, to be effected either in commodities or in precious metals. With the dislocation of European industry, the entire machinery of which was diverted from commercial ends to the immediate war needs, the settling of adverse balances by means of shipments of commodities of European origin was out of the question. Precious metals were therefore the only alternative, but the European nations could not draw upon their gold reserves because these are the foundation stones on which rests their credit, and this credit had been largely expended through war necessities. It was preferable to ship silver rather than gold, and so the white metal began to flow eastward. All visible stocks quickly made their way to the Far East, until Europe found herself entirely denuded of the metal.

EFFECT ON THE INDIAN CURRENCY SYSTEM

Third. The only available stocks of importance remaining in the western world were in the possession of the Spanish Government and such silver as was deposited in the American Treasury as a reserve against the issue of silver certificates. Despite all metal shipments to India and the Far East, the oriental balances were not settled and silver went higher, additional impetus being given to the rise by important speculation throughout the Orient. The bullion value of the Indian rupee reaches its nominal value (16 pence, approximately 32 cents) when silver sells at 86.4 cents per fine ounce. This price had been reached and crossed in 1917, so that the bullion value of the rupee (when expressed in gold or gold exchange) was greater than its nominal or face value. As a result, myriads of Hindus presented for redemption to the Indian treasury large amounts of rupee notes so as to obtain the silver coin, which they promptly melted and sold at a profit in the bazaars. The higher silver went the greater became the incentive for such operations and the greater the profit. The rupee note issue then outstanding, being considerably in excess of the stocks of silver rupees held by the Indian treasury, the Indian Government was forced into the silver markets of the world to acquire at any cost the silver needed for the minting of additional coins. In 1918 the Indian Government purchased from the United States approximately 200,000,000 ounces of silver at $1 per ounce. This operation called for the passage of the so-called Pittman Act, under which our Government accepted the gold obligation of the British Government for the silver which it sold. Despite the fact that all this silver was minted into rupees the demand persisted and silver continued to rise.

EFFECT ON OTHER CURRENCY SYSTEMS

Fourth. The old Mexican peso (which contained 377.1396 grains of pure silver) reaches parity when the price of silver is $0.634 per fine ounce. It will be seen that when silver crossed that price in 1916 Mexico faced a major currency problem similar to that of India. Melting and export restrictions were resorted to by the Mexican Government, but hoarding became general nevertheless. Similar problems developed in Peru and other South American countries, resulting in hoarding and in the illicit export of subsidiary coins. Shortly after the end of the war, when the sterling exchange broke from parity, to which it only returned in 1925, the bullion value of the British fractional currency r'so crossed its nominal value. Great Britain applied silver export restrictions and made the melting of silver coins of the realm punishable by heavy fines; yet the gold value of the British fractional currency exceeded its nominal value, a fact which had to be faced. Like problems confronted virtually all the gold-standard countries, including the United States. When in 1919 silver reached a high of $1.37½ (it actually sold in the Shanghai market at $1.50), the American "cartwheel" was worth in our own silver market $1.06, and was immediately exported in quantity. It will be readily observed that the rise of silver disturbed the monetary systems of most of the western nations in that their fractional silver coins were subjected to hoarding, melting, and export, which would have made them disappear from circulation in due course unless drastic corrective measures were adopted. It is for this reason that debasing and demonetizing were generally resorted to, because governments recognized the danger to trade of the disappearance of their fractional currency.

SEIGNORAGE AND CONSEQUENCES OF THE ABUSE OF THE RIGHT OF SEIGNORAGE

Fifth. Seignorage is the due levied by the authority that possesses the right of coining on the metal that it manufactures into coin. The original purpose of seignorage was to defray the expenses of coinage to government. When the gold standard was generally adopted in the latter part of the nineteenth century silver was still recognized as the auxiliary metal through its general adoption for fractional currency. However, the price of silver having been seriously affected by the general adoption of the gold standard, it will be seen that the seignorage charge accruing to most treasuries no longer covered the mere cost of coinage, but did in fact represent considerable profit. While giving a profit to government it also constitutes a tax upon the people who accept at its nominal value a coin which has little intrinsic value. The issuance of paper notes or of coins manufactured from the base metals to take the place in currency systems formerly held by silver coins is tantamount to the issuance of fiat money. Debasement of silver coinage is precisely the same thing but in lesser degree. Increase in the circulation of debased or fiat currency is dangerous because it furnishes an incentive to the hoarding of other currencies of intrinsic value in accordance with Gresham's law. It is an abuse of the right of seignorage and becomes the instrument by which the destruction of monetary systems is achieved. This is best illustrated by the discount to which, immediately the peso was debased, Mexican silver went in terms of Mexican gold despite the fact that silver was legal tender. When the currency systems are threatened because a high price for silver causes the intrinsic value of fractional coins to cross their nominal value debasement is justified as a measure of emergency. When, however, such condition is nonexistent debasement and demonetization are no more justified than is the issuance of fiat money. At no time since the beginning of 1921 has the price of silver been such as to justify debasement or demonetization by any nation, so that such governments as have altered their currency systems in this manner have done so with the intention of securing additional income and without regard to the disturbing consequences of their acts upon the currency systems of other nations. The Government of the United States is the conspicuous exception in this particular; it has maintained unaltered both the weight and the fineness of its fractional currency.

EFFECT UPON SILVER OF THE ABUSE OF THE RIGHT OF SEIGNORAGE

Sixth. Debasing and demonetizing by the western nations implied a lessened future demand for coinage by their mints, thereby robbing the silver market of a constant support; they also resulted in making available for sale vast quantities of metal heretofore unavailable. Between 1914 and 1929, both inclusive, no less than 31 countries debased or demonetized their silver currency. While estimates vary somewhat as to the amount of silver derived from debasement and demonetization of silver coin the total amounts were, nevertheless, sufficiently large to throw the silver market completely out of equilibrium. The amount of metal derived from these operations from 1920 to 1930, both inclusive, is estimated to be well in excess of 400,000,000 ounces.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE GOLD BULLION STANDARD IN INDIA

Seventh. In 1925 the Royal Commission on Indian Currency and Finance sat in London under the chairmanship of Mr. E. Hilton-Young. As a result of their deliberations, the Indian currency system was changed from a gold exchange to a gold bullion basis and the rupee fixed to sterling at the rate of 18 pence (36 cents) as against 16 pence (about 32 cents) in the pre-war period. A gold-bullion system necessarily implies gold reserves for the country which adopts it. The Indian gold reserves were to be partially created through the sale by the Indian treasury of its stock of silver rupees consisting of several hundred million ounces. This laid the basis for the great monetary dislocation which we are witnessing to-day, because it superinduced flight of capital.

"COVERING" BY CHINA RESULTING FROM CHANGED INDIAN MONETARY POLICY

Eighth. The corrective measures (debasing and demonetizing) which the governments of the western nations had adopted in defense of their currency systems when these were threatened through the high price of silver acted as a daily depressant upon silver prices. In addition thereto, when in 1926 the Indian Government decided to sell its stock of silver rupees they automatically served notice on the world that the most important of all factors was entering the silver market as an active and formidable seller. All those possessed of silver, either as money or as savings—or, in other words, one-half the population of the world—were put on notice that their money and savings were about to be destroyed. Obviously, in so far as the Chinese were concerned, they could not remove their capital from the country and still continue in business. But there was a way open to them whereby they could insure their capital, and they promptly took it and have followed it ever since. Under threat of seeing their money destroyed, they took out insurance by means of "cover" operations—that is, they purchased gold and/or gold exchanges. These "cover" operations by China were tantamount to sales of silver, and had the double effect of disrupting the silver market through abnormal pressure and disturbing the gold and gold-exchange markets through abnormal demand.

SIGNIFICANCE OF "COVER" OPERATIONS

Ninth. Flight of capital through the metals and the exchanges began in China in 1926 and is still continuing in 1932. Gold or gold-exchange operations, which are not commercial in nature but which are solely established for purposes of insurance, have a sterilizing effect upon the funds or the metals involved in such operations unless they be turned once again into investments. Obviously, capital in flight primarily seeks security and liquidity, and not investment. However, even though invested, their very nature as "cover" or insurance robs them of any quality of permanency in that they are subject to sudden withdrawal on short, if any, notice, in which event, through further flight, they again become major disturbing factors to the security markets as well as to the exchanges and the money markets.

"COVERING" BY INDIA AND DESIRABILITY OF REVERSING THIS POSITION

Tenth. While conditions in India are not the same as in China, they are nearly analogous. The savings of the people of India are almost entirely in the form of precious metals and, owing to custom and tradition as well as to the lowly status of the average individual, silver is their principal hoard. The average Hindu has little or no banking facilities; he is unaccustomed to instruments of credit, which he distrusts. His attachment to the white metal transcends every effort made to encourage him to utilize in its stead any forms of instruments of credit. This is evidenced by his takings of silver despite the imposition of heavy import tariffs. Debasing and demonetizing and the thrusting of the gold-bullion standard upon their own country gave to the Hindus the same inducements to "cover" as to the Chinese, but, in addition thereto, they had the further inducement to "cover" of having gold made cheaper for them by act of Government which fixed the rupee at 18 pence in lieu of 16 pence. And so the Indians of means, more especially in the important centers, sensing the threat to the value of their hoards, emulated the example of the Chinese and promptly took out insurance by the establishment of "cover" operations. The sum total of these operations is impossible of accurate estimate, but it can not fail to be gigantic. Their effect upon the exchange and money markets of the world should not be underestimated, nor should we overlook the desirability of reversing them for the purpose of restoring equilibrium in the exchanges. The reversal of the "cover" operations on Chinese and Indian accounts would not alone have a far-reaching effect on the relative prices of silver and gold, but it would also substantially benefit the general commodity price level through the cheapening of gold in relation to the auxiliary metal which forms so great a part of the purchasing power, direct or indirect, of one-half of humankind.

COMPARATIVE INFLUENCES OF THE EXCHANGES UPON COMMODITY PRICES

Eleventh. A characteristic of the present situation is its international aspect. Without exception whatsoever, all nations have been affected; it is merely a matter of degree. The readjustment to present-day conditions has been the least severe in China judging by current commodity prices as compared with peak levels reached since 1926. This is an unmistakable indication of the effect of the exchanges upon commodity prices which, when seeking their level, tend to fall the least in the low-exchange countries and the most in those countries with the highest exchanges. This is proof of the fact that under conditions of interdependence, such as have been made possible by our highly developed system of communication, the prices of all commodities, including labor, are influenced by international considerations. Everything else being equal, once conditions of monetary dislocation remain uncorrected, return to equilibrium can only be achieved at the expense of the high-exchange countries which, through the inexorable functioning of the exchanges, automatically become the dumping grounds for the low-exchange nations.

DUMPING, UNDERCONSUMPTION, AND TARIFFS RESULTING FROM EXCHANGE DISLOCATION

Twelfth. Of course, open dumping may be prevented by the erection of tariff walls, but those who erect our tariffs only recognize the open seller. They can not see the more insidious accomplice of the dumper who, because of his elimination through the adjustment upward of prices through exchange, is dumping upon the markets his inability to buy. The action of the nonbuyer, while more insidious because it is invisible, is none the less effective than the action of the underseller. The effect upon trade of the former's nonconsumption results in overproduction of goods in all markets despite the lower industrial operating ratio. Tariffs are erected for the purpose of defending local markets, but by their very nature they are an impediment to trade. It therefore follows that if trade is contracted by monetary dislocation it is further impeded by the erection of tariff walls, all of which would suggest the desirability of solving the monetary question which, in turn, would go a long way toward simplifying the problems of tariff. It is on this score that the western industrial nations are on common ground so that the restoration of equilibrium in the exchanges is their common concern. It challenges their cooperation and renders negligible other selfish considerations.

EFFECT OF MONETARY DISLOCATION UPON POLITICAL RELATIONS

Thirteenth. By debasing and demonetizing their silver currency the industrial nations may enrich their treasuries by small nonrecurring profits, but the infinitely larger amounts which governments and their people lose in consequence of trade contraction through the disruption of the exchanges more than counterbalances all seignorage profits and does lasting damage to their established industries. Moreover, their former customers are turned into necessitous competitors, who slowly, but none the less surely, capture new markets once held by the citizens of the very nations which have forced them into competition. The repercussions of dislocated economic conditions upon the political relations of nations never fail to be disastrous. The nationalist movement of India is a typical illustration, as is the effect upon the economic life of Japan of the depressed China exchanges. It therefore follows that the restoration of the equilibrium between gold and silver must necessarily improve the political relations between the eastern nations and the gold-standard countries, because economic pressure will have been removed.

RELATIVE POSITIONS OF DEBTORS AND CREDITORS

Fourteenth. Urgent necessities created by the war and by the conditions prevailing in the immediate postwar period brought about a condition of inflation wherein obligations payable in gold were established on an altogether unprecedented scale. These obligations were individual, corporate, national, and international in character, and to-day are to be met by the borrower under conditions of acute deflation, which have changed the relative position of both lender and borrower to an extent so great as to make inevitable their repudiation in whole or in part. A rise in the general commodity price level is desirable, if for no other reason than that it will restore the proper relation between the debtor and creditor classes, and this because the creditor faces repudiation, which is the inevitable consequence of the debtor's bankruptcy. Herein once again is a field for cooperation between both creditor and debtor nations, because the establishment of the principle of repudiation entails moral and material considerations which are their common concern.

RELATION OF SILVER TO INTERNATIONAL DEBTS AND INVESTMENTS

Fifteenth. Under conditions of good trade, neither banking nor budgetary questions of importance exist, but under adverse trade conditions the reverse is the case. Moreover, international debts and investments are predicated upon favorable trade conditions which in turn create a capacity to pay, whereas under adverse trade conditions a capacity to pay is so much reduced as to render the discussion of international debts and foreign investments both futile and academic.

RELATION OF LOW SILVER TO UNEMPLOYMENT

Sixteenth. The cost of unemployment resulting from trade contraction goes up in inverse ratio to the decline in the volume of trade. The correction of the problem of unemployment, if viewed by itself without proper consideration of its basic causes, implies the use and abuse of palliative measures which involve the expenditure of vast sums of public moneys; thereby adding to the tax burden. On the other hand, the correction of the causes which make for trade contraction reduces unemployment and with it the necessity for the application of costly palliatives.

RELATION OF SILVER TO BANKING, BUDGETS, AND TAXES

Seventeenth. Regardless of the angle from which the present situation is approached, it is increasingly evident that no measures can be effective which do not go to the root of the trouble. Banking being essentially ancillary to trade, it must needs follow the course of trade, contracting and expanding with it. In so far as the income of budgets is predicated on taxes levied on the profits from trade, so must it decrease in equal ratio with the decrease in the profits from trade, the balancing of budgets becoming increasingly difficult as trade contracts. In the meantime debts fixed in terms of gold are immutable so that they do not decrease when trade decreases. On the contrary, their very stationary quality renders them more onerous in times of adverse trade conditions. It is because of the very fact that debts are payable with commodities, services and labor included, that we must once again recognize the desirability to all concerned of raising the general commodity price level, so that any measure which fails of that purpose can not be considered as going to the root of the evil.

SILVER AS A LINK BETWEEN NATIONS

Eighteenth. In the handling of this essentially international problem governments have been primarily influenced, and quite naturally so, by purely national interests and aspirations. Far from being admitted, interdependence has been resented because of selfish considerations, yet the consequences of this attitude merely emphasize the interdependence of all nations instead of disproving it. The world system of intercommunications which had leveled geographical frontiers is being brought close to destruction through tariff walls erected for the defense of local markets, and every nation is seeking to devise ways and means for its complete independence from others. It is perfectly obvious to the careful observer that such a condition can at best only retard progress while exposing us to such evils as are the natural consequences of the economic pressure on the present social and political order.

PSYCHOLOGY OF THE SITUATION IN ITS RELATION TO THE GOLD STANDARD

Nineteenth. The edifice of credit, which is built in the shape of an inverted pyramid, is generally believed to rest only upon that small apex of precious metals represented by the metallic reserves of our central banks. In fact, nothing could be further from the truth, because our financial structure has a much broader, if intangible, base which is constituted by the faith and the confidence of the people, without which no instrument of credit could exist. It therefore follows that a program of restoration must include psychological correctives, because faith and confidence "per se" are purely psychological in nature. Moreover, because the question of money is of international character, it is essential when handling it that we take into consideration not alone our own psychology but that of the people of other nations as well. Herein lies the necessity for recognizing the truth of the saying that "east is east and west is west." Monetarily speaking, custom and tradition divide both halves of the world so that, if we wish successfully to deal with one another, it is imperative that we should recognize and respect one another's customs as to money and not inflict our own monetary standards upon those who are unwilling to accept them or who are unprepared for them. Least of all should we perpetuate such measures in the alteration of our monetary systems as tend to disrupt and destroy the moneys and savings of the peoples of the eastern world. During war times the western nations, forced by circumstances beyond their control which involved their self-preservation, adopted measures of that character because their monetary systems had been threatened by high silver until correctives were applied. To-day conditions are reversed and their monetary systems and their trade are threatened by low silver. It is therefore imperative that corrective measures of a reverse nature should be adopted by the governments of the occidental nations unless a further flight from silver be invited, thereby making necessary further economic readjustment downward and rendering existing gold stocks hopelessly inadequate to carry on world trade and maintain the integrity of the gold standard.

DIRECT AND TRIANGULAR ASPECTS OF TRADE

Twentieth. The effect of low silver prices upon American trade can not be determined by the statistics of our direct trade with the Orient, because trade is necessarily both direct and triangular. If India's trade with Great Britain suffers as a result of the repercussion of her economic on her political relations with that country, American trade with India may increase, but direct American trade with Great Britain suffers because of the adverse effect on Great Britain's commerce with the world resulting from her loss of trade with India. The same reasoning may be applied to our trade statistics with any single country, thus proving that our economic welfare is predicated on the total volume of our trade with all countries. The enormous contraction in the volume of world trade and the complete dislocation of the exchanges are no mere coincidence.

METHOD OF INFLUENCING THE COMMODITY PRICE LEVEL

Twenty-first. Commodities of all kinds obey the natural law of supply and demand. Whereas the rationing of demand to restricted supply denotes an abnormal condition, approach to normal equilibrium in the commodity markets is had by the adjustment of production to consumption, so that the consumer ultimately fixes the prices of all commodities by the very demand which he creates. World commodity prices can therefore be raised by such international cooperative action as will improve the purchasing power of the consuming masses, whereas measures of a purely local character can but feebly affect the world commodity price level while rendering the local market more vulnerable to external pressure.

RELATION OF METAL PRODUCTION TO SILVER PRICES

Twenty-second. Silver is unlike any other commodity in that approximately two-thirds of the total silver output is a by-product of other metal production so that it is forced upon the market regardless of demand. If the important support to the silver market formerly given to it by the mints of the world is withdrawn through the debasing and demonetizing of silver currencies, the commercial demand for the white metal alone remains; this demand is insufficient to maintain prices so that silver goes down despite reduction of output by the purely silver-producing mining companies. The consumers of silver are chiefly the oriental nations, whose faith and confidence in the white metal have been shattered by the alteration of monetary policies by the gold-standard nations, among whom are the chief silver producers. Any measures undertaken by the gold-standard group of nations tending to stabilize the price of silver are predestined to failure unless they succeed in restoring the faith and the confidence of the consuming nations in their once-favorite metal.

THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES AS A PRODUCER

Twenty-third. The cost of silver coinage to the treasuries of the world, if viewed by itself, assumes importance, but it falls into insignificance when measured in terms of budgets and trade figures. Therefore, were the United States to take the initiative in the field of international cooperation on matters pertaining to silver as money, their action should not properly be translated as an expression of the interest of the merchant in his product. The British Empire produces an overwhelming proportion of the total world output of gold, yet in matters monetary Great Britain is never approached from the angle of a metal producer seeking a market for his product.

CENTRAL BANK DISCOUNT RATES UNDER NORMAL AND PRESENT CONDITIONS

Twenty-fourth. The orthodox method of influencing exchange movements for the purpose of reversing or redirecting the flow of gold from one center to another is the raising or lowering of central bank rates of discount. Under conditions of monetary dislocation, capital in flight gives no consideration whatsoever to such measures as is evidenced by the complete lack of relation between the rates of the principal central banks on the one hand and between money rates and security prices on the other. Curiously enough the reverse is the case, in that a higher bank rate is accepted to-day as a sign of weakness and immediately precipitates flight of capital, thus acting in a manner contrary to the very purpose of the measure adopted. It is therefore evident that maldistribution of gold can not be corrected through the manipulation of bank rates. Nor can it be corrected by reinvestment of their funds by the gold holders when, owing to trade conditions, the status of the debtors is such that they can offer no adequate security for their loans. Another method must be found.

RELATION OF SILVER TO MALDISTRIBUTION AND HOARDING

Twenty-fifth. When the question is examined from every angle, the logical conclusion is that "All roads lead to Rome," in that accurate diagnosis of the money problem invariably points to the two metals which form the bases of the money systems. Once this is conceded it is simple enough to accept the principle that if the "quality of money" is destroyed in one metal, mankind will desert the one so debased and reach out for the other to which value is still attached. Hence the universal rush for gold or gold exchanges which plainly explains maldistribution, hoarding, and all those attendant evils that make for the destruction of values through the disruption of trade via the exchanges. It is monetary dislocation which has set in motion the vicious vortex of deflation that is gaining in velocity as its evil consequences multiply because they feed upon each other. We have abundant evidence of the failure of palliatives everywhere, yet we dismiss the evidence and persist in treating effects and ignoring the cause. It is time to call a halt and to recognize the urgency of reestablishing a proper relation between the two world yardsticks of value because this is indispensable to proper equilibrium in international trade. Any serious dislocation of a reasonable relation calls for immediate correctives by cooperative action because it disturbs the fundamental bases of world trade in that readjustment must be effected in all human activities.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who spoke this afternoon have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 4145. An act for the relief of Thomas C. LaForge;

H. R. 4150. An act authorizing issuance of patents in fee to Benjamin Spottedhorse and Horse Spottedhorse for certain lands;

H. R. 6347. An act for the relief of Neal D. Borum;

H. R. 8163. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Pecatonica River at Harrison, in Winnebago County, State of Illinois;

H. R. 8171. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Kankakee River at Momence, in Kankakee County, State of Illinois;

H. R. 8238. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a free highway bridge across the Fox River at Algonquin, in McHenry County, State of Illinois;

H. R. 8250. An act granting authority to the Texas State Highway Commission to maintain and operate as constructed a free highway bridge across Trinity River between the counties of Navarro and Henderson, in the State of Texas;

H. R. 8324. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Rock River at Byron, in Ogle County, State of Illinois; and

H. R. 8327. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Rock River at Oregon, in Ogle County, State of Illinois.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Bronson, Meade, Wakefield, and Wallace, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the maintenance of the prohibition law and its enforcement, and protesting against any measure looking toward its modification or repeal, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Earnest Workers' Sunday School Class of Leoti, and local chapters of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Bronson, Meade, and Wallace, in the State of Kansas, protesting against the proposed resubmission of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution to be ratified by State conventions or legislatures, and favoring the making of adequate appropriations for law enforcement and education in law observance, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEBERT presented the following resolutions adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Rhode Island, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1932.

Resolution of the senate requesting and urging Rhode Island's representatives in the Senate and Congress of the United States to support the passage of House Joint Resolutions 208 and 209, being resolutions proposing similar amendments to the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, said like amendments providing for so-called State rights with relation to the regulation of the manufacture, transportation, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes

Whereas there are pending before the Congress of the United States House Joint Resolutions 208 and 209, being resolutions proposing amendments, of like import, to the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas said like amendments guarantee to each State in the Union the right to authorize and regulate the manufacture, sale, transportation, and use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, yet preserve to each State the right of prohibition of the same; and

Whereas the qualified electors of this State, at the 1930 regular election by a majority of more than three and a half to one, expressed disapproval of the eighteenth amendment, evidencing thereby an overwhelming desire to be relieved of the provisions thereof and of the Volstead Act enacted by Congress pursuant thereto: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this senate respectfully requests and earnestly urges the Rhode Island representatives in the Senate and the Congress of the United States to give their vigorous support to the early passage of said Resolutions 208 and 209; also be it

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted forthwith by the secretary of the senate to the representatives of this State in Senate and Congress of the United States; also to the Committee on the Judiciary of the National House of Representatives, wherein said resolutions now are pending.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, February 16, 1932.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original senate resolution No. 65, passed by the Senate of the State of Rhode Island on the 16th day of February, A. D. 1932.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid, this 16th day of February, A. D. 1932.

[SEAL.] ERNEST L. SPRAGUE,
Secretary of State, ex Officio Secretary of Senate.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1932.

Resolution of the house of representatives requesting and urging Rhode Island's representatives in the Senate and Congress of the United States to support the passage of House Joint Resolutions 208 and 209, being resolutions proposing similar amendments to the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, said like amendments providing for so-called State rights with relation to the regulation of the manufacture, transportation, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes (passed February 16, 1932)

Whereas there are pending before the Congress of the United States House Joint Resolutions 208 and 209, being resolutions proposing amendments, of like import, to the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States; and

Whereas said like amendments guarantee to each State in the Union the right to authorize and regulate the manufacture, sale, transportation, and use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, yet preserve to each State the right of prohibition of the same; and

Whereas the qualified electors of this State at the 1930 regular election by a majority of more than 3½ to 1 expressed disapproval of the eighteenth amendment, evidencing thereby an overwhelming desire to be relieved of the provisions thereof and of the Volstead Act enacted by Congress pursuant thereto: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this house respectfully requests and earnestly urges the Rhode Island representatives in the Senate and the Congress of the United States to give their vigorous support to the early passage of said Resolutions 208 and 209; also be it

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted forthwith by the recording clerk of the house to the representatives of this State in Senate and Congress of the United States; also to the Committee on the Judiciary of the National House of Representatives, wherein said resolutions now are pending.

A true copy.

Attest:

DAVID C. ADELMAN,
Recording Clerk, House of Representatives.

THE SILVER QUESTION

Mr. WHEELER presented a letter from James H. Bost, of Charlotte, N. C., on the silver question, with an accompanying article by Winfield Smouse on the Financial Situation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHARLOTTE, N. C., January 28, 1932.

Senator BURTON K. WHEELER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I was very glad indeed to see you come out on the bimetallism question and believe that you are on the right road.

I am inclosing newspaper clipping on money and refer to a few quotations in the press, which you no doubt have noticed. Mr. Wiggins, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank, largest in the world, discussing the depression, said in the press a few months ago that it was like boys playing marbles and that one boy won all the marbles, so he had nobody to play with. That appears to be an invitation to you Congressmen to give him some playmates, for we can not afford to stop the game.

Mr. Julian S. Miller, editor of the Charlotte, N. C., daily News, stated in his paper, and was quoted by other papers, that 4 per cent of the population of the United States owned 80 per cent of the wealth and that there was something rotten at the foundation.

Mr. Brisbane has said a good many things about bimetallism which I hope you have read. Once he said, "For the world to think of transacting its business with only $10,500,000,000 of real money on earth, about 10 per cent of the United States' income in a good year, is preposterous. To suggest that the world can transact its business on that amount of gold with France and the United States hoarding and monopolizing three-quarters is complete stupidity."

I have been watching the papers for arguments against bimetallism and in our local press we scarcely ever see any real good reasons against it, and, for that matter, hardly ever anyone raises his voice against the proposition. One minor New York bank official writes all about the terrible condition it would cause if the gold standard was abandoned, etc., but who told this gentleman that we were talking about abandoning the gold standard? It is terrible to see a man get clear off the question like that, but it just goes to show how desperate a man will get when he is grasping for an excuse.

Is gold all that is worth while in this world? Is the gold standard worth the morale and incentive of a majority of this generation? There can be dozens of questions asked about the welfare of the babies and children of this "the greatest nation."

Just because individuals, school districts, counties, towns, and cities have made mistakes in discounting too much the sensible prosperity, should we all be crucified on a cross of gold? Enough is enough if we have any wisdom left.

The present debts were not made at the present value of gold, nor regardless of other loans, how can anyone borrow money and pay interest of 6 per cent or 8 per cent while there is no way now to make any profit out of it?

It seems that any set of men, regardless of party, who would come out on a clear bimetallistic platform would win by a tremendous majority.

Trusting that you can do something to help us out, I am,

Yours very truly,

JAMES H. BOST.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

By Win Smouse

To the EVENING JOURNAL:

Having given for some time serious consideration to the distressing condition of the agricultural, industrial, financial and business pursuits of our country, I find that the deflation in all property, country and city real estate, farm products, stocks, etc., now amounts to about half of what they were a few years ago; also the enormous amount of national, State, municipal, corporation, and individual debts total close to the total value of all properties at the present deflated values.

If property and commodities of all kinds had not fallen in price to their present level, these debts could and would be paid; but unless something is done to restore the values of the property and commodities to the level of where they were when the debts were contracted it will be impossible for the debtors to liquidate their indebtedness, which no doubt means general bankruptcy and distress. At present prices it takes about twice as much property or commodities to pay a mortgage, bond, or other debt than it would at the time the debts were contracted; this about doubles the amount of a debt.

Now, what is imperative is either cut the debts in two or restore the values in property and commodities. I don't see any way to make the creditor reduce his bonds, mortgages, notes, or accounts one-half, but I do see what I feel could and ought to be done promptly, which would restore values in the things that the debtors have to sell to pay their debts.

A great number of remedies have been and are recommended to help the situation, such as moratoriums, the farm relief bills, $500,000,000. Corporation to loan banks, the $1,800,000,000. Corporation to loan building and loan associations. Five billion bonds to be sold by the Government to spend for public works. None of these will bring the permanent relief but only create new indebtedness. We can not get out of debt by going in deeper.

There is one thing that has not been tried, and, in my judgment, will positively and permanently get our country out of this slough of despond and will not cost the Government or anyone else anything. It will restore former fair values in the deflated property and commodities, such as farm and factory products, real estate, stocks and bonds, and give purchasing and debt-paying power to the masses of our people, giving work to the unemployed, other benefits, general prosperity, and relief.

It is my conviction that the underlying influence or cause of our troubles is the small quantity of gold (the only redemption money) in our Treasury, compared with the enormous debts and commerce of the United States. It seems a self-evident fact that the volume of money in any country largely governs the price of everything else. That being the case, let us look at our own country. What is money in our country and its value? At the organization of our United States, Congress fixed gold and silver at the rate of 16 to 1, with 371¼ grains of silver in the silver dollar and about 23 grains of gold in the gold dollar, and made by law both a legal tender for all purposes for which money is used; also made the silver as well as the gold dollar the medium of exchange, and the mints of our country were open to anyone who had gold or silver metal and would make it into dollars at no expense to the owner.

This, you see, made the quantity of redemption or real money equal to all the gold and silver and gave the broad base of both metals against which to issue an equal amount or more token money which, up to 1873, was only the paper money; all money except gold since that time in our country has been token or substitute money and will only float at par when it has a sufficient volume of redemption money in the Treasury to redeem it. So this law limits the amount of token money that it is safe for the Government to put in circulation.

Let us see what happened in 1873 in our volume of redemption money. Up to that time there were about an equal amount of silver and gold at 16 to 1, and both were redemption money; but Congress in that year—a bill was introduced to revise the coinage laws; nothing said in the bill or its discussion about its demonetizing of silver; but that was the intention of the instigators of same. No one, it seems, but the schemers knew until after the bill was enacted and published that it struck down silver as one-half of the redemption money of our country and made it token money, which it has been ever since.

At that time the silver in a dollar was worth, as bullion, as much as a gold dollar, and would have remained so if this crime had not been committed. What has been the result? Silver has declined ever since until now the silver in the dollar is only worth about 30 cents, and all this time since we have only had gold as our real money, and the production of gold that has gone into money has so far lagged behind the growth of our commerce, business, and increased wealth, and greater demand for money. Since gold has been (since 1873) the only redemption or real money it has had to not only support the paper token money that both did before, but—it has to support the additional silver token money at par while its intrinsic value is down to 30 cents.

So since gold is so scarce compared with the work it has to do, by the law of supply and demand, it is so dear that it takes twice or more of other things to get dollars to pay debts. I hope I have so far made myself understood that what is needed is a large increase in redemption money; if this is so, what is the best way to do it that will not work harm but bring the desired blessing?

The remedy as I see it would be for Congress (who by the Constitution has the right to say what shall be legal tender or redemption money) to reenact the law they annulled in 1873, which would take the silver dollar off the back of gold, and place it in the column of redemption money with gold to do the work that now gold has to do alone. This would about double the amount of redemption money, reduce the volume of token money, and make it possible to more than double the volume of paper token money that the Government would be safe in issuing.

This should, and I believe would, cause a rise in everything else to at least its former average value. This would not cost the Government or anyone else anything and we would not hear so much about frozen credits, idle labor, low prices of farm products, and real estate, etc.

Congress when it meets next month could in one day enact this legislation. If our politicians and administration really want to bring about prosperity, let them show it by getting busy at once. This change in the coinage and legal-tender money would not hurt anyone. Possibly the selfish interests that hold Government and other tax-exempt bonds would object, but even they should see that in the end they would be benefited, because if relief is not given to the debtors, so they can pay the bonds and mortgages, they will have to take property that their securities are a lien on, and I take it they do not want to be bothered with lands, factories, real estate, or chattels.

This act of remonetizing silver would be just and undo the wrong that was done the debtor and property-owning class in 1873. One of the best things in my estimation that could be done for the prosperity, peace, and other benefits of the whole world would be an international adoption of bimetalism at a uniform ratio between gold and silver. This would put all nations on an equitable money basis. As it is now, our export trade with all the silver-money countries is destroyed or prohibited, because it takes about three dollars of their money to buy one dollar's worth of goods at our gold prices. There is no doubt that if this is done we could sell billions of dollars' worth of our manufactures and commodities to those countries. This, with the increased purchasing power of our own people, would give employment at good prices to all our unemployed. If anyone has a reasonable or honest objection to this proposition, I will be very glad to hear from them. Much more can be said in its favor, but this is already too long.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon:

S. 1836. An act for the relief of William D. Barbee (Rept. No. 337);

S. 1879. An act granting compensation to Willard Henry Amlaw (Rept. No. 338);

S. 1881. An act authorizing the payment of war-risk insurance to Laura E. De Armoun (Rept. No. 339);

S. 1884. An act granting disability allowance to Dan V. Smith (Rept. No. 340);

S. 1886. An act granting an increase of compensation to Addie Weeks (Rept. No. 341);

S. 3052. An act for the relief of George A. Banta (Rept. No. 342); and

S. 3151. An act to authorize reinstatement of war-risk insurance of John D. Deardourff, deceased (Rept. No. 343).

Mr. BLACK, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 326) for the relief of Julia Kerr O'Bleness, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 344) thereon.

BANK DEPOSITORS' GUARANTY FUND

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I wish to introduce a bill, to have it printed in the RECORD, and to make a few remarks with reference to it, if I may have permission to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 3826) providing for the establishment and maintenance of the bank depositors' guaranty fund, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 3826) providing for the establishment and maintenance of the bank depositors' guaranty fund, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after 60 days from approval of this act there shall be established and maintained by the Treasurer of the United States an account to be known as the bank depositors' guaranty fund.

SEC. 2. Within 60 days after approval of this act each and every member bank of the Federal reserve bank system shall, upon certification by the Comptroller of the Currency of its apparent solvency, deposit and maintain with the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent of its capital stock, which shall be credited to the bank depositors' guaranty fund provided for in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 3. Before any bank may become a member of the Federal reserve bank system it shall file an application setting forth in detail its assets and liabilities, also the name and address of each stockholder and the number and par value of shares held by each on forms prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency, which shall be examined and, if approved by said Comptroller, such bank shall, upon 10 days' notice, deposit and maintain with the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent of its capital stock, which shall be credited to the bank depositors' guaranty fund provided for in section 1 of this act.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to, in order to safeguard the interests of depositors and stockholders and protect the bank depositors' guaranty fund, herein provided for, examine or cause to be examined at least twice each year the financial condition of each member bank of the Federal reserve bank system and also examine into the financial responsibility of each owner, transferee, or holder of stock in such member bank.

SEC. 5. In event any member bank of the Federal reserve bank system shall, after depositing and maintaining with the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent of its capital stock, as provided for in sections 2 and 3 of this act, be examined and determined insolvent and a receiver appointed to liquidate its affairs, the receiver shall, within 30 days, ascertain and report to the Comptroller of the Currency, in triplicate, the name and last known address of each unsecured depositor and certify the net or the approximate net amount due each such depositor; and, thereupon, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller promptly to verify such reports and certificates and submit one of each to the Treasurer of the United States, who shall, within 10 days thereafter, pay each such depositor, or the legal representative of such depositor, the amount certified by the receiver and the Comptroller as due, and charge payments so made against the bank depositors' guaranty fund: Provided, That should the amount to the credit of the bank depositors' guaranty fund be not sufficient promptly to pay all unsecured depositors, the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to advance and credit said guaranty fund any sums determined necessary to pay in full all such depositors.

SEC. 6. The total of sums advanced and credited the bank depositors' guaranty fund by the Treasurer of the United States, authorized by section 5 of this act, shall be a first lien against all net assets of the insolvent bank; and the total of sums paid by the Treasurer out of the bank depositors' guaranty fund, other than from sums advanced and credited said fund as herein authorized, shall be a second lien against all remaining net assets of the insolvent bank.

SEC. 7. The Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to invest and reinvest in securities of the Federal Government any part of the sums herein provided to be deposited by member banks to the credit of the bank depositors' guaranty fund, and to pay or credit member banks interest on such deposits at a rate not exceeding 2 per cent per annum.

SEC. 8. Each bank complying with the provisions of this act shall, in statements of its condition published, or otherwise make known that "unsecured depositors of this bank are protected against loss by the bank depositors' guaranty fund, United States Treasury Department" in such total amount as shall from time to time be reported by the Comptroller of the Currency.

SEC. 9. Any officer, appointee, or employee of the Treasury Department, or any officer, director, appointee, or employee of a member bank of the Federal reserve bank system, who knowingly and willfully violates a penal provision of the national bank act, or a penal provision of the Federal reserve bank act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be sentenced to and serve not less than 5 years nor more than 20 years in a Federal penitentiary, and the sentence so imposed shall not be suspended, nor shall such convicted person be paroled or pardoned.

SEC. 10. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby expressly repealed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in introducing this bill I have in mind that we should make a serious, earnest effort by legislative action during this session of Congress to safeguard the interests of depositors and stockholders of our banking institutions.

As of December 31, 1931, the capital stock of all national banks, 6,373, was $1,621,449,000, and the capital stock of all State banks, 878, members of the Federal reserve bank system, was $331,074,000, making the total capitalization of all banks then members of the Federal reserve bank system $2,502,523,000; and so, under the provisions of this bill the bank depositors' guaranty fund would be established with more than $125,000,000 to its credit. I doubt very much that there would be material drafts on this fund.

The one provision in the bill which will, no doubt, give some concern is whether the Comptroller of the Currency can be delegated the power to examine into the affairs, and so forth, of State bank members of the Federal reserve bank system. At the moment I see no reason why all member banks should not be examined by the Comptroller. Likewise holding companies that hold enough stock in national banks to control such banks ought to be under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency.

It is gratifying to note that there have been few, if any, bank failures during the past week or 10 days, but it is important that assurances be given that there may not be a repetition of the hardships recently experienced by millions of depositors throughout the country.

It will be contended, no doubt, that but a comparatively small number of State banks are members of the Federal reserve bank system and that this proposed legislation might be detrimental to them—unless they applied and were found eligible for membership. The hope would be that States would find it advisable to adopt some similar plan in respect to State banks.

It would be very difficult to frame a bill which would protect depositors and stockholders that would equally affect and be satisfactory to all concerned. In fact, it is seldom that legislation does not adversely affect one way or another the interests of those not generally provided for.

I am satisfied that legislation along the lines of this bill, improved upon, no doubt, in committee, is necessary to restore to a full measure the confidence many have—without justification in all cases—lost in some of our financial institutions. The impression prevails that our banking laws should be strengthened. The people want safety above every other consideration, and if legislation may secure that we should give it our energetic attention.

Section 9 enlarges the penal provisions of the present law. It would strengthen confidence in the banks, and no honest officers and directors should object to it. The records show that during the year ending October 30, 1930, there were 136 cases in which there were convictions for violation of the penal section of the national banking law and in which sentences were imposed and that in 70 of these cases probation was allowed and in 13 of the remainder fines only were imposed.

My impression is that during the first 40 years of the operation of the old national bank act the loss to depositors in closed national banks during that period amounted to less than one-tenth of 1 per cent per annum. On this basis a tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent per annum of the deposits in the Federal reserve banks would seem to yield sufficient protection. This guaranty fund could be placed with the director of the Federal reserve system, in which those banks are located, and invested in Government securities only, and as the interest coupons matured they could be cashed and reinvested the same way. This sinking fund in 20 years would assume such huge proportions that there would be no such thing as a "broken bank" in the United States, provided the examinations by the national-bank examiners were of such a nature as any careful business man would give the details of his own business.

Criticism of this plan would be, first, that the deposits vary to such an extent it might be very difficult to accurately ascertain the amount of the tax or levy. The capital of each bank is easily ascertained and is fixed; therefore I have thought the capital should be the basis of this protection fund.

To restore confidence and increase the business of the banks for their own benefit and for the protection of those who trust them, some plan should be devised. To emphasize this I need only refer to the figures, to wit, the bank suspensions in 1931 were a total of 2,290, with deposits of $1,759,000,000. Of these the number of national banks was 410, with deposits of $473,000,000. The number of State-bank members of the Federal reserve system was 105, with deposits of $302,000,000. The number of nonmember banks was 1,772, with deposits of $984,000,000. These figures speak for themselves and are impressive.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a few words with reference to the subject matter of the statement made by the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I am glad to note that the senior Senator from Florida has introduced a bill to which reference was made the other day looking to the guaranty of bank deposits. I know that there is great difficulty involved in framing any satisfactory measure of that kind, and yet I make bold to say that the time will have come, at no very great distant date, when this Government will be shamed by its record in this regard. Particularly, Mr. President, should savings deposits be protected by an absolute guarantee. A man may take a chance with his deposit account which is subject to check, but there is no excuse, it seems to me, why appropriate steps have not been taken to guarantee savings accounts, often the last and sole dependence of men and women who are approaching old age and who must shortly pass off the stage of active life.

Mr. President, I make bold to suggest also that appropriate steps ought to be taken by the Banking and Currency Committee to see to it that the stockholders' liability in national banking institutions is worth more than the paper on which it is written. There is no reason at all why a stockholder in a national bank should not guarantee his ability to respond to any assessment that may be made upon him under the law.

These are practical things that may be done by this Congress and may be done at this time. The liability of every shareholder in every national bank should be made effective. Eighty-six and a half per cent of the bank failures during the last few years have been among the small banks. If the shareholders in the small national banks that have failed had been able to respond to their liability, the depositors would have been cared for in a vast number of instances.

I respectfully call the attention of the Banking and Currency Committee to these two remedial suggestions which, it would seem to me, should have the immediate attention of the committee: First, that all savings deposits be absolutely guaranteed; and, second, that the liability of shareholders in national banks be guaranteed by the shareholders themselves. This can be done without any great hardship, and it would go a long way toward the protection of the depositors in national banks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MANUSCRIPT OF DR. ARTHUR MACDONALD ON "CHAPTER IN THE SCIENTIFIC STUDY OF MODERN CIVILIZED MAN"

On motion of Mr. COPELAND, it was Ordered, That the manuscript by Dr. Arthur MacDonald entitled "Chapter in the Scientific Study of Modern Civilized Man," presented by Mr. COPELAND on March 12, 1930, and referred to the Committee on Printing, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION—REPORT OF H. J. HAGERMAN

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document the report of H. J. Hagerman, special commissioner to negotiate with Indians, on the status of the Navajo Indian Reservation, land acquisitions and extensions, with specific recommendations for the outside boundaries of the reservation, and of certain additional areas to be acquired for the Indians outside the reservation. I ask leave to have printed as a preface to this document a short statement by the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] and myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CHECKING PRIVILEGE FOR POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITORS

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask to have the clerk read from the desk certain excerpts from a letter regarding the banking situation, referring particularly to a bill which I introduced a few days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE AMERICAN MANUFACTURING CO.,
Philadelphia, Pa., February 23, 1932.

United States Senator DILL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: An Associated Press dispatch in some of yesterday's papers announced that you had introduced a bill in the Senate authorizing the Government Postal Savings banks to permit a checking privilege to its depositors.

This is what we call a real piece of constructive legislation, and, if enacted into a law, will, as you say, do more to bring money out of hiding than any other plan that has yet been proposed.

The public have lost confidence in the privately owned banks, and nothing but a Government banking system will give them the confidence that is necessary to restore hoarded money into circulation.

If you have your bill enacted into law you will have accomplished something that will do more than restore hoarded money into circulation; it will assure the public of a banking service on an equalitarian basis like our post office—something that they will never receive from our privately owned banks.

Your bill will doubtless be vigorously opposed by the American Bankers' Association, who are probably powerful enough to prevent its enactment into law, although the public generally is in favor of it, and even though your bill can not be passed now, it is my conviction that sooner or later the Government must go into the banking business, as it has already gone into it in connection with the farmers, and surely the general public are entitled to the same consideration as the farming population.

Sincerely,

F. B. CLARK.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that the bill I introduced does not propose to put the Government into the banking business, but it does propose that for a limited period accounts of small depositors in the Postal Savings banks may be subject to check.

THE CASE FOR GENERAL DISARMAMENT—ARTICLE BY REV. SYDNEY STRONG

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some comments from Geneva, Switzerland, on the case for general disarmament by Rev. Sydney Strong.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMENTS FROM GENEVA—THE CASE FOR GENERAL DISARMAMENT

Since I am interested especially in total disarmament, I have rejoiced to note many signs pointing toward general disarmament. As the best, I think the only, way to cure a drunkard is for him to stop drinking, so the only way to cure man of his collective-murder insanity is to take away his arms. Increasing multitudes are thinking this way about war. While the committee planned for a conference for the reduction and limitation of armaments, increasing numbers are talking about general disarmament, yea, total disarmament.

LITTLE NATIONS

It would not be difficult to persuade the majority of the nations to follow gallant, wise Denmark, but the "big powers" strut around like cocks in a barnyard, and the little fellows feel that they are not secure without a set of spurs. That is going to change. What good, anyway, is the tin sword of the little nations? Somebody ought to start a "Denmark Club." It is time that the little nations were rebelling against the big fellows. What right have big nations—Italy, Japan, France, Germany, and Britain—to sit forever on a council, like a board of directors, and hand out judgments as dictated by their own wisdom and greed? None whatever. This location of power is enough to condemn the League of Nations unless it is changed. It is morally impossible for that to continue. Get up, little nations! Assert yourselves! Form a respectable society of nonmurderers. Better be small and decent. Maybe lonesome for a while. The decent are so always—but I think I detect a spirit of sanity springing up in nations like Sweden, Norway, Holland, Spain, Canada, Australia that is ready to break, not merely shorten, the sword.

GERMANY

Everyone was deeply interested as Doctor Bruening walked forward to the platform. He was greeted with hearty applause from the galleries and the delegates. (I fear that this had a little to do with the order given out prohibiting applause. I thought when the order was given, "There, one feather gone from the bird of freedom.") I was deeply moved by Doctor Bruening's speech. Almost the first time this great people had spoken to the world about war.

Germany is disarmed down to the bone. I am personally convinced that in spite of the suffering and humility that have been the unmerited lot of the Germans, they will look back on their disarmament as a great move upward in their development, provided they go on in patience. It was tough. It is tough. She will win. And it looks as if she might be the model and the great argument for general disarmament.

Germany was in the limelight. Covetous eyes were not looking upon her, but a soft light came from all the spectators' eyes. It was the message of an oppressed people. My seat mate, an intelligent Hollander, whispered at the close, "Awfully good."

Bruening spoke of disarmament, not reduction. I am especially interested in this aspect of his words. He hoped for a "radical disarmament on the basis of perfect equality of rights and duties." (Any other way is sure to lead to failure.) And, again, "General disarmament, far from threatening the security of states, would rather strengthen it." * * * "Nothing can rid us of the responsibility that would be ours if we failed to attain a definite solution of the problem of general disarmament." * * * "The German people ask that their own disarmament shall be followed by general disarmament." * * * "The German people will stand for a general disarmament which must create for all nations an equal measure of security."

Now, some may say this would be fine for Germany. Well, what if it is? It would be fine for everybody. I rejoice that here was a great, intelligent people putting for the goal of their endeavor—not reduction nor limitation but real disarmament, general disarmament. Germany for a century has led mankind in so much of highest good. Perhaps she will lead in permanent peace, a place I covet for America. First in peace!

THE SOVIET UNION

Everyone listened intently when M. Litvinoff spoke—some to agree, some not to agree. I was especially interested in the way he put the matter of general disarmament. One may not accept Soviet economics and still be moved by the argument for general disarmament. In listening to a voice from Russia one should remember that Russians are a peace-loving people, and need not be surprised to discover idealism of a high order coming out of Russia. Some 30 years ago a proposal for world peace came from no less a person than the Czar of Russia, and it was neutralized by Anglo-Saxon common sense. If that voice out of Russia had been heeded, Europe might have been spared the last holocaust.

I thought while Litvinoff was speaking: Here is a message that would save the world from war, mankind's cancer, and yet the ears down on the floor below will not listen because of fear, prejudice, or doubt.

Let us look at his plan and note the plea for general disarmament, the idea that I think was in the message years ago. Listen while Litvinoff speaks—in plain English:

"Popular clamor for the abolition of war can not be satisfied by the slight reduction of armaments or war budgets—what is required is to find a way to put an end to war.

"My Government has for 10 years proposed total general disarmament as the only way of putting an end to war. In making this proposal my Government took into consideration the demands and claims of the peoples throughout the world as well as the spirit of its own people.

"The reduction of armaments is incapable of guaranteeing us against any war, especially if such reduction is not very radical. We must endeavor to make war itself impossible, since it is the people who suffer, both in the victorious and defeated countries, and, moreover, as the last war has shown, the people in all countries.

"We have the conviction that the only infallible way to the solution of the problem of the organization of peace, the problem of the averting of war, the problem of assuring security to all nations, is the way we have recommended—the way of general and total disarmament. Total and general disarmament is the only effective guarantee against war.

"Had our proposal of four years ago been accepted at the time, the events in the Far East would not have occurred, there would have been no threats of a new world war, and the economic crisis now being almost universally experienced would undoubtedly have been less acute.

"The idea of total universal disarmament is distinguished by its simplicity and by the ease with which it could be carried out. * * * Identical security and equality of conditions for all countries could only be arrived at by total disarmament.

"We have no illusions as to the fate in store for our proposition. (What a pity he felt the necessity of saying this—a proposition such as might have been found in the writings of the sages.) We are willing to discuss any proposal for reduction of armaments, regarding it as first steps toward total disarmament. We might add that we were the first to propose the complete destruction of the most aggressive types of armaments, including tanks, big guns, big battleships, aircraft carriers, bombing planes, chemicals, bacteriological warfare, and the like.

"We will warmly support any proposals approaching or outstripping our own. We will support the equal rights of all participants in the conference and equal security for all states.

"My country is in less favorable position as regards security than other countries. * * * Even now, one of the strongest naval powers refuses to establish normal peaceful relations with us. * * * Despite all this, I am empowered to declare here the readiness of the Soviet Union to disarm to the same extent to which others, first and foremost those at our borders, may agree. * * * The creation of effective security against war can only be carried out by means of total and general disarmament.

"Security against war must be created. This security can never be achieved by roundabout ways but only by the direct way of total general disarmament. * * * This idea is by no means Utopian in itself, but it can be made Utopian by its rejection by the other states represented here * * *."

Whoever uttered those words, I could not withhold the conviction that they were of highest importance, and in the interests of mankind ought to be made the basis of disarmament. I would be proud if the representative of my country had spoken them, instead of some good and suggestive words that do not breathe the spirit of adventure and the great West of Whitman, Lincoln, and Ben Franklin. If the cautious British delegate had offered them, I should become an Adventist, and believe that the Christ was coming, quite soon. If France should have spoken those words for total general disarmament, I should be willing to believe that Victor Hugo and Lafayette had come back.

Why is man forever rejecting the highest? This is the third time that this offer has been made. If it is sincere, test it. Surely, nothing could be blacker than the prospect of accepting a makeshift plan of reducing. If there is doubt of sincerity, then call the bluff. God has often been known to travel incognito.

OTHER VOICES

There is the Women's Peace Union, whose representative, Mrs. Frieda Lazarus, New York, is crying day and night for total disarmament now, declaring "War is a crime against humanity, and there can be no compromise on a moral issue. The League of Nations is not functioning successfully because it sanctions the use of arms. * * * No society for international amity can function until the entire war machinery is eliminated. Reduction in armaments is a shortening of the sword, leaving the nations in the same relative position. What is needed is a breaking of the sword. * * * Nothing short of laying down of arms will provide for genuine disarmament."

The voices of the millions of women—world-wide—that were heard by the conference still reside here; they will not be comforted unless the sword is sheathed forever.

And there is the European Youth Crusade, organized under Donald Grant, of the F. O. R., who propose by meetings and petitions all over Europe to "march on" Geneva, calling for disarmament and world peace.

This is the note I seem to catch from different sources—from the spokesmen of Germany and Russia, from the children and the women: There is but one thing that will satisfy us and let us lie down in peace, and that is general disarmament, and until it is done we can not rest.

PROPOSED FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have here a letter from Mr. Frank Phillips, a well-known leader of industry in the Southwest and prominent in the oil industry, in which he presents convincing arguments in opposition to the proposed Federal tax upon gasoline. I ask unanimous consent to have the letter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHILLIPS PETROLEUM CO.,
New York, February 19, 1932.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: You have doubtless received many protests against the proposed Federal gasoline tax, but it is such a serious matter that I must make a record of my strong opposition.

A gasoline tax for general revenue is unjust and discriminatory.

Notwithstanding a well-sustained demand, the petroleum industry is prostrate because of a world-wide oversupply. In such a buyers' market the tax can not be passed on in fact whatever may be argued in theory.

Gasoline is already subjected to excessive taxes in all of the States, and experience has proved they can not be collected from dishonest marketers. Evasion is increasing, and the amounts involved run into millions of dollars. The money thus stolen from the State or motorist is used in destructive price cutting; increasing the demoralization of the industry.

These State taxes collected in 1931 amounted to some $550,000,000, which is more than the refiners received for the gasoline and approximately as much as the producers received for all of the oil produced in the United States that year. In addition, other taxes on the industry were about $175,000,000.

It is incredible that our Government should on the one hand deny protection from imports of cheaply produced foreign oils and on the other hand add to the staggering tax burdens of an already prostrate industry.

A manufacturers' tax, safeguarded against duplication, such as I understand is now under consideration, has much to recommend it and I hope legislation of that character will take the place of the proposed gasoline tax.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK PHILLIPS.

PROPOSED ANTI-INJUNCTION LEGISLATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 935) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be considered first.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few observations upon the pending bill and the amendments to it. If any Senator has a matter that he would like to present at this time foreign to the bill before us previous to my entering upon a few minutes of discussion, I will yield to him.

Mr. President, I desire to correct an impression that seems to prevail among my brothers of the bar, as evidenced by the telegrams just this moment reaching me. They are sent from many cities. The lawyers in different parts of America have under a misconception conveyed to the public at large a misunderstanding as to the bill. It is to the effect that the Senate is considering passing a bill the object of which is to prevent the courts from issuing injunctions for the protection of persons and property. Permit me to say that there is no such measure before this body. There is no effort on the part of any Senator here on either side of the Chamber or on the part of any member of the committee, minority or majority, in any wise to affect—far less to reduce or destroy, the just jurisdiction of the courts in a full exercise of the equity power which is vested in the Federal courts by the Constitution of the United States. The effort here is to guide the exercise of the power so that the courts may not violate the Constitution and destroy the private and personal rights of men which are guaranteed under that Constitution.

Mr. President, it is a bit of humor to recall that in a former day Lord Hazelhurst, standing upon the edge of the Parliament Hall, having heard that Gibbon had issued his third volume of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, remarked, "I see that Gibbon has written another damn fat book." I am bold enough, sir, to present in something of audacity to this present occasion, my own book, from the appearance of which I, too, may be accused of having written "another damn fat book"; but it just so happens that in this volume on injunctions, of which I am the author, and which has lately been finished, I have expended some time in gathering together those decisions which clearly disclose that the equity jurisdiction of the Federal courts, as is suggested in the Constitution creating our courts, is, of course, as the eminent lawyers of this body well know—and all Senators who are lawyers are eminent lawyers or they could not have gotten here—that of the English courts in the exercise of their equity jurisdiction as King's bench or chancelleries which we took by the adoption of our system, and the equity jurisdiction of the later English courts was a mere offshoot of the Roman system prevailing in the time of the Cæsars. This was a writ wholly and only for the purpose of exercising a prerogative of the sovereignty of nations, a power assumed and exercised to prevent invasion, intrusion, or any form of usurpation of royal prerogative in matters of government. There never was an assumption in the adoption of the theory of injunction that it should apply to individual conduct and to persons. That exercise of authority has grown upon the courts of this country in the growth of complete usurpation. Yet the tendency continued and multiplied until there was a general assent to allow this innovation upon the theory that the circumstances surrounding each offense justified the departure to avoid violence.

The bill before this body presents merely the proposition that in the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts granting injunctions there should be such limitation upon that exercise as prevents the violation of the Federal Constitution, particularly the provision which is intended to assure and establish the right of the individual to his life and his liberty, harking back merely to the guaranty of the Declaration of Independence and carrying out the assurance of protection by the American Government to the American freeman.

At this time I take the liberty of referring my brother members of the bar throughout the country—who, I dare say, have stormed my comrades here, as they have myself, with protests upon a misunderstanding as to the purposes of this bill—to the fact that the people who are interested in this measure are not exceptional. There is nothing about their petition here that is so remarkable in itself as to be an extreme undertaking, without precedent, without parallel.

What is it they ask? They ask that the exercise of injunction power shall not go to certain subject matter which, according to their judgment, is violative of the public policy of a free land, this their America. Also, that it shall not go to such an extreme as will prevent them from conducting such private affairs as attach themselves to their own lives in the enjoyment and the pursuit of their liberty of trade or business.

May I take the liberty to speak to my confreres a moment? I invite you to recall that there is before this body now, presented just a day past by the eminent Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], a suggestion from a very large and commendable body of business men who desire to be relieved of the injunction power of the Sherman Antitrust Act and who ask that that injunction that is now the law shall be lifted from them, and that they may not be held responsible to comply with certain contracts which that law in its implication and its expression enforces them to obey; otherwise to be criminals in the event of its violation. They are asking to have these provisions amended; in many instances, to have them wholly repealed.

The men who are asking the favor here touching the injunction are not asking a personal favor to them, but a mere expression of a righteous law. They, like these eminent gentlemen who represent large institutions, who seek exemption before this body from a business law of oppression, merely ask the application of what they feel to be an equity of human right in their just behalf.

I invite you to the second instance. The railroads of this country are now petitioning this body—I may say, the whole Congress—for a measure that will relieve them of the injunction put on them by the interstate commerce act, which provides in many respects something of an embargo against their joining together in some form of agreement which works a compulsion for the carrying out of certain regulations which are treated as a contract between the Government and themselves, but which they say now, as between the shipper and themselves, produce such loss and such great injury to them as to disturb the revenues of their property and imperil the value of all securities. They ask to be relieved, by some fitting measure of repeal or amendment, of this particular injunction that is now upon them by virtue of the operation of the law.

I invite your attention, sir, to the fact that the eminent Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] speaking in behalf of his colleagues on both sides of this body, presents a measure that asks that the bankers be relieved of the injunction policy that really prevails as to them in the form of an obligation that compels them to obey a contract which is made by statute, as they contend, and enforced upon them by the regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency but which they assert by virtue of its operation deprives them of liberty of conduct, and embarrasses the pursuit of their business, and serves as an obstruction to the ordinary course of finance in this country to the embarrassment of the banks and the threat of insolvency to the business man. They ask to be relieved, and they point out the hardship of the enforcement of such measures and, upon the basis of ordinary justice in commerce, ask to be exempted from the further hardship of its provisions.

Do the men who ask relief from this injunction ask anything further than that which these very eminent and respectable gentlemen, representing the solemn business thought of the country, ask in their own behalf?

Mr. President, I desire to protest to my brother members of the bar throughout this country against their further circulating to the profession, in their different meetings, the suggestion that this honorable body, sworn to obey the Constitution, is now upon the eve of passing a law that deprives the courts of protecting property and the rights of man merely because he may be an employer.

I invite the attention of the country, as I do that of this honorable body—all of whom will agree with me—to the fact that the provisions before this body are merely serving the object of carrying out the law as we took it from the English jurisprudence, and as they took it from the Roman system, and as we have finally devised and improved upon it in different forms of statutory enactment in our own country, providing that injunctions shall serve the uses of stopping wrongs and holding matters in suspense until the right of them can be determined. That in the case before the Senate it is merely proposed that the courts shall not perpetrate a wrong under the theory of suspending one, and shall not deprive a citizen of his liberty under the theory of enforcing it, and shall not work an oppression upon an individual and make him a criminal because of an honest difference in his mind regarding his rights under what he calls a contract. This honorable body is seeking nothing further than to construe the law and place before the country what would be a righteous declaration of it.

I favor the bill because it serves that office. I thank the Senate for its indulgence of me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the bill for action upon the amendments of the committee.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 2, line 12, after the word "employment," to strike out "wherefore" and insert "wherefore, though he should be free to decline to associate with his fellows," so as to make the bill read to the end of section 2:

Be it enacted, etc., That no court of the United States, as herein defined, shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except in strict conformity with the provisions of this act; nor shall any such restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction be issued contrary to the public policy declared in this act.

SEC. 2. In the interpretation of this act and in determining the jurisdiction and authority of the courts of the United States, as such jurisdiction and authority are herein defined and limited, the public policy of the United States is hereby declared as follows:

Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, developed with the aid of governmental authority for owners of property to organize in the corporate and other forms of ownership association, the individual unorganized worker is commonly helpless to exercise actual liberty of contract and to protect his freedom of labor, and thereby to obtain acceptable terms and conditions of employment, wherefore, though he should be free to decline to associate with his fellows, it is necessary that he have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection; therefore, the following definitions of, and limitations upon, the jurisdiction and authority of the courts of the United States are hereby enacted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, my understanding is that we are proceeding now with the committee amendments. The minority of the committee have submitted a number of amendments which are lying on the table. I assume that when we have completed the consideration of the committee amendments we may then proceed to perfect the bill by offering the amendments of the minority.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 5, after the word "enforceable," to insert "in any court of the United States"; in line 7, after the word "any," to insert "such"; and in the same line, after the word "court," to strike out "of the United States," so as to read:

SEC. 3. Any undertaking or promise, such as is described in this section, or any other undertaking or promise in conflict with the public policy declared in section 2 of this act, is hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of the United States, shall not be enforceable in any court of the United States and shall not afford any basis for the granting of legal or equitable relief by any such court, including specifically the following:

Every undertaking or promise hereafter made, whether written or oral, expressed or implied, constituting or contained in any contract or agreement of hiring or employment between any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, and any employee or prospective employee of the same, whereby—

(a) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises not to join, become, or remain a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization; or

(b) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises that he will withdraw from an employment relation in the event that he joins, becomes, or remains a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, before the word "involving," to strike out "cases" and insert "any case," so as to read:

SEC. 4. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute to prohibit any person or persons participating or interested in such dispute (as these terms are herein defined) from doing, whether singly or in concert, any of the following acts:

(a) Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment;

(b) Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act;

(c) Paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute, any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance, or other moneys or things of value;

(d) By all lawful means aiding any person participating or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State;

(e) Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence;

(f) Assembling peaceably to act or to organize to act in promotion of their interests in a labor dispute;

(g) Advising or notifying any person of an intention to do any of the acts heretofore specified;

(h) Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified; and

(i) Advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing without fraud or violence the acts heretofore specified, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 5. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon the ground that any of the persons participating or interested in a labor dispute constitute or are engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy because of the doing in concert of the acts enumerated in section 4 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 1, after the word "proceedings," to insert "and on his filing the usual bond for costs"; in line 10, after the word "certify," to insert "as in ordinary cases"; in line 3, before the word "record," to strike out "entire"; in the same line, after the word "case," to strike out "including a transcript of the evidence taken," so as to read:

SEC. 6. No officer or member of any association or organization, and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute, shall be held responsible or liable in any court of the United States for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

SEC. 7. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a temporary or permanent injunction in any case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, as herein defined, except after hearing the testimony of witnesses in open court (with opportunity for cross-examination) in support of the allegations of a complaint made under oath, and testimony in opposition thereto, if offered, and except after findings of fact by the court, to the effect—

(a) That unlawful acts have been committed and will be continued unless restrained;

(b) That substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow;

(c) That as to each item of relief granted greater injury will be inflicted upon complainant by the denial of relief than will be inflicted upon defendants by the granting of relief;

(d) That complainant has no adequate remedy at law; and

(e) That the public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property are unable or unwilling to furnish adequate protection.

Such hearing shall be held after due and personal notice thereof has been given, in such manner as the court shall direct, to all known persons against whom relief is sought, and also to those public officers charged with the duty to protect complainant's property: Provided, however, That if a complainant shall also allege that, unless a temporary restraining order shall be issued without notice, a substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will be unavoidable, such a temporary restraining order may be issued upon testimony under oath, sufficient, if sustained, to justify the court in issuing a temporary injunction upon a hearing after notice. Such a temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days, and shall become void at the expiration of said five days. No temporary restraining order or temporary injunction shall be issued except on condition that complainant shall first file an undertaking with adequate security sufficient to recompense those enjoined for any loss, expense, or damage caused by the improvident or erroneous issuance of such order or injunction, including all reasonable costs (together with a reasonable attorney's fee) and expense of defense against the order or against the granting of any injunctive relief sought in the same proceeding and subsequently denied by the court.

The undertaking herein mentioned shall be understood to signify an agreement entered into by the complainant and the surety upon which a decree may be rendered in the same suit or proceeding against said complainant and surety, the said complainant and surety submitting themselves to the jurisdiction of the court for that purpose. But nothing herein contained shall deprive any party having a claim or cause of action under or upon such undertaking from electing to pursue his ordinary remedy by suit at law or in equity.

SEC. 8. No restraining order or injunctive relief shall be granted to any complainant who has failed to comply with any obligation imposed by law which is involved in the labor dispute in question, or who has failed to make every reasonable effort to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or voluntary arbitration.

SEC. 9. No restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction shall be granted in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, except on the basis of findings of fact made and filed by the court in the record of the case prior to the issuance of such restraining order or injunction; and every restraining order or injunction granted in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute shall include only a prohibition of such specific act or acts as may be expressly complained of in the bill of complaint or petition filed in such case and as shall be expressly included in said findings of fact made and filed by the court as provided herein.

SEC. 10. Whenever any court of the United States shall issue or deny any temporary injunction in a case involving or growing out of a labor dispute, the court shall, upon the request of any party to the proceedings and on his filing the usual bond for costs, forthwith certify as in ordinary cases the record of the case to the circuit court of appeals for its review. Upon the filing of such record in the circuit court of appeals, the appeal shall be heard and the temporary injunctive order affirmed, modified, or set aside with the greatest possible expedition, giving the proceeding precedence over all other matters except older matters of the same character.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 11, after the word "cases," to strike out "where" and insert "in which," so as to read:

In all cases in which a person shall be charged—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendments in section 11 be passed over until the amendments in section 14 are passed upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the object of the Senator; but I think he will be able to accomplish what he desires if we agree to the amendments in section 12, one of which is not a committee amendment that the committee acted on formally but which I will offer as soon as the committee amendments are disposed of; and then, if those amendments are agreed to, one of the amendments on page 12, in order to make it harmonious, ought to be rejected. The Senator will accomplish the same thing if we go on in the regular way, I think.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I appreciate that situation; but should the amendments proposed to section 11 be adopted, I fear that it will create a situation that will defeat the purposes of section 11 if the amendments in section 14 are all rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. No; not all of them.

Mr. BLAINE. Not all of them; no.

Mr. NORRIS. To save time, Mr. President, I withdraw any objection. I am willing to follow the course suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the postponement of consideration of all the committee amendments to section 11 until after the committee amendments to section 14 have been disposed of. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and, under this unanimous-consent agreement, the amendment already agreed to in line 11 on page 9 will be considered as vacated.

The next amendment under the unanimous-consent agreement was, on page 9, line 24, after the word "court," where it first occurs, to strike out "is authorized to" and insert

"may"; on page 10, line 2, after the word "the," to strike out "attack occurred otherwise than in open court" and insert "contempt occurred elsewhere than in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice"; and in line 7, after the word "as," to strike out "provided in case of the approval of an affidavit of personal bias or prejudice under section 21 of the Judicial Code" and insert "is provided by law," so as to read:

SEC. 12. The defendant in any proceeding for contempt of court may file with the court a demand for the retirement of the judge sitting in the proceeding, if the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of such judge and if the contempt occurred elsewhere than in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice. Upon the filing of any such demand the judge shall thereupon proceed no further, but another judge shall be designated in the same manner as is provided by law. The demand shall be filed prior to the hearing in the contempt proceeding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 19, after the word "terms," to strike out "and" and insert "or," so as to read:

SEC. 13. When used in this act, and for the purposes of this act—

(a) A case shall be held to involve or to grow out of a labor dispute when the case involves persons who are engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation; or have direct or indirect interests therein; or who are employees of the same employer; or who are members of the same or an affiliated organization of employers or employees; whether such dispute is (1) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employees or associations of employees; (2) between one or more employers or associations of employers and one or more employers or associations of employers; or (3) between one or more employees or associations of employees and one or more employees or associations of employees; or when the case involves any conflicting or competing interests in a "labor dispute" (as hereinafter defined) of "persons participating or interested" therein (as hereinafter defined).

(b) A person or association shall be held to be a person participating or interested in a labor dispute if relief is sought against him or it and if he or it is engaged in the same industry, trade, craft, or occupation in which such dispute occurs, or has a direct or indirect interest therein, or is a member, officer, or agent of any association composed in whole or in part of employers or employees engaged in such industry, trade, craft, or occupation.

(c) The term "labor dispute" includes any controversy concerning terms or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, or concerning employment relations, or any other controversy arising out of the respective interests of employer and employee, regardless of whether or not the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

(d) The term "court of the United States" means any court of the United States whose jurisdiction has been or may be conferred or defined or limited by act of Congress, including the courts of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 3, after the word "any," to strike out "provisions" and insert "provision," so as to read:

If any provision of this act—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same line, after the word "act," to strike out "or the application thereof to any person or circumstance."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment be rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator make an explanation as to the purpose of the amendment and the position of the Senator with respect to it?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, my own idea was, as I stated when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] asked to defer action on the amendments to section 11, that we ought to consider them first, and then I could have given a better reason for the rejection of this amendment than I can now.

The particular language does not make any particular change, excepting as to a degree. Section 14, before it was amended, read as follows:

If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

The amendment of the committee really limits the effect of the bill. It would appear more logical if we had disposed of the amendments of section 11; but the Senator will realize that if this amendment is agreed to and the other one commencing in line 6 is likewise agreed to, the effect of holding any provision of any section of the bill unconstitutional would probably be to invalidate the entire section. If section 11 is amended as we desire to have it amended, we can well imagine a case where a particular section might have more than one subject matter in it, and that one provision might be held unconstitutional and the balance of the section perfectly constitutional. The bill as it was originally drawn would permit that course to be taken, and I do not want to narrow it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the word "provision" used in the amendment which has been tendered contemplate that if the constitutionality of one feature of a section or sentence was declared unconstitutional, it would have no effect upon the residue?

Mr. NORRIS. That is just what I want to be certain about. The Senator has stated it in a nutshell. I think that would be true, even if this amendment were agreed to; but to avoid any possibility of an erroneous construction, I want to have this amendment rejected, so that the section will read, "If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held unconstitutional, it shall not affect the balance of the act."

That we will accomplish if we reject this amendment.

Mr. KING. It is my understanding of the interpretation of statutes, as stated by Sutherland and Endlich, that the view expressed by the Senator is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so; but we get into the habit of putting these provisions in measures, perhaps unnecessarily. I do not want to narrow it. I can conceive of a condition, not in this law, particularly, but in any law, where some particular provision, or its application to some particular person, might be held unconstitutional, and I do not want to take any chance of having held unconstitutional any more than the one particular item held to be unconstitutional. That is the reason why I have asked that this amendment be rejected.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. We had some discussion of this provision in the committee, and I reached the conclusion that if no change were to be made in the language of the section as it was considered before this amendment was proposed we would meet this situation, that the Supreme Court might pass upon an act committed by John Smith which is held to be in violation of some provision of this act because unconstitutional, but that would not go to the merits of any other case which might arise, and if John Doe committed an offense, then, so far as John Doe's offense was concerned, the court would again be called upon to pass on the validity of that provision. That can not be the intent of the Senator, and yet that is the language of the section as he would have it if this amendment were rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I take it just the other way, if the Senator who is objecting to this now is right—and I think he is—that because the application of a particular section to a particular individual, for instance, would be held unconstitutional, it ought not to follow that the section as applied to other conditions should be held unconstitutional. I think I ought to discuss it in connection with section 11 and have the Senate turn to section 11, and tell them what the committee is going to ask the Senate to do.

Section 11 provides—

In all cases in which a person shall be charged with contempt for violation of a restraining order or injunction issued by a court of the United States, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury.

And so forth, with some exceptions. It is not necessary to read the balance.

The Senate will remember that the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] called attention to the fact that the very next section, section 12, provided that—

> The defendant in any proceeding for contempt of court may file with the court a demand for the retirement of the judge sitting in the proceeding, if the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of such judge and if the contempt occurred—

Otherwise than in open court, and so forth.

The Senator from New Mexico asked why in that case a defendant accused of contempt should be deprived of a jury, when it was provided in section 11 that when one was charged with contempt for violation of a restraining order or injunction he would be entitled to a jury trial.

These sections are aimed at conditions having to do with newspapers. Section 12 is intended to apply to a case where a newspaper makes an attack upon the character or the conduct of a judge, and probably will have no other application. The newspaper writer up to that time has not violated any restraining order, none has been issued, but he is charged with contempt for another reason. The Senator from New Mexico said, I think very well, "Why should not such a man be entitled to a jury trial as well as the man who is charged with contempt because he has violated an order of the judge?"

It is to afford opportunity to a newspaper or any person who, out of court, makes an attack upon a judge to have a jury trial that I want these provisions to be enacted.

When we come to section 11 I shall propose to strike out, commencing on line 12, page 9, the words "for violation of a restraining order or injunction" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "in," so that the section will read: "In all cases in which a person shall be charged with contempt in a court of the United States," and so forth. That would permit a newspaper editor who it was alleged had made a charge against a judge's character to have a jury trial. But the contention is made by some attorneys that in the case of a newspaper article charging a judge with bad conduct and misconduct the newspaper editor would not be entitled to a jury trial, because, it is claimed, it is entirely different from the other cases provided for in this bill. When we strike out the language which I have read, if we do, it will enable the newspaperman who is charged, as in section 12, to have a jury trial.

I do not believe the case I am about to state would occur; I am not intimating that it is my belief that such a case would occur, but there are other lawyers and attorneys who do believe it. Suppose a judge should say, "That is unconstitutional. This newspaperman has not a right to a jury," and then held that section 11 was entirely unconstitutional because it included a class in which the court said it was unconstitutional. Although it might be constitutional as to the other classes that it covered, if the court held that the entire section was unconstitutional, then everything in this bill providing for a jury trial in cases of contempt would be held unconstitutional.

So we wanted to leave in the provision "if any provision of this act," which is the original language "or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held unconstitutional or otherwise invalid, the remaining provisions of the act and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby." Have I made myself clear?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is now proposing to restore the stricken words "or the application thereof"?

Mr. NORRIS. That is the amendment pending, and I have asked the Senate to reject the amendment. I will ask the same when we come to the amendment on line 6, which is to strike out the words "and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances."

Mr. GEORGE. I did not hear the first part of the discussion. Would it interfere with the Senator if I should ask him a few questions?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly not.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it not the Senator's view, anyway, that in passing upon the validity or the constitutionality of an act or any section of an act the court always takes into consideration the particular application being made?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Is not this true, that the entire section 14 is similar to a section we usually write into long acts?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Nevertheless, it is the duty of the court, in any event, to sustain any part of an act——

Mr. NORRIS. Or any part of a provision.

Mr. GEORGE. Or any part of a provision, which itself is sufficient to reflect the legislative intent, although part of it goes down?

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct. The only thing I have in mind is not to becloud the matter by narrowing that, which I am afraid we would do if we agreed to these two amendments of the committee and also agreed to the other amendments in section 11, which I am going to ask the Senate to agree to.

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand the Senator's position, it is exactly what I have always believed to be the true position of a court in interpreting any statute.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska permit an inquiry?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Perhaps it is not quite germane to the discussion, but the Senator referred to the statement made by the Senator from New Mexico, and I was wondering what proceeding would be instituted under the Senator's contention against a person who is charged with violating an order of the court in commenting upon testimony, if some newspaper published inaccurate accounts, or though accurate were of such a character as to interfere with proceedings of the court, and calculated to interfere with the orderly conduct of the proceedings of the court. How would he be punished under the provisions, as the Senator interprets them? Is it an indirect or direct contempt? Would he be entitled to trial by jury?

Mr. NORRIS. We want to give him a trial by jury in every case of trial for contempt unless the offense takes place in the presence of the court or so near thereto as directly to obstruct the administration of justice.

Mr. KING. I would infer that would be so near the court as to obstruct the due administration of justice. I was trying to get the view of those who framed the provision as to whether trial by jury would be permitted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There is no practical aspect of that part of the discussion at all, as it seems to me, because the jury determines only questions of fact. The statement is there for itself; it speaks for itself. The only question would be as to whether the man published the statement or not. That could be referred to the jury. But the question as to whether the publication is calculated to influence the action of the court is for the court itself to determine. That is a question of law. There is no question of fact there with the jury except the question, Was the publication made?

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I would assent to the particular implication that would follow from the Senator's statement.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator, of course, has in mind the law of libel, which is quite a different thing.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. If section 11 is amended as indicated by the Senator, what would be the need for section 12, which provides for the substitution of another judge, and that sort of thing?

Mr. REED. The need for section 12 arises where some one has made a charge against the character of the judge.

Mr. FLETCHER. Section 11 covers all contempts.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, the point the Senator from Florida makes is that inasmuch as there is a right of trial by jury there is no occasion for bringing in another judge. But that does not seem to me to meet the situation, because, as I have just indicated, the jury simply tries the questions of fact, but the judge whose character is assailed, as it is alleged, will determine the question of law; that is to say, as to whether the publication, conceded to have been made, constitutes an imputation upon the character of the judge, and he ought not to be permitted to pass upon that question of law. The publisher has an opportunity under the provisions of section 12 to submit to another judge that question of law, namely, whether it is or is not calculated improperly to influence a court of justice.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HEBERT. I can not follow the Senator from Montana in his conclusion as to what will be submitted to the jury. All questions of fact will be submitted to the jury, not only the question whether or not the publication has been had—most likely that will be admitted at the outset in every case—but the question whether the language printed is offensive so as to bring the publisher in contempt before the judge. That is not a question of law. It is a question of fact whether or not it is offensive to the judge, as I view it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. By no means.

Mr. HEBERT. I may be mistaken about it, but it seems to me the jury is going to have cognizance of all the facts in the case.

Mr. NORRIS. They ought to, because they have to pass on the facts.

Mr. HEBERT. If the only fact upon which the jury is to pass is whether or not there has been a publication, it seems to me there is very little to be gained by that provision.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The jury is to pass upon all questions of fact; but the publication having been admitted, the question as to whether or not the language was such as is calculated to interfere with the administration of justice is as a matter of course a question of law.

Mr. HEBERT. But whether it offends the personal dignity of the court is not a question of law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Why not?

Mr. HEBERT. Because it might not interfere with the due administration of justice.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is the only basis for the contempt proceedings. The personal feelings of the judge are not to be involved in punishment for contempt.

Mr. HEBERT. But they are brought into consideration many times.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but they ought not to be.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But upon the pretense that it obstructs the administration of justice, and that is a question of law.

Mr. HEBERT. I repeat that if the only question that is to be passed on by a jury is whether or not there has been a publication of the statement, then we are not getting very far with this provision in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Possibly we are not. We have been considering a case—and it is a fair way to consider it because it is a case that illustrates what would happen—where an article appeared in a newspaper. That is not the only thing to which the provision might apply. It might apply to others than the case of editors and publishers of newspapers, but they are the ones to whom it does apply mostly as a practical application. Section 12 provides that the defendant may demand the retirement of the judge sitting in the proceeding if the contempt arises from an attack upon the character or conduct of the judge. There is a reason for taking that judge away in such a case and not taking him away in the ordinary contempt case, because there is an attack upon the character of the man who presides. He is really the complaining witness. He is the court to pass on the question too, and he passes on the judgment. There is a reason there for getting another judge, and that is all section 12 undertakes to accomplish.

It applies not only to a newspaper editor or publisher, but if a man goes on the street and makes insulting remarks about the judge, it would apply in a case of that kind. It is true under section 11, if we amend it as I want to do, that he is in any case entitled to a jury trial; but in the case cited by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], where the only question is the effect of the publication in the newspapers, the facts, if they were admitted, as they probably would be, would not be at issue.

But that is not an extreme case. It happens often in the ordinary trial where the evidence is introduced and one side or the other will say, "As to all this evidence, there is no dispute, but as a matter of law it does not justify anything that should follow from it." If the facts are once admitted, the question as to whether the publication is such an assault upon the character or conduct of the judge as to interfere with the administration of justice is a matter of law, of course.

But it does not necessarily follow that section 12 would apply only to the publication of something. It might involve something else where the facts themselves would be in dispute, and so we provide that in the case where the judge has been personally assaulted, if we want to go that far, he ought not to sit in judgment where he is the complaining witness. Some other judge ought to be sitting in judgment. But section 11, if we amend it as I wish to do, would give a jury trial. If the facts were not disputed, the jury would not do any good, of course.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator in that regard. I think that is perfectly sound, because the judge ought not to be the complainant and entitled to sit in judgment upon his own case like that. I quite agree with that thought and that idea in the bill. But I am a little concerned about the suggestion made with reference to what the jury is to do. Suppose a newspaper editor publishes an editorial and the judge, being rather oversensitive, brings a charge against him and he is haled into court for contempt of court. He admits the publication, but says, "I was doing it in the public interest. I feel that justice requires that I should say this much with respect to the trial, the conduct of the judge, and the whole proceeding. I contend that it does not directly interfere with the administration of justice, and I want a jury to pass on that question. I want all the facts and all the circumstances to be laid before a jury." Why should not that be done?

I quite sympathize with the position of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]. There is no dispute about the publication. There may be some question about all the facts and circumstances in connection with it, but the question is, Did it interfere with the administration of justice? Was it a thing that could interfere with the administration of justice? That ought to be submitted to a jury.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope that Senators will not get away on the discussion of an irrelevant matter. I do not agree with the Senator from Florida. I think when the facts are admitted it then becomes a question of law upon which the judge should pass. There may be cases, and perhaps in most cases it would occur, where the facts would be admitted, but there would be many cases in which there would be a dispute as to the facts.

But just what has that to do with the amendment now pending? We are giving the defendant a jury trial if we get this bill approved. Then the question will be one that will come before the court. We can not settle that law question now, so it has not anything to do really with the pending amendment. All we are trying now to do is to prevent the adoption of the amendment that is now pending, because if we amend section 11 as proposed, it will have a tendency to annul the possibility of a court declaring something in the section constitutional and something else in the same section unconstitutional. That is all we want to avoid.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that in nearly all States where the defendant charged with contempt is entitled to a jury, the issue submitted to the jury is by question and answer. It is never whether or not the respondent is guilty of contempt, but facts are submitted to the jury; that is to say, mere questions and answers, and from the finding of the facts, that is upon the answering of the questions by the jury, the court must necessarily make up his judgment.

But even if the jury had some latitude beyond that, is it not quite as important that the judge be absolutely impersonal in proceeding with the trial of the case as if the jury were confined alone to the mere finding of fact? In other words, ought not the judge to recuse himself anyway if an attack has been made upon his character, whether the jury sitting under him is to find the facts or whether the jury may go somewhat beyond the mere finding of facts in particular cases and also find intent and purpose? In any event, it seems to me a judge whose personal character had been attacked or whose character as a judge was the subject of attack would be quite willing to recuse himself if contempt proceedings were instituted against those charged with the offense, unless the offense occurred in the immediate presence of the court and tended directly to obstruct or interfere with the administration of justice. In any event, of course, the amendment, as I understand it, still leaves it within the power of the judge to hear and determine the contempt.

Mr. President, because I have not been able to attend all of the debate on this very important bill, I want to beg the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], to indulge me just a little and out of order while I ask him a few questions. My questions are prompted by the argument submitted by the minority of the committee on the bill. They arise because of the character of objections made by the minority.

If the chairman of the committee will refer to page 6 of the bill, paragraph (a), the suggestion has been made that the power of the equity court ought not to be taken away, even in labor disputes, to act before unlawful acts had yet occurred, and granted only in the event that such unlawful acts would be continued in the future. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not his view—it seems to me it probably is the correct view—that any attempt to commit an act which usually is defined as a crime would fall within the definition of unlawful acts which would authorize an injunction in a proper case? In other words, the minority report raises the question as to the power to enjoin for an attempted or a threatened unlawful act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is the Senator referring to subdivision (a) on page 6?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very sure the word "threatened" was omitted simply by inadvertence.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will not cause a discussion of that question now. It has not anything to do with the pending matter.

Mr. GEORGE. I wanted to ascertain the construction of it; but if it is inopportune at the moment, I will wait until we reach it.

Mr. NORRIS. Personally I am in favor of the language just as it stands in the bill, though I understand that the Senator from Montana and some other members of the committee do not agree with me.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not objecting to it, but what I am asking is, Would not the unlawful act itself include any attempt to commit such an act, because any attempts to commit unlawful acts are usually themselves declared to be crimes?

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that the phraseology might include an attempt to commit an unlawful act, but the minority members of the committee question that it would include a threat to commit an unlawful act, which is a different thing.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. I may be proceeding irregularly, but I am proceeding in this way because I have not had opportunity——

Mr. HEBERT. May I say to the Senator, if the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, that the minority have an amendment which meets all their objections to the bill?

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that.

The minority raise objections to the provision in section 8 of the bill, on page 8, which reads:

> No restraining order or injunctive relief shall be granted to any complainant who has failed to comply with any obligation imposed by law which is involved in the labor dispute in question, or who has failed to make every reasonable effort to settle such dispute either by negotiation or with the aid of any available governmental machinery of mediation or voluntary arbitration.

It is pointed out by the minority that the property of the employer might be destroyed through fraud or violence without any previous notice, so that the opportunity would not arise to resort to negotiation or other peaceful means of settling the dispute. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee is it not his opinion that the language "or who has failed to make every reasonable effort"—every reasonable effort—"to settle such dispute," would relieve any employer from the necessity of undertaking to negotiate where he had had no previous knowledge or notice whatever of an existing dispute?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not any doubt of it at all.

Mr. GEORGE. I so construe it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is correct.

Now, Mr. President, may we have a vote on the pending amendment? I ask the Senate to reject it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 14, on page 12, line 3, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out "or the application thereof to any person or circumstance."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I think I misunderstood the question as it was put by the Presiding Officer. May I ask that the question again be put?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator refer to the amendment which has just been acted upon?

Mr. HEBERT. Yes; the amendment in section 14. Was the question on the committee amendment to strike out the words in lines 3 and 4 "or the application thereof to any person or circumstance," or was it on the amendment proposing to eliminate the word "provision" in line 3?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote was on the amendment striking out the words "or the application thereof to any person or circumstance."

Mr. HEBERT. I should like to be recorded as being in favor of that amendment and in opposition to its rejection. I did not understand the question at the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was rejected?

Mr. HEBERT. No; I will not do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 14, page 12, at the beginning of line 5, it is proposed to insert the words "unconstitutional or otherwise."

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator from Nebraska what he understands the words "or otherwise" to mean in the phrase "held unconstitutional or otherwise"?

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose we can conceive of a statute being held invalid for some other reason than its unconstitutionality.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean as being against public policy?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me remark that the Supreme Court of the United States held certain provisions of the Lever Act invalid because they were too ambiguous to be understood.

Mr. KING. I merely wanted to understand the interpretation which should be given the words referred to.

Mr. NORRIS. We want to cover the whole ground.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 14, page 12, line 5, after the word "the," it is proposed to strike out "remainder" and insert "remaining provisions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 14, page 12, line 6, after the word "act," to strike out "and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances."

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that the Senate disagree to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the Senate revert to section 11, under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendments in section 11.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 11, page 9, in line 11, after the word "cases," it is proposed to strike out the word "where" and to insert the words "in which."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, after the word "with," to strike out the words "indirect criminal."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he ask unanimous consent at this point to make a further amendment in respect to that provision.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought I would do so as soon as we had completed the other amendments to the section.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I thought we had just reached the place where the amendment was to be offered.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought it might be well to allow, first, all committee amendments to the section to be agreed to. I have no objection, however, to offering the amendment referred to by the Senator from Montana now.

Mr. President, while it is not marked on the bill as one of the committee amendments, and technically it is not a committee amendment, yet those members of the committee who have been in charge of the bill, particularly members of the subcommittee, desire an amendment to be offered at this point which will be practically the same as a committee amendment. I move to strike out in line 12, after the word "contempt," the words "for violation of a restraining order or injunction issued by" and insert in lieu thereof the word "in," so that it will read:

Charged with contempt in a court of the United States.

I think I explained that amendment when we were discussing section 12 and the reason why it was desired to have it adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 11, page 9, line 12, it is proposed to strike out the words "for violation of a restraining order or injunction issued by" and insert the word "in."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should be glad to hear an explanation from the Senator. I was attending a committee meeting, and was not here during the Senator's address and his explanation of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the explanation I made and to which I referred was made just a few minutes ago in answer to the Senator's own question.

Mr. KING. I beg pardon.

Mr. NORRIS. The effect of this amendment will be, taking now as an illustration the case of a newspaper man, to give him or any other person described in section 12 a jury trial when charged with contempt of court. That is all it does.

Mr. KING. I was wondering if the Senator was seeking to make this section applicable to all proceedings and not merely labor cases?

Mr. NORRIS. It is applicable to all proceedings.

Mr. KING. Whether labor cases or mining cases or irrigation cases or any case in equity?

Mr. NORRIS. It is applicable to any case where anyone is charged with contempt; and it is proposed to strike this language out because in the cases we have been discussing—the case of a newspaper man, to illustrate—the one charged with contempt may not have violated any order of the court, because none has been issued, and so, unless we strike out those words, a person so charged under such circumstances would not be able to obtain a jury trial.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the amendment were adopted as a part of the bill and section 11 were declared unconstitutional, the rights provided in section 12 would still remain. Is that correct?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 11, page 9, line 17, the committee proposes to strike out the word "requirement" and insert the word "right."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 17, after the word "not," to strike out the words "be construed to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 268) to excuse certain persons from residence upon homestead lands during 1929, 1930, and 1931 in the drought-stricken areas.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9203) to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes.

EMERGENCY CREDIT EXPANSION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I call up the conference report on House bill 9203 and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it will not take very much time, I presume?

Mr. GLASS. I do not think it will take any time. The conference report has already been adopted by the other House.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the report of the committee of conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 9203.

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report may be dispensed with; it is well understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(For the conference report see the proceedings of Senate of yesterday, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4671.)

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not seen the report, and I confess that I do not know just what it contains. The press of business compelled me to be absent from the Chamber, and I have not seen the report until this moment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, a minor change made by the conferees is in the provision on page 1, where the House bill required a majority of the members of the Federal Reserve Board to act and the Senate bill required six; the conferees compromised on five.

As to the outstanding questions, one was upon the question of the limitation of the capital of individual banks that might apply to use their ineligible assets. The Senate bill provided a limitation of $2,000,000; the House bill provided no limitation at all; and the conferees unanimously agreed upon a limitation of $5,000,000 capital, which excludes only 62 of the 7,600 member banks from applying under the provision of the bill relating to individual banks; and embraced in those 62 are what we believe to be the speculative-banking institutions, which will have to come under the group provision of the bill.

The other major question of difference, upon which finally we unanimously agreed, was as to the time limit of the bill itself. The House limited the first section to one year; the Senate made no limitation at all. The House readily receded from its amendment, so that the first provision is made permanent law. As to the other provisions of the bill the House bill provided a time limit of one year, upon which they insisted, and the Senate conferees receded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Albuquerque Journal of February 19, 1932, in regard to the situation respecting the Navajo Indian Reservation in that State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

TO-DAY IN ALBUQUERQUE

It is hard to understand the conflicting and wavering policy of the Indian Bureau, which has procrastinated on relief to the storm-stricken Indians, and now proposes to make immediate payment of the Pueblo lands board awards to non-Indian claimants and refer the question of increased awards to Indians and white settlers back to the board as a court of claims and submit new findings.

New Mexico's representatives in Congress are unanimously behind a bill before Congress to increase the awards of the Pueblo Lands Board, the Senate subcommittee having found that the board dealt unjustly with the Indians and settlers in fixing the awards at figures below those determined by a board of appraisers. The Indian Bureau has wavered one way and another in seeking to defend the awards of this board, of which former governor, H. J. Hagerman, special Indian commissioner, was a member. The crux of the hearings has been a recommendation that the job of Mr. Hagerman be abolished.

The Pueblo Lands Board is now nonexistent. It spent more than $250,000 in arriving at its awards, which have been under fire ever since being announced. To refer the awards back to the board for new findings would only delay final settlement of a 75-year controversy and complicate a situation that now can be settled by Congress increasing the awards as fixed in the bill of Senators BRATTON and CUTTING. The board has shown itself incompetent and it would be the height of folly to return the matter to it. It is plainly the duty of Congress to settle the case without piling up more expense by extending the life of the board.

The inaction of the Indian Bureau in the emergency on the Navajo Reservation is pitiful. Despite appeals for the past three months, the bureau persists in handing out temporary relief and in conducting surveys while the sheep of the Indians are dying off. The bureau has all the facts on the situation as reported many weeks ago by the reservation superintendents, but sends out more representatives to report on the situation.

The committee of business men and traders organized at Gallup has forwarded another urgent recommendation to the Indian Bureau for a relief fund of $300,000 to feed the Navajo sheep. This committee reports that the death losses among the Indian flocks has been greater in the past 10 days than for any like period. The sheep are at the point of starvation. Unless feed is provided the flocks will be wiped out before grass comes.

Mr. Hagerman, who has been in Washington for several weeks, must be in close touch with the situation. Is he responsible in part for the delays on the part of the bureau? Will the bureau permit the flocks of the Indians to die off and then appropriate money for the purchase of some 300,000 to 500,000 sheep to replace the ones lost?

Such an action would be a boon to wool growers, who would find a market for their sheep close at home. But is it going to be a merciful thing to let Navajo sheep that might be saved die off? Does Mr. Hagerman think such a procedure would benefit the wool growers and does he have this in mind? The New Mexico Wool Growers is one of the few organizations in the State who have stood by Mr. Hagerman and by resolution expressed confidence in him and his policies.

In the face of the record it is hard to account for the policy of the bureau. On January 4 Senator ASHURST, of Arizona, pleaded for a $75,000 grant in the deficiency bill to meet the instant needs in the Navajo country. The petition was vetoed by the Budget Bureau. Indian Commissioner Rhoads then said that if the bureau did not get this he proposed to apply to the Red Cross. Later the appropriation was restored to the bill. More storms followed.

The commissioner was afterward urged by superintendents to hold a conference to decide on a three months' feeding plan for the sheep. The conference was never held. The bureau waited until February 12 to send out three men to make a survey. This after appeals by New Mexico and Arizona Senators. In the meantime sheep died by the thousands and are continuing to die. The Indian office administration is a revealing and disquieting picture. It has blustered and wavered around in its defense of Mr. Hagerman. It is equally as vacillating in meeting the Navajo situation.

PROPOSED ANTI-INJUNCTION LEGISLATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 935) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Rhode Island offers the following amendment:

On page 2, line 6, strike out all the remainder of page 2, through line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, a single employee is helpless in dealing with an employer, is ordinarily dependent on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and his family, is unable to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment; and

"Whereas it is essential—

"(a) That he shall be free to associate with his fellow workers and to form unions which will afford him and them the opportunity to deal on a basis of equality with those by whom they are employed;

"(b) That they may share equitably in the product of labor and capital;

"(c) That both the employer and the employee shall have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing, to negotiate the terms of employment free from any interference, restraint, or coercion in their efforts toward mutual aid or protection;

"Therefore, the following definitions of, and limitations upon, the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States are hereby enacted."

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I outlined at some length in my argument yesterday the reason for this amendment.

In the first place, we propose to take out of the preamble of the bill—and this amendment refers to the preamble—so much of it as to my mind is misleading.

The preamble in the majority bill states:

Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, developed with the aid of governmental authority—

It has seemed to the members of the minority of the committee that this is a misleading statement in an act of Congress. It infers that corporations and organizations of various kinds owe their existence to acts of Congress; that they are incorporated under congressional authority, under Federal authority; and yet I think I am safe in saying that all Senators know that that is not so, except in very rare instances. It has long since been the policy of Congress to refuse incorporation to anyone, especially for business purposes.

Corporations, being organized under charters granted by the States and under laws enacted by the several States, are subject to the laws of those States. They are governed by the laws of those States, except in some particulars. For instance, where they engage in interstate commerce, those particular activities are subject to certain rules and regulations formulated in pursuance of enactments of the Congress of the United States; but in the main, in the conduct of their business, corporations are governed by the laws of the States where they are domiciled. So it has seemed to us that we should not proceed with a misleading statement in the preamble to a bill as important as is this.

I realize that it may be considered of little moment; but I do not want to be a party to the enactment of a measure which states an untruth.

As to the purposes set out in the preamble, I think there is merit in adopting the amendment proposed by the minority, first because it is based upon and practically follows a pronouncement of the Supreme Court of the United States in the American Foundries case, to which I referred yesterday. In fact, most of it is the exact language of the court in that case. In the second place, Senators will observe upon a reading of the majority bill that it makes no reference to the rights of the employer. It goes on to say as to the employee, in line 14:

It is necessary that he—

That is, the employee—

have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference—

Always referring to the employee.

If Senators will refer to paragraph (c) of the amendment proposed by the minority, they will observe that reference is made to both the employer and the employee. I read paragraph (c):

That both the employer and the employee shall have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing, to negotiate the terms of employment free from any interference, restraint, or coercion in their efforts toward mutual aid or protection.

I assume that no one can have any serious objection to the language which we have used in this preamble; and therefore, Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not prevail.

It seems to me there are very substantial objections to the declaration of policy announced by the Senator from Rhode Island; and I can not think that there is any substance to the contention that the recital of policy in the bill reported by the committee is objectionable because corporations are organized under the laws of the States, and that this would imply that they exist and have their being by reason of legislation enacted by Congress.

In the first place, that is not the situation. There are a vast number of corporations that are organized by Congress. For instance, all of the transcontinental land-grant railroads exist by virtue of the acts of Congress, unless by reason of foreclosure or otherwise the property has passed into other hands. The Knights of Pythias, a very important organization, exists by virtue of an act of Congress. Applications for corporation charters from the Congress of the United States come here in such numbers that, as the Senator well knows, the Judiciary Committee has been obliged to adopt a rule or practice to check the introduction of bills of that character; and notwithstanding the antagonism that has been exhibited in the committee, from time to time one is reported and passed by the Congress. The national banks, as is suggested to me, are all organized under the law of Congress.

Mr. GORE. And the Western Union.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Western Union? I had forgotten about that.

However that may be, it seems to me it is a matter of no consequence in the recital of policy here whether corporations are organized under the State law or whether they are organized under the law of Congress. These are aggregations of capital which exist by virtue of statute, by virtue of laws of the various States, and we seek to put the body of workers on something like a footing of equality with these great aggregations of people who associate themselves in corporations and become the employers of labor.

So much for that. Now, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island whether he really would like to have us announce a policy here that the employer shall have full freedom of association. It is my understanding that the Sherman Act was passed for the express purpose of forbidding this full freedom of action between employers. I should very seriously question whether that expression would not trench upon the acts enacted by Congress for curbing monopoly. But why should we make a declaration of policy concerning the right of employers to associate themselves? What occasion is there for anything of that kind? What demand has there been from any source? What obstruction is there to their associating with each other for the purpose of mutual aid and protection in the prosecution of their business, so long as they do not violate the antitrust act?

I see no occasion for making a recital of that character in connection with a bill that relates to the issuance of injunctions and is intended to correct or prevent the abuses which have crept into the issuance of that particular remedial writ.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I may say that there is just as much reason for giving freedom to employers to organize as there is for giving freedom to employees to organize.

For the purposes of this bill we are dealing with a subject which has nothing to do with the antitrust laws. We are dealing with the subject of injunctions; and surely it can not be the contention of the Senator that employers may not have the same freedom of action that employees have in organization for purposes of this character.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, employers ought to have perfect freedom of association, so long as they do not trench upon the Sherman Act.

Mr. HEBERT. Just as employees ought to have freedom of action, provided they do not disobey the law.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but I remark that there is no occasion for it at all. Injunctions have not been sought to prevent the association of employers for the purpose of promoting their mutual benefit.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, this statement of policy in the bill is, I think, a statement of fact known to everybody who is fairly well versed upon our economic conditions. The Senator from Rhode Island says that it is not a fair statement of fact when we say:

Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, developed with the aid of governmental authority for owners of property to organize in the corporate and other forms of ownership association—

And so forth.

Mr. President, the words to which the Senator particularly objects, as I understand, are "with the aid of governmental authority." It does not make any difference what kind of authority it is, whether it is State or National or international; it developed by the aid, in many instances, of governmental authority.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HEBERT. Then I take it, from what the Senator says, that he would not object to an amendment adding the words "either State or Federal."

Mr. NORRIS. No; I would object to that, and let me tell the Senator why I object to it—because I am suspicious of the Greeks when they are bearing gifts.

Here are amendments piled up on this desk, some of them innocent looking on their faces, that, if agreed to, would put holes in this bill through which a willing judge, such as many of them are who have issued these unconscionable injunctions, would drive a camel. We are here, and we say so, for the purpose of protecting men who are poor and unable to cope with the great aggregations of wealth that face them when they undertake to get employment to sus-tain themselves and their families and give their children and their wives a right to eat food and wear clothes.

Mr. President, in the courts, from the Federal court down to the lowest court, lip service has been given time and time and time again in statements to the effect that laboring men must have the right to organize; they must have the right to associate themselves together; they must have the right to strike, because they are confronted with great aggregations of wealth that do not need the fostering care of a sympathetic Congress or legislature to protect them in their rights. Those expressions are common, but when it comes to the real decision, that lip service so often has been disregarded and they have not carried it into the decision itself.

Everybody knows that there exist now great aggregations of wealth, one corporation even combining with another. In the Hitchman case, the one the Senator from Rhode Island himself cited, the evidence showed that while there were several corporations engaged in the coal business in the mines in the vicinity affected, they all had their offices in the same room. There is no doubt about it. President Taft has beautifully stated the idea in several decisions and speeches and articles which have come from him.

In my judgment, there is nothing untrue in the statement that these great aggregations and combinations have come about, the economic conditions now prevailing have developed, often with the aid of governmental authority. The Senator from Montana has given us instances where they developed from Federal authority. But there are thousands of others in which they come from State authority, and the Senator says the States ought to handle it. The States issue the charters in most instances where the corporations do business.

Suppose we assume, now, for the purpose of the Senator's argument, that a State should pass just the kind of a law that those on the outside of the Senate who are opposing this law wanted, to wit, that there should be no organization of working men, that they should never have the right to associate in a single instance, and suppose the Federal court in that State should issue an injunction sustaining the law. The laboring men would be helpless. If we pass this bill, we will establish a policy for the Government of the United States. The economic conditions to which we refer here have come about from the gradual development of great aggregations of wealth, with the result that if a man is alone seeking employment, as the courts have often said, he is absolutely helpless, he must sign on the dotted line.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator does me a serious injustice when he says that I want the States to do this.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not said the Senator wants the States to do it.

Mr. HEBERT. That is what I understood the Senator to say just a moment ago. That is as far from being my purpose as can be. I have no such desire. I simply want to make this recital a statement of fact.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we have done that.

Mr. HEBERT. That is where we disagree. I have maintained that the statement is misleading, that it leads to an erroneous inference, and I suggested to the Senator in absolute good faith, not as a gift-bearing Greek, that he make a change so that there would be no question about what was in it. I confess that I can not see how any objection could be made to adding the words "State or Federal." It is one or the other. In most cases it is the State.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does the Senator want to put that language in? What good would it do?

Mr. HEBERT. I am not particular about putting it in; I prefer to leave it out altogether.

Mr. NORRIS. So do I. Then we are agreed on that.

Mr. HEBERT. I mean all reference to governmental authority.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would leave our declared policy out altogether.

Mr. HEBERT. No; we have a declared policy in the substitute bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I know the Senator has. I ask any Senator who has any doubt about the proper statement contained in the statement of policy to simply read it. It does not take a lawyer to know that we have stated the facts correctly.

The Senator says that we ought to put in a provision saying that these big corporations should organize. They have already done it. But suppose we did. Does anybody think they need our assistance? Is there anybody who has the idea that these great combinations need the help of Congress? I think, as the Senator from Montana has so well pointed out, that if we put in the other provision, the Senator has in here, on account of a declared policy of that kind, these great combinations of wealth would say in the next lawsuit that this action of Congress relieved them from all responsibility of organization under the Sherman Anti-trust Act.

Let us see what this bill does when it comes to equality. Just go to the next page. When it is speaking of these undertakings and promises, it says, beginning with line 15, page 3:

> Every undertaking or promise hereafter made, whether written or oral, express or implied, constituting or contained in any contract or agreement of hiring or employment between any individual, firm, company, association, or corporation, and any employee or prospective employee of the same, whereby—
> (a) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises not to join, become, or remain a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization; or
> (b) Either party to such contract or agreement undertakes or promises that he will withdraw from an employment relation in the event that he joins, becomes, or remains a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization.

When we come to the contract we specifically make the same provision apply to one side that applies to the other. I hope the amendment of the Senator will be voted down.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I am not greatly impressed with the importance of this particular amendment. I think it comes more nearly stating the facts than does the original bill. It is nothing like as important as other amendments which the minority propose to offer.

I rise at this time because of the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska, which clearly indicates that in his mind he has no faith in our good intentions with respect to these amendments or with respect to any part of this bill.

I say that that is not true. I say that the minority of the committee have worked as faithfully as we know how to work to try to get before the Senate this injunction bill and to get it in such form that it would do away with some bad practices which have grown up around injunctions growing out of labor disputes but, at the same time, would not violate fundamental principles. That is what we are seeking to do, and that is what we are earnestly seeking to do without any influence of any corporation or any employers of labor anywhere. Not a single one of them has talked to me about it. So far as I know, and so far as my State is concerned, they are not interested in it. They are interested to the same extent we are interested, however, and to the extent to which every good citizen ought to be interested, that is, to see that the fundamental principles upon which this country has been built shall not be destroyed in order that we may pass some legislation to correct evils which have grown up around the Federal courts.

I say, further, in this connection that if we do something here which weakens the courts of this country we do a great harm to the country itself. There are other provisions of this bill very much more important than this, but I want the Senate to know, and want the Senator from Nebraska to believe, that we come here earnestly to pass a bill, and we come here earnestly to pass a bill which will relieve these situations; and I do not think that during the progress of this debate we ought to stand under any such accusation as that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator that I have no intention of charging him with bad faith, nor charging any of those who oppose this amendment with bad faith, not in a single instance. I do not think I have done so. I do not think I have said anything that could be construed in that way. But I do say frankly that if those who are opposed to the bill we have produced, which we have here, would offer an amendment that I did not know anything about before it was offered, I would look on it differently from the way I would look upon one offered by those who were favoring the bill. That is perfectly natural. I see nothing wrong about that. I am not criticizing any Senator because he is opposed to the bill. If the Senator got any such idea in his mind, I wish he would disabuse himself of it. I do not question his good faith any more than I question mine, not a particle.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I inquire what the Senator had in mind when he made his remark about being suspicious of the approach of Greeks bearing gifts? I could not understand that in any other sense.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that explains itself, and I have explained it. If the Senator wants to put himself in the class of Greeks bearing gifts, I can not help it.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is the class the Senator put us in. That is what I am complaining about.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator wants to offer amendments like the ones suggested, which everybody, I think, knows are practically meaningless, I confess that I claim the right to oppose them, and I claim the right to look upon them in a different light from those amendments offered by Senators in favor of the bill I am advocating here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska, if I understand him correctly, should not infer hostility to legislation because amendments to proposed legislation may be suggested.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not done that.

Mr. KING. I interpreted the remarks of the Senator to mean that.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not done that. Of course, I would not think of doing anything of the kind.

Mr. KING. There is great merit in the bill under consideration, but it is not absolutely perfect, and could be improved, in my opinion, in a number of particulars. There are amendments suggested which I think would improve some of the provisions of the bill.

Coming to paragraph (c), to which the Senator from Montana challenged attention, with all due respect to my colleagues, I am inclined to think that the Senator's position has merit. My attention had not been called to it before. The words are "both the employer and the employee." Of course, it is obvious that the employer ought to have the right to designate its own agents to confer with the representatives of labor, and I believe a proper interpretation of the proviso means that an employer would only have the right that the employee would have to select its own representatives and to organize for the purpose of carrying on the negotiations and carrying forward such measures as were necessary to adjust a controversy.

But the language employed is susceptible of the interpretation placed upon it by the Senator from Montana, and in its present form I would not be inclined to accept it. I am afraid that it would be construed to mean that employers had the right to combine, and in such a manner as would be violative of either the Clayton or the Sherman antitrust laws. So I suggest to the able Senator from Rhode Island that before voting upon it the words "both the employer and" be stricken out.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, listening to the Senator and his analysis of clause (c), I am quite sure he has overlooked the remainder of the language in that paragraph which reads "to negotiate the terms of employment." There is no violation of the antitrust law there.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me, I would like to interrupt him for a moment. That depends upon how far back the phrase "to negotiate" is a qualifying clause. Of course, we can assume that it means "shall have full freedom of association to negotiate the terms of employment" or "shall have full freedom of self-organization to negotiate the terms of employment" or "shall have full freedom to negotiate the designation of representatives to negotiate the terms of employment." That may be the proper construction, but upon immediate reading of it no one would think so, I am sure, because it provides for the designation of representatives of their own choosing to negotiate terms of employment which is readily understood, but "freedom to negotiate terms" is quite a different thing, because in all cases these organizations are not effected for the purpose of designating representatives to negotiate.

They are organized in the first place for mutual benefit and mutual association and mutual protection and so particularly the employer does not associate himself with others in order that he may more conveniently negotiate terms of employment, and so forth. He associates himself with other employers for the purpose of determining how best he can forward his business regardless of the relation of employees to himself. He will associate himself with others for the purpose of taking joint contracts, for instance, and many other purposes. The trade associations are organized without very much reference whatever to relations with other employers. The trade associations discuss the joint aspects of business in their particular line of industry. I do not believe it is a fair construction to say that the clause "to negotiate the terms" qualifies or modifies "freedom of association."

Mr. HEBERT. I confess I do not see how the Senator could reach any other conclusion in reading the language. What is the purpose sought in the clause "to negotiate the terms of employment"? That is the only thing mentioned here. What precedes reads, "Both the employer and the employee shall have full freedom of association"—to do what? "To negotiate the terms of employment." Then he shall have full freedom of self-organization and designation of representatives of his own choosing—to do what? To negotiate the terms of employment free from any interference, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator begs the inquiry. It is perfectly plain that "to negotiate the terms of employment" has immediate relation to "designation of representatives of their own choosing." We can understand that. If we take that clause out and if we read it that "both the employer and the employee shall have full freedom to negotiate the terms of employment," everybody would inquire, "What is the purpose of anything of that kind?" In other words, the ordinary reader, I submit, would dissociate "freedom of association" from the matter of negotiating with striking operatives.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator is now thinking in terms of huge corporations and aggregations of wealth. I am thinking of the individual employer, the single man who has his little business employing a few men. He wants his property protected, and is entitled to the protection which the law guarantees to him. I am free to say that I can not read any such meaning in the language of the section as the Senator from Montana infers.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Byrnes	Fess	Hull
Austin	Capper	Fletcher	Johnson
Bailey	Caraway	Frazier	Jones
Bankhead	Carey	George	Kendrick
Barbour	Connally	Glass	Keyes
Bingham	Coolidge	Glenn	King
Black	Copeland	Gore	La Follette
Blaine	Costigan	Hale	Lewis
Borah	Couzens	Harrison	Logan
Bratton	Cutting	Hastings	Long
Brookhart	Dale	Hatfield	McGill
Broussard	Davis	Hayden	McNary
Bulkley	Dickinson	Hebert	Metcalf
Bulow	Dill	Howell	Moses

Neely	Robinson, Ind.	Stephens	Walcott
Norbeck	Schall	Thomas, Idaho	Walsh, Mont.
Norris	Sheppard	Thomas, Okla.	Watson
Nye	Shipstead	Townsend	Wheeler
Oddie	Smith	Trammell	White
Patterson	Smoot	Vandenberg
Pittman	Steiwer	Wagner

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask that the pending amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 6, strike out all the remainder of page 2, through line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Whereas under prevailing economic conditions, a single employee is helpless in dealing with an employer, is ordinarily dependent on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and his family, is unable to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment; and

Whereas it is essential—

(a) That he shall be free to associate with his fellow workers and to form unions which will afford him and them the opportunity to deal on a basis of equality with those by whom they are employed;

(b) That they may share equitably in the product of labor and capital;

(c) That both the employer and the employee shall have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing, to negotiate the terms of employment free from any interference, restraint, or coercion in their efforts toward mutual aid or protection;

Therefore, the following definitions of, and limitations upon, the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States are hereby enacted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

Mr. NORRIS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with the construction which is placed upon the phrase "to negotiate the terms of employment," in the position which it occupies, and fearing that it may be interpreted by many as authorizing combinations in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, I would not feel like voting for the amendment. I shall, therefore, ask to be excused from voting upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KING, when his name was called, answered "present."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is necessarily absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I am forced to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. METCALF. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BINGHAM. I inquire if the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BINGHAM. Having a general pair with that Senator, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HATFIELD (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON]. I am advised that if present he would have voted as I have voted. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and let my vote stand.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. As I have announced heretofore, I have a pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I will have to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON];

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS].

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is necessarily absent. I am not advised how he would vote on this question.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is absent in attendance on the general disarmament conference at Geneva.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. HULL. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] on account of a death in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—18

Austin	Hale	Oddie	Walcott
Barbour	Hastings	Patterson	Watson
Carey	Hebert	Smoot	White
Dale	Keyes	Steiwer
Fess	Moses	Stephens

NAYS—47

So Mr. HEBERT's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEBERT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Beginning in line 1, on page 3, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 14 and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 3. Any undertaking or promise such as is described in this section, or any undertaking or promise which in any way restricts the freedom of either party thereto in the exercise of the rights, privileges, and immunities declared in paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of the preamble of section 2 of this act, is hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of the United States and shall not afford any basis for the granting of equitable relief by any court of the United States, including specifically every contract of employment whereby.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, this is the amendment which was discussed at great length yesterday. It affects the status of the so-called "yellow-dog" contract before the courts of the United States. It will be observed that the amendment limits the operation of the bill to injunctive processes but does not reach legal proceedings; in other words, it leaves all legal proceedings out of consideration but limits the operation of this section to injunctive processes. It was thought that the language of the section as proposed in the amendment would not conflict with the cases already adjudicated by the Supreme Court in which have been considered the very contracts that are referred to in this section.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator—I do not have the amendment before me—is the only change made the one which he indicates?

Mr. HEBERT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, one of the things that the majority bill does is to deny equitable or legal relief in the case of such contracts. It is not sufficient to prohibit the issuance of an injunction, for, if legal relief were permitted, as I understand this amendment provides, it would subject laboring men to lawsuits almost interminable; such suits could be commenced by the hundred; there would be a lawsuit, perhaps, against every individual, which would be pretty nearly as bad as an injunction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 24, strike out all of section 4, through page 5, line 8, and insert in lieu thereof a new section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction in any case growing out of any labor dispute to restrain or prohibit either party thereto or their representatives in any labor organization or employer organization from doing or refraining from doing, either singly or in concert or whether in pursuance of any agreement such as is referred to in section 3 of this act or otherwise, any of the following acts:

(a) Ceasing or refusing to remain in any relation of employment;

(b) Giving, loaning, or otherwise affording strike or unemployment or other benefits or assistance;

(c) Assisting, by all lawful means, any party to such dispute in the prosecution or defense of any action or suit in any court;

(d) Giving fair publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, such dispute;

(e) Assembling peaceably and with due regard for the rights of others to act or to organize lawfully in the promotion of their interests involved in such dispute;

(f) Communicating any or all such intentions to others;

(g) Entering into lawful agreements to do or not to do any of the things hereinbefore specified;

(h) Inviting, persuading, or otherwise inducing without fraud, intimidation, coercion, threat, or violence, to do or to abstain from doing any of the acts hereinbefore specified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the first change comes in paragraph (a), which in the committee bill reads as follows:

Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment.

The amendment would provide:

(a) Ceasing or refusing to remain in any relation of employment.

In other words, there is deleted from paragraph (a) of the majority bill the words "to perform any work."

I can not conceive, if I read that section correctly, that anyone who favors this bill would want to provide that an employee, while maintaining his relation of employment, might refuse to do any work—in other words, violating his contract of employment. This would ratify violations of contracts of employment, as I read the section.

To my mind, there is or should be no law which would prohibit an employee from ceasing the relation of employment, especially if he be employed under a contract at will; but to continue the employment and refuse to do the work for which an employee is hired is to my mind outside the question, and surely is not a thing which ought to be ratified by legislative enactment. So that provision has been changed so as to limit its operations to one who refuses to continue in a relation of employment, maintaining the right of contract, maintaining the right to cease a contractual relation.

Paragraph (b) of section 4 has been left out of the amendment of the minority, because we considered that it had been fully taken care of in section 3 of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield with reference to that matter?

Mr. HEBERT. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I think it is very important that paragraph (b) should remain in the bill, because it might be possible that the courts would hold that we had not any right to pass the previous paragraph; but surely we would have a right to say that the Federal courts should have no jurisdiction to grant an injunction in such a case. So, as a matter of fact, I think paragraph (b) is very much more important than the other one, because there may be some question as to the other paragraph, which the Senator says covers the matter, but there can be no question of law with reference to the authority of Congress to do what is contemplated in paragraph (b).

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana and I are in full accord upon the question of whether the Congress has a right to limit the power of injunction or the right to limit recovery in legal actions, and we had contemplated taking out the one in section 3 and leaving the other. Our amendment to section 4 was brought into harmony with our amendment to section 3.

In paragraph (e), which has not been changed materially, we have included in the amendment, which is paragraph (d) in the amendment of the minority, the word "fair" after the word "Giving."

Paragraph (e) in the majority bill reads as follows:

Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence.

This provision of the majority bill would prohibit injunctions from being issued to prevent that being done. We have modified that so as to read as follows:

Giving fair publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, such dispute.

And paragraph (f) of the majority bill has been amended so as to read as follows:

Assembling peaceably and with due regard for the rights of others to act or to organize lawfully in the promotion of their interests involved in such dispute.

In this language we followed the language used by the Supreme Court in a number of cases involving such disputes.

Paragraph (h) of the majority bill provides:

Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified.

That we have modified so as to read:

Entering into lawful agreements to do or not to do any of the things hereinbefore specified.

Those are the material changes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator to call attention to the fact that the amendment in subdivision (h) also adds the words "intimidation, coercion," and "threat." In other words, it leaves the law practically as it is to-day with reference to that; and that, I take it, is one of the things we are trying to correct by this bill.

Likewise, in the other amendments which the Senator has offered he says he is following the language of the Supreme Court. While, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has pointed out, on the face of the language of the Supreme Court and of the other courts it seems perfectly harmless, yet in practice it has not worked out. The trouble with it is that when we put in the words "intimidation and coercion," which seem on the face of the matter perfectly proper to put in, the courts have so construed the words "intimidation and coercion" as to mean that if any group of people organize and go on a strike, that of itself is sufficient intimidation to warrant an injunction being granted, whether or not they do one single, solitary act other than to go on a strike.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, let me remind the Senator that if this bill becomes a law the same conditions will not obtain that have existed heretofore, for the simple reason that heretofore courts have issued these injunctions ex parte and upon their own motion, whereas in the future cause will have to be shown why an injunction should be issued, and a jury trial is guaranteed. So an injunction, to issue, must be based on proofs submitted in open court.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but the trouble with that is that the Federal judges have the power to instruct juries to find a verdict of guilty or of not guilty, as they may see fit, even if we grant a jury trial.

Mr. HASTINGS. Not in a criminal case.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; in a criminal case. A Federal judge has the absolute power to say to a jury to-day, "These people are guilty, and you ought to find them guilty by your verdict."

Mr. HASTINGS. That may be so; but he can not direct them to do it.

Mr. WHEELER. There is not a question of doubt about it. I have been a prosecuting attorney too many years to think that the courts can not do it. They can do it, and they do do it. I can tell the Senator of numerous instances where the court has expressly said, "This is the law, and this is the fact; and while you are not bound to follow the court with reference to the fact, in the opinion of the court you should find this man guilty," which, in effect, to all intents and purposes, means that the court instructs the jury to find the defendant guilty upon the basis of the facts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a second?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And sometimes Federal judges have been known to say to the jury, just as they were retiring, "The court will be here and occupy the bench for five minutes, and at the end of five minutes the court expects the jury to be back with its verdict."

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And they always come back within the five minutes.

Mr. WHEELER. The Federal courts to-day have it within their power to wield such a tremendous influence in the trial of cases that they can practically sway the trial jury whichever way they want to, if they see fit to do it; and, let me say, that it is not an infrequent practice for the trial judges to do that very thing.

The courts have construed the words "intimidation and coercion" to mean, practically, that if a body or group of men go on a strike that of itself amounts to coercion and amounts to intimidation. As a matter of fact, I do not think that was ever the correct interpretation, but it is the one that has been placed upon that language by the Federal courts. For that reason I am convinced that the majority of the committee were entirely right when they left that out of the language of this bill. If we put that language in, we will not be changing the present law at all, and I think we will find that exactly the same kind of practices will creep in under this law that we found creeping in under the old system.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, on the other hand, there is this extreme. If I read this bill correctly, without the language in paragraph (h) of the minority report, notwithstanding there is fraud on the part of either side, either the employer or the employee; notwithstanding there is intimidation on either side to the controversy; notwithstanding there is coercion; notwithstanding there are threats; notwithstanding there is violence, they would still be entitled to the injunctive processes under this act. It did not seem to me that Congress ought to go that far in legislating.

I realize that there have been some abuses, as the Senator has well said, but we are protecting against those abuses by affording jury trials on the facts before injunctions may issue; and it has seemed to me that we had gone as far as Congress was justified in going, and that we should not remove these safeguards from the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. Does he think that injunctive relief should be denied where there is intimidation and coercion? Let me illustrate, if I may. Cases have come to my attention where a large number of persons who were strikers, and some who were not, visited homes on the outskirts of a town or city, occupied by persons who had not joined the strike, for the purpose of intimidating or coercing such persons so that they would leave their employment. The conduct of the strikers and their associates was such as to create fear and terror upon the part of the families of the employees as well as the employees themselves. They were thoroughly intimidated and frightened and the health of some impaired, and in some instances they left their places of abode because of fear of physical violence. Does the Senator think there may not be such a condition of intimidation and coercion as to warrant protection to individuals by means of injunction?

Mr. WHEELER. I think there may be some instances.

Mr. KING. One other question. What does the Senator understand to be included within the words "fraud or violence"?

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say to the Senator that I think the term "fraud and violence" would cover such a case as he has cited. I think such acts would amount to violence. I do not believe there is any question about it.

Surely no reasonable person, it seems to me, could go as far as the Federal courts have gone with reference to intimidation and coercion, because they have simply said in many cases that if a group of men go upon a strike, that amounts to intimidation, or if they hold a meeting in their hall, that that amounts to intimidation.

A committee of the Senate went into Pennsylvania to investigate conditions existing there during the coal strike and found that the courts had issued injunctions. They charged the strikers with intimidation, and prevented them from holding meetings in a church, because of the fact that they claimed that the holding of a meeting was an intimidation of the people of the town, and the other miners in the community.

Mr. KING. That decision was an outrage, of course.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course it was an outrage, and this bill is intended to cover that sort of thing. But if the provision is left in the law, then the courts will say that if strikers should meet in a church, under circumstances similar to those under which they met in a church in Pennsylvania, that amounts to intimidation, that that amounts to coercion.

The Senator from Rhode Island says, "But we are doing away with that, because of the fact that we are providing for a jury trial." But the Federal judge who tries a case, who hears that these people met in this church, has it within his power to say to the jury, "When they met in that church that, in my opinion, as a matter of law, amounted to intimidating the miners who wanted to go to work."

There is no question at all but that that is what the courts have done under the present law, and there is no question of doubt but that they would have the right to do it, even in a jury trial. So I say that if that is left in, then the man who goes on a strike will be left in practically the same situation in which he is to-day.

Mr. HEBERT rose.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me further say that I have had some experience in dealing with this sort of a case, both as prosecuting attorney and also as defending some of the labor unions, the American Federation of Labor and others, in my State. I have come in close personal contact with this sort of a case also as a member of the committee of the Senate investigating the coal situation in Pennsylvania.

Let me say to the Members of the Senate in all sincerity that to-day what is happening in the various large industries throughout the country is this: They are employing detectives, Field, Burns, and Pinkerton detectives. Not on one occasion but on several occasions have I had this expressly come to my knowledge.

A Burns agency, or a Field agency, or a Pinkerton agency, or some other detective agency, would send a man to join a union. Then after he got into the union the detective himself would go out and deliberately make some threat or commit some act so that the employers could go into court and get an injunction against the labor organization as a whole.

Then they would hold the labor organization responsible legally and in equity, because they would say, "This is a conspiracy," and the one act of this detective, though it was not known he was a detective, would make the whole labor organization responsible.

As I said a moment ago, not only have I seen that take place in one instance but I have seen it take place in many instances.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Is it not a fact that there are quite a number of agencies which keep detectives and hirelings employed to go into labor unions for that very purpose?

Mr. WHEELER. I think there is no question at all about it. But I do know specifically that that has come to my own attention. I recall an instance when I was United States district attorney where the leaders of a union called off a strike. After they had called off the strike there was an agitation for a further quitting of work. They called a mass meeting, and when they called this mass meeting one man got up and said, "We should go ahead with the strike." The next day I brought him to my office and found that as a matter of fact both he and his associate were detectives, one of them of one agency and the other of another, and that they were actually promoting the strike for the purpose, I presume, of making employment for the members of their own detective agencies.

That is the unfortunate part of it. When I came to the Senate I asked that the Committee on Labor should investigate some of these detective agencies, because, in my humble judgment, they are doing more to bring about ill-feeling between the employers of labor and the laboring men themselves than almost anything else in this Nation.

The Members of the Senate can see how easy it is, under those circumstances, to say that if you leave in the provision about intimidation or coercion, for some detective in the employ of these great agencies to go out and deliberately do something which would come within the provisions of the measure, and then the union members would all be held responsible for it.

For these reasons I think we should hesitate about putting in the provision which the minority has included in its report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, furthermore, as the Senator from Montana well knows, the provision for a jury trial will probably bring some relief, but more imagined than real. Everybody in this Chamber who is familiar with procedure in the Federal courts knows that the jury is very apt to do precisely what it thinks the presiding judge wants it to do. Consequently I think we should do everything possible to make this provision strong, and to protect the weak whenever they come before a court, whether tried by the court or by a jury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

Mr. NORRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska to respond to the suggestion made by the Senator from Rhode Island respecting line 6 on page 4? I was challenged by his observation that this apparently protects a refusal actually to perform labor while retaining the relationship of employee. What is the Senator's response to that?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I heard what the Senator said, and I did not suppose anybody would take it seriously.

The provision is that a court shall not issue an injunction to restrain a person from "ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment." To say that a man would refuse to work and still remain in the employment of his employer seems to me perfectly foolish. He would not remain a minute. Why are Senators hunting little possible contingencies which not in a million cases will ever happen?

This is what the majority bill provides, that they shall not issue a restraining order to prevent one from "ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment."

Does anybody question the wisdom of that? Is not that right? The minority say, "ceasing or refusing to remain in any relation of employment" would not apply if the injunction restrains some one from quitting work, which has been done dozens and dozens of times. I think it is illegal, myself. I do not think that any law ought to be necessary, but I have on my desk here seven injunctions issued by one judge, all from the same court, in which pretty nearly all of these things are restrained, and every one of these injunctions was issued without notice, without a syllable of evidence, without even an affidavit, and they show that on the face of the orders themselves. The only thing the judge had before him was the complaint, which was sworn to. That is all he had.

There are many things in the injunctions which on the face of them would not seem bad, but when we are hunting for some little thing, like saying here, "We do want to give you the right to issue an injunction to restrain people from quitting any work, or to cease any condition of employment; we are afraid that they might quit work and still remain in the employ of the corporation." I can not imagine such a condition existing, and we are hunting imaginary things.

Take this injunction. I will take one issued pretty recently. This temporary restraining order was issued on the 6th day of January, 1932. I have in my hand a certified copy of the restraining order. Let me read from it briefly:

> And now on this 6th day of January, 1932, at 4 o'clock p. m., this cause came on to be heard * * * and the complainant having exhibited his sworn bill to the Hon. Thomas W. Slick, judge of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Indiana, and the court now being fully advised of the premises—

And so forth.

All that was done was to exhibit to the judge the bill of complaint. It is stated in the injunction that it was sworn to and the court issued a restraining order without any notice whatever to anybody. He did it on the 6th day of January, and it was set down for hearing in the order on the 16th day of January. During all of that intervening time those people were enjoined, one of the provisions being that they should not entice or coerce the families of those men or of some men. It extends to "all persons whomsoever" and sets up a statute which they must all obey.

What does this word "coercion" mean? The order reads that they are enjoined from "combining, conspiring, agreeing, and arranging with them and all other persons whomsoever from stopping or interfering with men or any of them," and so forth, and that they shall not visit their families, or something to that effect, and shall not "coerce," or something to that effect. It may be said that a fair interpretation of that language can not hurt anybody, but what would a willing judge do who would issue this kind of a sweeping statute that goes into force notwithstanding any State statute, notwithstanding any constitution, and without any notice to those against whom it is issued, although they must obey it? When he comes to construe the word "coercion," what would he hold it to mean? It would be for him to decide. Suppose he came to construe the word "fair." He would put upon it any construction he wanted. That has been done. As I said the other day in the course of the debate, a man hung a sign in his barber shop reading, "No scabs are wanted here." I do not mean to say that it was right for the barber to do that; I do not like it; but he was arrested for contempt, and the reason given was that it was an interference with interstate commerce. That was the ground for the issuing of the injunction in that case. He was fined $200.

We have to be careful what words and phrases we incorporate in the bill. If we leave a loophole, and one of the judges who wants to issue this kind of an injunction cares to do so, he will drive the whole court right through it. The language that would be stricken out by the amendment is on page 4, as follows:

> Giving publicity to existence of, or the facts involved in any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or any other method not involving fraud or violence.

That is in our bill. The majority bill contains that language. Instead of that, innocent enough, not bad on its face, the minority proposes to substitute the following:

> Giving fair publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, such disputes.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HEBERT. I wish to say to the Senator that the more we particularize in a legal enactment the more we limit. Our object was to broaden the scope of the provision.

Mr. NORRIS. That is very often true, I will say to the Senator, but in the injunctions which have been issued—and I think that is one of the reasons for the language used by the majority—many different words are used, such as "by talking, by speaking, by signs, by writing, by printing," and in one injunction which I read here the word "hint" was used. "You shall not even hint!" That was in a restraining order.

I listened with interest to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] when he gave a description of what he had heard in a court where the judge said, "I am going to be here for five minutes and at the end of five minutes I shall expect you back here with your verdict." He told the jury what kind of a verdict he wanted. It is a difficult thing to legislate about, one of the most difficult things I ever undertook. It is difficult to try to meet these ingenious, devising methods by which the courts will put in any kind of construction if we give them the chance to do it.

The language of the minority amendment is "giving fair publicity." The judges would be called upon to construe the word "fair." I would not object to that as an ordinary proposition, but why put in the word "fair"? Why not say that they shall not enjoin anyone from giving publicity? I hardly know how it could be done unfairly, but in some of the injunctions where publicity was prohibited the courts have used 25 or 30 words so as to cover almost every imaginable method. We have used in prohibitory statutes the same or identical language that the courts have used in granting these injunctions. What would a judge do who, like the one to whom the Senator from Indiana called our attention, if he had to construe the word "fair" and had to act on it? He might say that anything was fair or that anything was not fair.

Perhaps I have gone beyond an answer to the question which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] asked me. In the first place, the provisions are all modified except one, and that is left out entirely. The one that is left out entirely is as follows:

> Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act.

That is the "yellow-dog" contract. It applies to both sides. The court shall not issue an injunction in either case. I have read the provision in the bill and I have read the minority substitute. If there is no difference in them, why all the agitation to get these little changes? Some of them look fine on their face, but it must be remembered we are going far in some cases. The majority of courts and judges are above reproach as a rule, but there are some on the bench and there will probably be more on the bench who have been put there simply on the recommendation of the very corporations that appear before them and ask for injunctions. We have to guard against this minority. It is no assault on the courts in general. We have to guard against those judges who have been so willingly issuing restraining orders. We ought to hesitate to change language that has been well thought out and well worked out and given the consideration of a great many people. To change it in what might appear an insignificant particular is dangerous at this stage of the proceeding.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I merely want to observe that I think the word "fair" as qualifying "publicity" is a rather ominous expression. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island if he would regard parading through the streets with banners as being fair publicity?

Mr. HEBERT. Of course I would. I see nothing unfair about that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But that very thing has been enjoined.

Mr. HEBERT. Understand me, Mr. President, I am not supporting those courts which have issued unfair injunctions. I have repeatedly said I hope we may curb them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I merely ask the question to understand what kind of construction might be given to that expression. The court might say that was unfair publicity and accordingly issue an injunction. We can think of a number of methods of giving publicity that a court eager to issue an injunction, as many courts seem to be, would regard as not being fair publicity.

Mr. HEBERT. May I ask the Senator if, on the other hand, if there was unfair publicity, whether the court would be justified in refusing an injunction?

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to have the Senator give an instance of unfair publicity.

Mr. HEBERT. I am not trying to define it. I am simply asking the question of the Senator from Montana. I assume he has given some thought to it since he asked the specific question about what is fair publicity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLENN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I withhold my vote.

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHEELER. On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BAILEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES. For the same reason given heretofore, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BARBOUR. Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I inquire if the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] is necessarily absent. I am not advised how he would vote on this question.

I wish to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON];

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the following Senators are necessarily absent on official business: The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. HULL. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is necessarily detained from the Senate by a death in his family.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] is necessarily detained from the Senate by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 53, as follows:

YEAS—16

Austin	Hale	Moses	Steiwer
Barbour	Hastings	Oddie	Stephens
Dale	Hebert	Patterson	Walcott
Fess	Keyes	Smoot	Watson

So Mr. HEBERT's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still on its second reading and is open to amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to section 5 of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 9, it is proposed to strike out section 5 and to insert in lieu thereof a new section, as follows:

SEC. 5. Any agreement to do or the doing of the things mentioned in section 4 of this act in concert shall not of itself constitute an unlawful combination or conspiracy, and no court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon such ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, in reference to section 5, the minority members of the committee, in the views presented by them, say:

Section 5 would leave unprotected by injunction those rights of property which are safeguarded by the provisions of the Clayton Act. In our opinion, what the sponsors of this measure have sought to accomplish by the language of section 5 is to remove from the field of restraining orders and injunctions those acts which when done by individuals are declared not to be unlawful by the provisions of section 4 and to permit the doing of them by any of the persons participating or interested in a labor dispute. In other words, groups of employees may not be enjoined on the ground of being engaged in an unlawful conspiracy or combination when they attempt to do, in concert, any of the acts enumerated in the preceding section. We are not averse to such a declaration, provided there be made a part of section 5 some provision excluding from its operation such combinations or acts or threats as are entered into for an unlawful purpose or with an unlawful intent.

It seemed to us, Mr. President, that the language of the amendment would fully protect those engaged in a labor dispute in doing all those acts which are not prohibited to individuals when they are done in concert, and I think that is the purpose of the original bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want Senators to note that this amendment proposes to strike out section 5 of the original bill and to insert a new section 5. I want to read section 5 of the bill:

SEC. 5. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue a restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction upon the ground that any of the persons participating or interested in a labor dispute constitute or are engaged in an unlawful combination or conspiracy because of the doing in concert of the acts enumerated in section 4 of this act.

Those acts are the very ones that we have just passed on and by a yea-and-nay vote have decided to retain in the bill, as follows:

(a) Ceasing or refusing to perform any work or to remain in any relation of employment;

(b) Becoming or remaining a member of any labor organization or of any employer organization, regardless of any such undertaking or promise as is described in section 3 of this act;

(c) Paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person participating or interested in such labor dispute, any strike or unemployment benefits or insurance, or other moneys or things of value;

(d) By all lawful means aiding any person participating or interested in any labor dispute who is being proceeded against in, or is prosecuting, any action or suit in any court of the United States or of any State;

(e) Giving publicity to the existence of, or the facts involved in, any labor dispute, whether by advertising, speaking, patrolling, or by any other method not involving fraud or violence;

(f) Assembling peaceably to act or to organize to act in promotion of their interests in a labor dispute;

(g) Advising or notifying any person of an intention to do any of the acts heretofore specified;

(h) Agreeing with other persons to do or not to do any of the acts heretofore specified; and

(i) Advising, urging, or otherwise causing or inducing without fraud or violence the acts heretofore specified—

We have just passed on these acts. We have decided that no injunction shall be issued in the cases I have mentioned, and section 5 simply provides that such acts shall not be unlawful and shall not constitute a conspiracy when done by two or more persons. That is all section 5 proposes to do; in other words, it sustains the action we have just taken in connection with section 4 of the bill.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware, as read, looks innocent on its face. It provides:

Any agreement to do or the doing of the things mentioned in section 4 of this act in concert shall not—of itself constitute an unlawful combination or conspiracy.

In other words, the court would have to find something else beside these acts, but the main reason for issuing the injunction might still be the very acts to restrain which we have said no injunction shall be issued.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Under the amendment a body of employees could agree to strike; that would not be a conspiracy. But if they actually did strike it might be regarded as a conspiracy.

Mr. NORRIS. Something else might be alleged. The amendment provides that any agreement to do, or the doing of the acts referred to in section 4, shall not of itself constitute a conspiracy. In other words, the majority bill provides that the acts which the Senate itself has approved shall not be enjoined, and section 5 says that it shall not be a crime or conspiracy for two or more persons to agree to do such acts; that is all section 5 provides, but the amendment says they shall not of themselves constitute an unlawful combination or conspiracy.

A willing judge could take anything else he wanted to and put with these things, and issue an injunction similar to any that have been issued in the past where a conspiracy was alleged.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, we were quite in harmony with the majority on that provision of the bill if it is intended, as we think it is intended, to permit groups in a labor dispute to do in concert those things which in other provisions of the measure are permitted individuals to do. We are not unmindful, however, of the language of the Supreme Court. In Aikens v. Wisconsin (195 U. S. 194), Mr. Justice Holmes stated:

No act is so innocent or so constitutional in itself that it may not be a step in the execution of a criminal plot, and if it is a step in the execution of such a plot, then neither its innocence nor the Constitution can prevent the punishment of the plot by law.

Again Mr. Justice Holmes said, in the case of Vogelahn v. Buntner (167 Mass.), when he was on the supreme bench of that State:

That whatever may be the law in the case of a single defendant, that when a plaintiff proves that several persons have combined and conspired to injure his business, and have done acts producing that effect, he shows temporal damage and cause of action, unless the facts disclose or the defendants prove some ground of excuse or justification, and I take it to be settled, and rightly settled, that doing that damage by combined persuasion is actionable, as well as doing it by falsehood and force.

In the case of Arthur v. Oakes (63 Fed. Rep. 310) Mr. Justice Harlan said:

It is one thing for a single individual or several individuals each acting upon his own responsibility and not in cooperation with others to form the purpose of inflicting actual injury upon the property or rights of others. It is quite a different thing in the eye of the law for many persons to combine or conspire together with the intent not simply of asserting their rights or of accomplishing lawful ends by peaceful methods, but of employing their united energies to injure others or the public. An intent on the part of a single person to injure the rights of others or of the public is not in itself a wrong of which the law will take cognizance unless such injurious acts be done in execution of the unlawful intent. But a combination of two or more persons with such an intent and under the circumstances that give them when so combined a power to do an injury they would not possess as individuals acting jointly has always been recognized as in itself wrongful and illegal.

Again, Mr. Justice Lurton, in the case of Granada Lumber Co. v. Mississippi (217 U. S. 433), said:

An act harmless when done by one may become a public wrong when done by many acting in concert, for it then takes on the form of a conspiracy, and may be prohibited or punished if the result be hurtful to the public or to the individual against whom the concerted action is directed.

We have felt that the amendments which we propose fully protect employees in labor disputes against injunctions for the doing in concert of those things which are permitted to be done by individuals, and hence the amendment as it stands in the report of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that the effect of the Senator's amendment is that if these things which are specified upon page 4 are done by combination, then they would be subject to restraint?

Mr. HEBERT. No; on the contrary, they would not be subject to restraint. That is the very purpose of the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. I put the question wrongly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Idaho that I think he has misunderstood the answer of the Senator from Rhode Island, or the Senator from Rhode Island misunderstood the question.

The amendment provides that these things shall not of themselves constitute a conspiracy. If the Senator will read the amendment and compare it with the committee bill, he will see what its real object must be.

The committee bill, in section 5, says that the things enumerated in section 4, which we have already approved, shall not be a conspiracy when done in concert. The minority amendment says that they in themselves shall not constitute a conspiracy. In other words, they could be combined with other evidence, however small, and might then be regarded by the judge as sufficient to justify the issuance of an injunction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Georgia offers the following amendment: Insert in the proper place:

No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon the hearing of an application for an interlocutory injunction, to grant a mandatory injunction compelling the performance of an act in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute as herein defined.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment—I think I understand it—I have no objection to it, and I think it would very materially improve the bill if agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated again, please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will restate the amendment.

The amendment was restated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I will take just a moment to explain the amendment.

The true function of an injunction is to restrain anyway, but the practice has grown up of compelling the doing of affirmative acts; and in all labor disputes, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, an interlocutory injunction should not include the requirement that any affirmative act be done by any party to that dispute.

In many States, or at least in some States, mandatory injunctions are forbidden until final trial. This amendment simply provides that in labor disputes, as defined in this act, no court of the United States shall have the power to issue a mandatory injunction compelling an affirmative act upon an interlocutory hearing. Of course, the court would have the power in a proper case to restrain until final hearing or final trial; and in that event there is no attempt in this amendment to curb or to restrict the power of the Federal courts to grant a mandatory injunction.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that in the amendment the words "restraining order" are omitted—"restraining order or temporary injunction."

Mr. GEORGE. At first I did include "restraining order"; but upon reading other portions of the bill and considering this amendment in connection with other portions of the bill, I had come to the conclusion that they were not necessary. Since the Senator calls my attention to the matter, however, and since I have now made this an independent section of the bill, I believe those words should be included, so I ask the privilege of amending my own amendment as follows——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I notice that the Senator says, "No court of the United States." The thought came to my mind whether the Senator did not intend that that should be "No inferior court of the United States."

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. LONG. The Supreme Court, as the Senator knows, could also be a court of original jurisdiction if it wanted to.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but not on an interlocutory hearing for injunction. I think the qualification "application for an interlocutory injunction" would cover that.

If I may be permitted to read it, the amendment that I offer is as follows, and is an independent one:

No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon the hearing of an application for a temporary restraining order or for an interlocutory injunction, to grant a mandatory injunction compelling the performance of an act in any case involving or growing out of any labor dispute as herein defined.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator offers that amendment instead of the other?

Mr. GEORGE. I offer it instead of the other.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]? I ask, for information, whether in the hearings before his committee there was testimony showing that mandatory injunctions were granted in applications for restraining orders or for interlocutory injunctions in labor disputes? I know of a number of instances, but do not know what facts were brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I answer the question? In many cases they have been granted. In some of the cases that were considered here when the nomination of a judge to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was before the Senate, some of the injunctions affirmatively required the vacating of houses occupied by the wives and children of the strikers. It is that type of mandatory injunction that I am seeking to deny the courts the right to issue.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senate to the injunction to which I referred the other day, issued out of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Kentucy on January 28, 1932, which has this mandatory provision. It has two provisions. First, referring to the defendants:

Each of them is here and now and hereby enjoined and restrained, until the further orders of this court are made known herein, from remaining on the property of the complainant, or in any house or houses thereon.

And, second:

Each of them is now enjoined to remove from said premises with all his or her effects within 10 days from and after the 26th day of January, 1932.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 16, it is proposed to strike out entire section 6, through line 23, in the following words:

SEC. 6. No officer or member of any association or organization, and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute, shall be held responsible or liable in any court of the United States for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, this amendment was rather fully discussed yesterday.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was talking when the amendment was read, and I am not informed what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be restated.

The legislative clerk restated the amendment.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, section 6 in the majority bill sets up what the majority report says is a new rule of evidence in the law of agency. It has seemed to the minority that it sets up not only a new rule of evidence but a new rule of law of agency.

Let me read the section as it appears in the majority bill:

No officer or member of any association or organization, and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute, shall be held responsible or liable in any court of the United States for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon clear proof of actual participation in, or actual authorization of, such acts, or of ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof.

Let us assume that there is a labor dispute in charge of one man, who directs the members of an organization to do certain things; and by the doing of those things one of those agents commits an unlawful act—does injury to another. Under the provisions of section 6, as drawn in the majority bill, the principal would not be liable unless he participated in or actually authorized or ratified that act.

What is the rule of agency ordinarily? A storekeeper employs a delivery man. He drives a motor car along the highway, and, in the course of his employment, runs over a pedestrian and injures him. If he be negligent in doing that, the law imputes his negligence to the employer, and the employer is responsible if the act be committed in the course of the employment.

That is the rule of agency—respondeat superior. We propose to change that here; but if, again, as we have reason to believe, it was the intent of the majority to provide that a principal might not be held for contempt in the event that one of his agents violated a rule or a law or an order of the court, then we have anticipated such a contingency, and we have provided for it by combining section 6 of the majority bill with a new section 9, which I was going to offer, and which I think covers the requirements fully as well as and better than does the majority bill, and does not disturb the law of agency.

Let me read section 9 as it is proposed by the minority:

No officer or member of any association or organization and no association or organization participating or interested in a labor dispute as herein defined shall be held responsible or liable for contempt in any court of the United States for the violation of any restraining order or temporary or permanent injunction, if it appears that he did not actually participate in, or actually authorize, or actually ratify such acts.

In any such contempt proceeding if the person charged makes the claim that he did not actually participate in, or actually authorize, or actually ratify such act he shall be entitled upon demand to enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the contempt shall have been committed: Provided, That this right shall not apply to contempts committed in the presence of the court or so near thereto as to interfere directly with the administration of justice or to apply to the misbehavior, misconduct, or disobedience of any officer of the court in respect to the writs, orders, or processes of the court.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, this provision of the bill has no relation whatever to proceedings for contempt. This provision of the bill is intended to protect the officers of a labor union from responding in damages for injuries to personal property done by some of the strikers, notwithstanding they had absolutely nothing to do with it and cautioned everybody to avoid anything of that character.

The principal officers of these national organizations, some of whom have accumulated some property in the course of their experience, are under the constant apprehension of having all of their property swept away by a judgment against them for damages by reason of some injury done by some one who participated in a strike.

The trouble with the argument of the Senator from Rhode Island is that the relation between the officers of the union who are engineering the strike, and one of the strikers in a remote portion of the country, is not that of master and servant, or of employer and employee, or of agent and principal. The doctrine of agent and principal has no application to the thing. If the person perpetrating the offense, destroying the property or injuring the property or injuring the person, stands in the relation of an agent to some one else, the some one else is of course responsible for all the injury done by the agent.

The trouble about this is that it is contended that practically every strike is a conspiracy, a conspiracy to restrain trade, or a conspiracy to injure the business of some employer, and the rule is that anyone entering into a conspiracy is responsible for all damages done by any other member of the conspiracy, and that is what we are seeking to get rid of by section 6 of this bill, and that is all. As I have said, it has no relation at all to the provisions that relate to contempt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that there is some word which was inadvertently omitted which he desires to have incorporated in the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We have not reached that yet.

Mr. KING. There is nothing before the Senate, and I thought I would call the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did say, Mr. President, and I should like the attention of the Senator from Nebraska, that my impression is that the words "or threatened" were inadvertently omitted from subdivision (a) of section 7. It seems to me that those words should be there.

Mr. KING. So that it would read, "That unlawful acts have been committed or threatened"?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. What page?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Page 6, line 7.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I judge the Senator was asking me about that?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Personally, I do not believe that amendment ought to be put in. It would give another opportunity for a court to go far afield in the issuing of an injunction. It will not be difficult for any of these very large corporations to get hundreds to prove, by affidavit, perhaps otherwise, hundreds of instances where somebody made a threat. It may be, as in the case in Indianapolis and some others, that the man making the threat was in the employ of the company itself.

If it were a fair contest between two equals before a judge who was unbiased, I would not object to it, but that is not what we are up against. There is a contest, unfair as between the parties to begin with, and if a corporation wants a judge, they will have a choice of five or six, in a place like Chicago, or Minneapolis, or St. Paul, or Omaha. They will pick out the judge.

The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] shakes his head.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I have confidence in the Senator's great ability as a lawyer and a judge, as he knows. At the same time, in my reading and my study of this injunction question, I have been impressed over and over again with the willingness of a judge to issue an injunction against laboring men, when he would not do it against anybody else.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Permit me to ask what advantage or benefit would there be in seeking injunctive relief when the act against the commission of which an injunction was desired had already been committed? If employees or others commit a wrongful act, if they destroy property or injure persons, what is the good of getting an injunction?

Mr. NORRIS. I can imagine a case where that would be true, but I do not believe there is a Senator here who can point to a single instance where an injunction was issued in a labor dispute where there was not knowledge of the difficulty weeks before the injunction was issued. The employers waited until the last day, and then until late in the afternoon, to get the injunction, before a judge who was willing to issue it, and they issue the injunctions without a scintilla of evidence except the petition itself, which, under the law, of course, must be sworn to; and nobody has any notice.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I was going to suggest to the Senator that the words "and will be continued unless restrained" cover the same question as the threatening of an act of violence.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. WAGNER. I think that language really sufficiently covers the case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But it requires that the act shall first have been committed. It does not cover the case at all.

Mr. WAGNER. If there has been no violence of any kind, and some is claimed to have been threatened.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was going to call attention to a case showing the unfairness we are up against. Two cases arose, one in St. Paul and one in Minneapolis, two cities right together, one injunction being sought right after the other, within a reasonable time.

The first injunction was sought by an organization of business men. I do not know the name of the organization, but an organization of laborers was about to strike and these business men got an injunction out of the Federal court prohibiting the strike. Shortly afterwards in the other city there was a small organization of laboring men which had been boycotted by an organization of business men, just the same thing that had happened over in the other city. The laboring men said, "They got an injunction over there against us; we will get one against them. We will feed them their own medicine." But, lo and behold, when they went into court, the court denied the injunction against the business organization.

It will not be found that injunctions are issued as they are issued against laboring men, and that is one reason why the country has not been more alive to the evils which have come. These injunctions are practically limited to laboring men. They can not be gotten out of courts against anybody else, and that is what the policy stated in the legislation means when it is announced that under present economic conditions, brought about in part by governmental action—and that includes action of the courts as well as legislatures—a man standing alone is absolutely helpless against these combinations.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I am very much interested in this question of threatened violence. Suppose there should be such a thing as a meeting of the members of a labor union, and there should be an agreement that they would destroy a factory or a plant. Under this bill it would not be possible to enjoin that act before it had been accomplished, would it?

Mr. NORRIS. Let me tell the Senator what I think in that case he ought to do. Let us assume that the Senator and myself and others were laboring men; or suppose we were not laboring men, suppose we were just common Senators, and organized together and agreed that we would go to the home of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to-morrow and murder him and burn his house; just make it as bad as you want to. Suppose the Senator from Florida should hear about it. Does the Senator from Kentucky suppose he would ask for an injunction against us? What would he do? He would have us arrested; and when you get evidence that a threat has been made that men are going to commit a crime, you can have them arrested, because in any State in the Union it is a crime to make such a threat.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me pursue my inquiry a little further. I recall a case where a stave company became involved in a dispute with its men who were engaged in preparing the timber to be hauled out. The men held a meeting because of their dissatisfaction with the wages paid. There was a disagreement with the company on that point. The men struck. The company undertook to fill their places. The staves had to be hauled over a long bridge to get them to the loading place. The men simply held a little meeting and agreed that they would blow up the bridge. The only way to meet that situation was through a temporary restraining order to prevent their doing it, because it would have caused incalculable damage and would have done the men no good.

Mr. NORRIS. Why not arrest the men?

Mr. LOGAN. It is impossible to get evidence on which to arrest them in a case of that kind.

Mr. NORRIS. If it can not be done in a case of that kind, how did they get the evidence to enjoin them?

Mr. LOGAN. It is not necessary in a case of that kind in order to prevent danger to property or life. An injunction in a case of that kind is merely in order to furnish an opportunity to investigate.

Mr. NORRIS. In the particular case stated, an injunction, if it had been confined to the one thing, would not have done any special harm. It is not usually done that way in practice, however. In other words, I would not care if the Senator enjoined me from murdering some other Senator. I do not intend to do it anyway; but if he did enjoin me from committing a crime which I was about to commit, I would commit it anyway, because I might almost as well go to jail for contempt as to go to jail for murder.

Mr. LOGAN. I am in entire sympathy with the principle of the provisions set forth in the bill, but at the same time I doubt whether we ought to go so far as to establish an injunctive procedure of this nature. So far as I know, in nearly every case a threat to do an injury is ground for a temporary injunction. Is not that true?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is the ordinary ground.

Mr. LOGAN. Where does the Senator provide that one may not be enjoined if the evidence discloses no more than a threat?

Mr. NORRIS. In my judgment, I will say to the Senator, if this expression goes into the bill, we will have made it possible for a willing judge to continue this kind of injunctions. On the other hand, I do not know of an instance in any of the injunctions I have read where, in my judgment, there would have been any harm if the court had required notice before he issued the injunction. If notice had been given, it would not have been necessary to wait until the last day. In the musicians' case in Chicago, where Judge Wilkerson issued an injunction, the parties had been negotiating for weeks, but the injunction was not applied for until the day before the present existing contract expired. The injunction was obtained Saturday afternoon or Saturday evening, when by the terms of the contract it expired on Sunday, restraining those people from quitting work. I suppose it was alleged, although I have not seen the petition, that those people threatened to quit work and perhaps made other threats.

In other words, it would be an easy thing for a great big wealthy corporation to show threats. If they would have to show the absolute commission of a crime or an offense or something of that kind, it would be a different proposition. It would be easy to make a showing as to threats. Men could be obtained who would testify, and probably testify to the truth. Under conditions of that kind men get excited; they are worried and frightened; some of them do not understand what it all means; some of them are uneducated. They meet some one who is engaged on the other side of the controversy, and there is a quarrel and perhaps a fight, and during that time I presume all kinds of threats are made, but the officials of the union who are going to call the strike do not know anything about it.

Mr. LOGAN. The argument of the Senator is well made were it confined to conditions as they exist before the passage of the bill; but if the bill becomes a law, then the threats of the individual members can not be imputed to the organization itself; and if an injunction should be issued, it would be against only those who have made the threats. It is a quite different situation from that which we have at the present time as compared with that which we will have if the bill passes.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will find that the injunction will not be confined to the ones who made the threat. There will be some irresponsible party that made the threats who is not an officer, who is not an official, who is not acting in harmony with the wishes or the commands or the requests of any of the officials. He will be the one who made the threat.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator could get an injunction only against him under the terms of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. If it stopped there, I would not object.

Mr. LOGAN. Does not the bill make the court stop there?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think so.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Is there anything in the bill that destroys the provision of law that any person having an opportunity for reasonable notice of the terms of the injunction which has been issued can be punished for contempt, if he violates those terms, the same as though he were one of the defendants? I do not know that I make my point clear.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the Senator did not.

Mr. LONG. In a United States court, in strike cases, an injunction is obtained against a single individual laboring man. If the injunction stopped with that individual it would be all right, but the court holds that any man living within the town who has a reasonable opportunity to have had notice is equally enjoined. He does not even have to have actual notice; he need have only constructive notice. If there is an injunction issued against John Doe prohibiting him from committing any act, then everyone else is supposed to have constructive notice and to be likewise enjoined. A merchant who published an advertisement in the paper that he does not wish to sell or credit a man connected with the strike breakers has been lodged in jail and served 30 days' imprisonment under such an injunction.

If the word "threatened" is inserted in the bill, then the gate has been thrown open. That is all a Federal judge needs for a ground upon which to issue the injunction. The threat of one man is as good as the threat of a thousand men, because under the power of a Federal court the injunction generally is not restricted to the man who is directly enjoined.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is correct in saying that some of the injunctions include the phrase "and to all persons whomsoever." It thus becomes a general statute. The threat may be made by one person, but everyone is enjoined.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. While we are working on the matter, why not do something to prevent the very thing the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Louisiana have suggested? There is not much occasion to have legislation if this practice is going to be continued just the same.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think it will go on unless amendments like the one now pending are incorporated in the bill. We ought to remember that a court of equity has no criminal jurisdiction. Injunctions are issued by courts of equity. Their jurisdiction is civil entirely. In one of the injunction orders which I have on my desk the defendants are restrained from committing murder. I do not know what the facts are, but the probabilities are there was not any evidence justifying such action. There might have been a fight; somebody might have been killed; but that had not anything to do with the question of whether there should be an injunction issued. In the Debs case, where they sustained the injunction, the Supreme Court said:

> It is outside of the jurisdiction of a court of equity to enjoin the commission of crime. This as a general proposition is unquestioned. A chancellor has no criminal jurisdiction.

Threats to commit unlawful acts are crimes in themselves. It is just as easy to get the evidence in one case as in the other if the evidence is genuine. If anyone makes a threat that he is going to commit a crime or murder somebody or is going to commit arson, that threat is a crime under every State statute. He can be arrested and sent to the penitentiary for it. But unless we want to enjoin people from committing crimes that are outside of the jurisdiction of a court of equity we ought not to authorize the courts to enjoin them. That is particularly true in a case of this kind, which, in my judgment, is entirely different from the ordinary case. Where we have fair and equal parties fighting on each side and a fair tribunal to pass on their discussion it is an entirely different matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. In a case of this character does the Senator think an injunction ought to be granted? I have in mind a case where some of the employees of a mining company engaged in a strike. In order that the mine might not be flooded, it was imperative that the pumps be constantly operated. My information was that those operating the pumps were either driven away or prevented from performing their work. As I understand, the strikers threatened those who sought to take their places. The result was that water flooded the mine, causing great damage to the same. Does the Senator think that no injunction should issue in a case of that kind?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not. I want to ask the Senator in that particular case whether an injunction was obtained?

Mr. KING. I do not think so.

Mr. NORRIS. Against whom did the injunction run?

Mr. KING. I do not think an injunction was obtained, because it was too late. The damage was done.

Mr. NORRIS. They ought to have had an injunction in that case.

Mr. KING. There was a threat to commit damage.

Mr. NORRIS. The danger of the injunction we are going to permit here is that it will not be against the perpetration of a crime or a threat to destroy a building or other property or some other crime. The danger here is that we are going to enjoin somebody who is entirely innocent. We are going to lay the foundation for these iniquitous injunctions to continue.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that because there is the possibility of a writ being too comprehensive it should not be denied, or the court stripped of power to issue it, when persons or property are threatened with injury, and the facts show that the threats will be carried into execution. Even in these cases when, under the provisions of the pending bill, injunctions may be issued, the courts' process might be too broad or too inclusive. It must be assumed that courts are not corrupt and that most if not all judges will attempt to observe their oaths of office and discharge their duties with fidelity. The Senator will recall that a street-car strike occurred in the city of Washington in 1917. There were threats, it was reported, that cars would be injured, and as I was informed several derailed and damaged. It was reported, as I was advised, that threats were made that cars would be burned. The Senate took cognizance of the matter and conducted an investigation. It would seem, when such threats were made with the evident purpose of executing them, that the courts should not be powerless to prevent the destruction of property, with the consequent injury to the owners of the property, as well as the general public. There would be but little comfort to the public or the unions if an injunction was granted after the property was injured or destroyed.

An injunction may be used for the purpose of preventing crime. An injunction may issue to prevent the publication of a threatened libel or for the purpose of protecting person or property. Yet the bill, if I interpret it correctly, would deny injunctive relief to protect life or property under any circumstances. One would have to wait until he was seriously injured or until his property was destroyed before he could obtain an injunction.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the bill only proposes to restrict the power of Federal courts. To begin with, it does not affect any State statute. It does not affect any State court nor any right of a State court. It only purports to restrict the power of the district courts of the United States to issue injunctions.

How do injunctions usually issue? The first thing we know a man is enjoined, usually some laboring man. I think I can make the statement based upon some experience, for as a member of the Public Service Commission of Louisiana I have had as many as 15 injunctions hanging over my head at one time and did not know just what I was enjoined from doing or enjoined to do. One could get an injunction against John Doe prohibiting him from doing or inciting or counseling or aiding or abetting—the sentence going on with half a dozen verbs or adjectives until the injunctive order finally got to the act which the man enjoined—that act which he is to be prohibited from doing.

The injunction is usually advertised in the newspapers, and while the Senator says it may be directed to "all persons," it does not have to say that. The injunction does not have to say, "John Doe and all other persons"; that does not even have to go on the face of the injunction; the injunction merely is to forbid a certain act, and when the injunction is issued there is not a man within the realm of human hearing and human circulation where that injunction is issued who is not enjoined.

I will cite a case to show how far the Federal courts have gone. In Monroe, La., when the Vicksburg, Shreveport & Pacific Railroad strike occurred there was a man named Lynch who was running a grocery store. He had received the trade of the employees of the Vicksburg, Shreveport & Pacific Railroad Co. for from 20 to 25 years. They all went out on strike. He inserted a little notice in the newspapers that he did not care for the trade at his store of any man who was brought into Monroe, La., and used as a strike breaker in order to break that strike. Lynch was immediately brought before the United States court in Shreveport, La., one hundred and some odd miles away, on the charge that he was guilty of contempt because there had been an injunction issued against certain specified employees of the Vicksburg, Shreveport & Pacific Railroad. There the court entertained jurisdiction against Lynch and several other persons because of nothing on earth except they had inserted in the newspapers a notice that they were loyal to the citizens of the town and did not care for the trade of people who came in there in order to break the strike.

We can sit up at night and write all we want into this bill, but we are still going to have plenty of difficulty keeping the ingenuity of lawyers who are seeking injunctions from finding a door wide enough to leap through. I prophesy that when we get through writing this bill we are going to find that we have got to take a spirit level and a compass and go over it again within two years, in order to keep judges from issuing about as many injunctions as they issued last year.

The bill reads in this way:

> That unlawful acts have been committed and will be continued unless restrained—

When we write into this bill a provision under which the threat to commit an unlawful act is made a ground for injunction, there will not be a single citizen in the State of Louisiana on strike in that State as to whom a Federal court has not unlimited authority to enjoin him without a hearing.

If we put in the bill a provision that a judge may issue an injunction whenever there is any unlawful act threatened, knowing that to-day there are half a dozen agencies in the United States which are advertising publicly that they will supply any information that anyone wishes in any camp of any labor union and that they have had spies in every hall where a labor union has ever met—and they have—then the threat of one of those spies will be sufficient to have the subject matter go before the court and have an injunction issue, and the Federal court will not have been restrained at all by this measure, and injunctions can issue the same as heretofore.

My friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] brings up this point: He asks, "Suppose that a number of laboring men have met and are going to blow up a bridge; what are you going to do?" Here is what you could do, I will say to the Senator: This bill will not arrest the processes of the State of Kentucky; that State will have the right to arrest them, and the right will still exist to go into the courts of Kentucky and enjoin them there. If there is such a case—and I do not think one such case will be found in forty million—but if there is such a case where the sheriff of the county will not do his duty and the police authorities of the State will not do their duty, if there is no right to arrest, then there will still remain the right to go into the courts of the State of Kentucky and have those men enjoined under the State statutes.

Everyone has realized that it is necessary, if there is to be any such thing in this country in connection with the labor unions except government by injunction, to put a curb on the Federal courts of this country in their right to issue these wide-sweeping injunctions. A judge has even been so bold as to sit in his court in Chicago and issue injunctions covering the country from the Gulf to the Pacific. If there is going to be any such thing as imposing restraint upon the Federal courts in issuing injunctions, it is going to be by letters and by terms that do not permit of evasion and equivocation. There may be some little case where perhaps it would be better if we could provide a specific exception; I do not doubt that. It may be that there is some particular isolated case where it would be better to do that; but in undertaking to do that let us not put something in the bill that is going to destroy every virtue it contains, because once we give the right to the Federal courts to issue injunctions there will be plenty of them issued.

There is one statement the Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] made to which I wish to refer. There has been a great deal of talk about trial by jury. I myself have seen some of those trials by jury. It would be just as well to let the judge go ahead and try 90 per cent of them; in fact, the only one in which I ever remember having secured a verdict of acquittal in our last strike was one the judge tried. The jury convicted nearly everybody coming before them the whole day long, and I think the judge took pity on us and gave us a verdict of acquittal without any jury. So far as the power of the district court is concerned, under the jurisprudence of this country, the judge is practically unlimited in his right to tell the jury that a defendant is guilty or that he is innocent. In exercising their authority in various matters I have seen some Federal judges go far. I have knowledge of a case where, after we had gone through a trial and actually secured a verdict of acquittal, the judge in the district court in the western district of Louisiana, in the Alexandria division, made the poor defendant rise up and then lectured and defamed him for one hour in the Federal court, and the defendant could not open his mouth lest he would be promptly adjudged guilty of contempt and sent to jail for it.

If we are going to curb these abuses, let us not be blindfolded in doing it; let us put the proper terms in the bill; let us not leave it open so that various and sundry excuses, threats, intimidations, and force may be presented to the court. If we put this kind of provisions in the law, there is nobody who is going to be hurt; there is no right that is going to be taken away; there is no one left without a remedy. I submit that we should not weaken the effect and weaken the language of the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it is a matter of regret to me that I should have any difference with respect to this bill with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], with whom I have worked in its preparation from the very beginning, but I feel perfectly satisfied that this was an inadvertence. It certainly was on my part, or I should have presented this matter in the committee if it had not in some way or other escaped my attention.

The only purpose of an injunction is to prevent threatened injury; that is all, except in the case of a mandatory injunction, which we are not considering here. The very bill itself, it will be observed, provides that an injunction shall issue only when injury is committed and will be continued unless restrained; that is to say, the proof must show not only that the injury is committed—that will not justify an injunction—but the proof must go beyond that and show that further injury is threatened. Whether the threatening occurs before the injury is committed or after the injury is committed, it is necessary to have the threatening in order to obtain the injunction. That is all there is to that. One is in just exactly the same peril from perjured testimony and from the testimony of spies when it comes to proving that further injury will follow by reason of threats made as he is in the first place in the matter of proving that the threats were made. A railroad company comes in and proves that their roundhouse was burned down by strikers; they can not get an injunction; in order to do so they have got to satisfy the court by some proof or other that the same people are going to burn down some other building or do them some other injury or wrong. So that one is open to exactly the same peril from the testimony of spies and perjured witnesses. Of course, we are all open to peril from perjured testimony.

Anybody can go in and give perjured testimony against any of us; we have got to take our chances on prosecutions for perjury against the man who gives the perjured testimony; we can not help that; but the point I am making is that there is no purpose at all of any injunction except to prevent threatened injury, and that would be the case whether the injury has been committed or whether it has not been committed. It is necessary to make that proof in order to get the injunction.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator if this amendment is not inserted would it not imperil the rights of employees who might be threatened with discharge and to prevent it may desire to invoke the injunctive power of the courts to restrain the employer from discharging them? An injunction against the employer would be of but little benefit after the employees had been discharged.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would not think there would be any peril there, because the master can dismiss at any time he sees fit, and no injunction could be secured against a threatened dismissal.

Mr. KING. I am not so sure about that, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court. For instance, take the case referred to by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. My recollection of that case is that an injunction was obtained to restrain the employer from violating a contract and discharging his employees.

Mr. WAGNER. From threatening to abrogate a collective-bargaining agreement where the employment was for a period of months?

Mr. KING. Yes; I have citations of a number of cases where injunctions have been obtained.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would not think we would be obliged to legislate very extensively to take care of a situation like that.

Mr. KING. No; but I was just showing the converse of this proposition. If you can not restrain by injunction the commission of a wrong upon the part of strikers or anybody else, can it be contended that the employer can be restrained from unlawfully discharging employees or abrogating contracts entered into with his employees?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield the floor.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator know of any case where laboring men have received from injunctions much protection by way of preventing discharge?

Mr. KING. I do not care to argue that question now. I have said all that I care to upon this proposition at this time.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Louisiana that there are several such cases. Of my own personal knowledge I know of one where a labor organization secured an injunction against an employer for threatening to abrogate a collective-bargaining agreement It is true there are not very many such cases on record. I think that was the first instance of the issuance of such an injunction in the State of New York in favor of a labor union. The reason that there are not more, I take it, is that labor organizations have always opposed the institution of suits for injunction, and therefore have not themselves indulged in the practice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Chair correct in understanding the Senator from Montana to offer an amendment?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated, and then I desire to discuss it briefly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. May the Chair have the attention of the Senator from Montana? The Chair understands the amendment to be, on page 6, line 7, after the word "committed," to insert the words "or threatened."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; before the word "committed."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is, then, to insert the words "threatened or" before the word "committed."

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, my view of this provision, and the view I entertain from discussions had before the subcommittee and the committee, is to the effect that paragraph (a) has no reference whatever, specifically or otherwise, to property; that paragraph (a) refers to unlawful acts, not as against property; and I call attention to the fact that not all unlawful acts are overt acts. The allegation that must be set up in order to obtain an injunction relates to some unlawful act other than an act against tangible property.

Paragraph (b) is the paragraph that protects property. The word "threat" need not be used. The act provides that certain allegations must be made, and, in order to sustain those allegations it will be necessary to obtain evidence. What evidence? Evidence showing that substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow.

We can not anticipate, now and here, what that evidence may be. I doubt if there is any Member of the Senate who can state a case. A variety of evidence may be necessary to prove that substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow; and perhaps that evidence may embrace evidence as to threats having been made. But those threats, if they constitute evidence to sustain paragraph (b), have nothing whatever to do with paragraph (a), which includes unlawful acts that may not be overt acts at all.

So, as I conceive this bill to provide, and as I understood before the committee, in obtaining an injunction to protect property, evidence would be produced, if it existed and were possible to produce it, showing that substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property would follow unless a restraining order were issued.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not true that every fact called for in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) must be established before an injunction can be granted, and that an injunction can not be granted on the basis of either of them separately?

Mr. BLAINE. Oh, there must first be, of course, a petition or complaint, and then there must be hearing of witnesses, or taking of testimony of witnesses with opportunity for cross-examination.

Mr. LOGAN. But that complaint must cover every one of those paragraphs?

Mr. BLAINE. Exactly. Not only must the complaint cover the matter but testimony must be produced in open court by witnesses, with the opportunity for cross-examination; and we can not here conceive now what evidence may exist or which may be produced to sustain the issuing of a restraining order, a temporary injunction, or a permanent injunction.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. There must be established, then, under this language, first the commission of some unlawful act.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes; it must be established that unlawful acts have been committed.

Mr. LOGAN. And will be continued.

Mr. BLAINE. And will be continued.

Mr. LOGAN. Then, in addition to that, it must be established that the unlawful act which has been committed, and will be continued, will cause great and irreparable injury.

Mr. BLAINE. No; the second proposition in the injunction proceeding must be an allegation and the production of testimony to the point that substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow. I do not know, and there is not anyone here who can now anticipate, what evidence may be necessary to sustain that allegation. That will depend upon each individual case. For that reason, I do not see why we should engraft upon this bill the language respecting threats.

I do not know but that a threat may be evidence, or some evidence, that there will be substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property. I can not tell. We do not know. It may be that a threat will be material. A threat may be proven. It may be one of the elements respecting the allegation and the showing to sustain the proposition that substantial and irreparable injury to complainant's property will follow.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one question?

Mr. BLAINE. As I understand, however, we are not writing a bill including rules of evidence.

Mr. LOGAN. What I desire to ask the Senator is on that very point. Is it the contention of the Senator that an injunction might be granted without the establishment of the fact that an unlawful act had been committed?

Mr. BLAINE. And will be continued?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes. Can an injunction be obtained under that state of facts without first establishing that an unlawful act has been committed? That must be established before it is possible to issue an injunction.

Mr. BLAINE. And that that act will be continued unless restrained. Why should an injunction issue if an unlawful act has not been committed?

Mr. LOGAN. Suppose it has only been threatened. Suppose they have said, "We are going to commit this act," and it has not yet been committed?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think we ought to base this bill upon the proposition that somebody has a fear that somebody is going to do something. There ought to be proof that unlawful acts have taken place—they may not be overt acts at all; they may be of some other character—and that those acts will continue and that irreparable and substantial injury to complainant's property will follow, besides the other necessary allegations.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. GLENN. As I understand the Senator's position, it is that no restraining order or injunction should be granted until some unlawful act has been committed. That is the position?

Mr. BLAINE. That precedent to the commencement of this suit there must have been an unlawful act committed and an allegation that it will continue.

Mr. GLENN. Suppose that in a dispute, a controversy, a crowd forms, with the avowed purpose of marching or proceeding a considerable distance to destroy property and to destroy or injure persons. Is it the position of the Senator from Wisconsin that it would be improper to restrain or to interfere with that crowd on their way to commit this act of violence, and that the courts should be required to wait until after persons have been injured and perhaps killed, and the property unlawfully destroyed, before they could step in to protect against a condition like that?

I have in mind a case——

Mr. BLAINE. Let me answer the Senator's question. Sometimes we get so far away from the question that it becomes very uncertain just what a speaker is called upon to answer. From the description that the Senator has given, I assume that he has described a situation that in most jurisdictions implies a riot.

Mr. GLENN. No; not a riot up to that time. They meet peaceably, and they proceed on their way with the evident purpose of committing some great damage or violation of law when they arrive at their destination. Is it the idea of the Senator from Wisconsin that that crowd should be allowed to proceed, and that no action should be taken until after the damage is done which they set out to do?

Mr. BLAINE. I should say that in most jurisdictions the acts which the Senator has outlined constitute a riot if the persons have an evident purpose to do damage; and if they do, if it is unlawful, that is a matter for proof before the court. My view is that we ought not to write into this bill certain provisions that fear is the basis for injunctive process, and that we should leave that matter to the established rules of evidence and the practice that prevails generally in the respective jurisdictions.

When we engraft upon this bill language such as "threat" and "coercion" in this connection we are simply writing into the bill a rule that permits the courts to do what we are trying to prevent. I take the position which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has taken, that it would be a most unfortunate situation indeed if that language should be incorporated in the bill, because every Senator knows that when that word is incorporated in the bill and the bill becomes a law that means that all of the vicious and violent practices that obtain respecting allegations of conspiracies will obtain in every case in the future.

In our criminal practice to-day, men charged with crime under a conspiracy statute practically stand no show at all. Every rumor, the most distant rumor far removed from the case and from the defendant, is dragged in as part of the evidence to sustain a conspiracy in a criminal trial; and that is exactly what we will sanction and encourage if we write into this bill the very language that is written into most legislation of that type.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

Suppose, in the case suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN], that a group of people are actually threatening to do damage to property, and in the process of carrying out that threat are marching along the street in the direction of the property. Is the Senator opposed to an injunction in that case?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know about these imaginary cases.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is not imaginary; that is an actual case. Is the Senator opposed to enjoining that sort of thing?

Mr. BLAINE. Will not the Senator state his case just as he imagines it to be? Here is a mob of people; they are furious; they are marching; they are actually proceeding toward the commission of an act.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. Is not that an overt act?

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask the Senator if he is not in favor of enjoining that sort of thing? Overt or invert, is he in favor of enjoining that sort of proposition?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think that proposition is involved.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; but the Senator is not in favor of an injunction to stop a threatened destruction of property.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator say that it is an unlawful act?

Mr. CONNALLY. It might be, according to the jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAINE. Does he say it is an unlawful act?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is certainly an immoral one, whether it is unlawful or not, and it ought to be enjoined, if it is a threat, and is in the process of being carried out; but, as I understand the Senator, he wants to wait until after they burn down the factory or destroy the railroad, and then enjoin them.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no such conception at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. An injunction can not be made retroactive.

Mr. BLAINE. I have not made a statement from which anyone could infer that I suggested such a proposition. I say that if the case which the Senator has described is an unlawful act—and it seems to be, in his mind, an unlawful act—that is covered in this bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLAINE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The case mentioned by the Senator from Texas would certainly come within the criminal laws of any State I know of. I am sure the State of Texas has a law against such an act.

Mr. CONNALLY. Whether it is unlawful or not, does the Senator oppose an injunction?

Mr. LONG. It comes within the criminal law.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not talking about that. Does the Senator oppose an injunction in that kind of a case?

Mr. LONG. I do not know what he opposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am speaking of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The language of the measure as now written, without the amendment, would cover the case suggested by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then the amendment will not hurt anything, if it simply does what the Senator says the bill already does. It certainly would clarify it.

Mr. LONG. The Senator would infer that that is about the only threat there could be. I am talking about threats where men meet in a hall and one says, "To-morrow morning I am going to blow up that factory."

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator oppose the granting of an injunction, or would he wait until after the man blew the factory up? Does the Senator oppose an injunction against that kind of a threat?

Mr. LONG. Not against that man.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator would be in favor of allowing him to blow up the factory?

Mr. LONG. The Senator does not catch the point. What I was undertaking to express was this, that the injunction does not lie solely against that man.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am talking about that man. Is the Senator in favor of enjoining him?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then there is no difference between the Senator and me on that point.

Mr. LONG. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I want to direct a question to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], if I may, as to whether or not a threatened act is not covered by subdivision (a) as it stands, because if I threaten to injure some one's property or person may I not commit in that very threat an unlawful act? Is not a mere threat an unlawful act, and is it not already included under subdivision (a)?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would say that a threat to do injury is not an unlawful act. I can not think what kind of a criminal action could be brought against a person, or, for that matter, what kind of a civil action one could bring against a person for such an act.

Mr. WAGNER. If I threaten to burn some one's house, is not that very threat an unlawful act?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think so. I have in mind an attempt to commit an unlawful act, but I have yet to learn of threats being generally, at least, made penal.

Mr. WAGNER. It might lead to a long controversy, but I am satisfied that a threat to commit an injury to personal property is an unlawful act.

Mr. CONNALLY. If it is, then there is no harm in making it clear by saying so.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 315. An act for the relief of Lemuel Simpson; and

H. R. 9203. An act to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes.

ALEXANDER M. PROCTOR—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 63)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read, printed in the RECORD and in the Journal at large because of the provisions of the Constitution, and also printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The message was read, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith Senate bill 2179, an act for the relief of Alexander M. Proctor.

I am advised that this bill would not operate to change the records of the War Department nor would it authorize the issue of a certificate of honorable discharge to Alexander M. Proctor, but that under its provisions Mr. Proctor would be entitled to a pension at the rate of $50 (maximum) per month under the act of March 3, 1927, known as the Indian war pension act. The relief appealed for by Mr. Proctor is for a change in his military record to an honorable discharge. This the bill does not accomplish. I am assured also that Mr. Proctor neither desires nor needs a pension. Therefore, I am returning the bill without my approval.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 26, 1932.

AGRICULTURAL-CREDIT CORPORATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GEORGE, on behalf of the Senate conferees, submitted the following report and moved its adoption:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to aid in the establishment of agricultural-credit corporations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to make advances or loans to individuals, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the purpose of assisting in forming local agricultural-credit corporations, livestock-loan companies, or like organizations, or of increasing the capital stock of such corporations, companies, or organizations qualified to do business with Federal intermediate-credit banks, or to which such privileges may be extended.

"SEC. 2. (a) No loans shall be made to individual stockholders on the capital stock of, or to create or increase the capital stock of such corporation, company, or organization in an amount in excess of 75 per centum of the par value of the capital stock of such corporation, company, or organization owned by or proposed to be subscribed to by such individual.

"(b) No loan shall be made upon the capital stock of any corporation until the Secretary of Agriculture shall find that the financial structure of such corporation is sound and unimpaired and by him approved, nor shall any loan be made upon the capital stock of such corporation until the management of such company shall be made known to and approved by the Secretary, and the Secretary shall have the right at any time to declare the indebtedness to the Government that may be created hereunder due whenever, in his judgment, the financial structure of the corporation shall become so impaired or the management become so unsatisfactory as to jeopardize the interests of the Government.

"SEC. 3. No. loan or advance shall be made to any individual upon the capital stock of or to create or increase the capital stock of any corporation, unless the paid-in capital stock of such corporation shall be at least $10,000.

"SEC. 4. To carry out the provisions of this resolution, including all expenses incurred thereunder, there are authorized to be appropriated, out of the unexpended balances of appropriations made to carry out the provisions of Public Resolution Numbered 112, Seventy-first Congress (46 Stat. 1032), as amended by the Interior Department appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and as amended by Public Resolution Numbered 120 (46 Stat. 1167), and out of the collections from loans made under Public Resolution Numbered 112, as so amended, a sum not exceeding $10,000,000, which sum shall be paid into a revolving fund. Not to exceed 2 per centum of such fund may be used for expenses of administration. All moneys received from time to time upon the repayment of any advance or loan made pursuant to this act, together with the interest, shall be paid into the revolving fund and shall thereafter be available for the purposes and in the manner hereinbefore provided."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The report was agreed to.

PROHIBITION

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by me at a banquet of the Anti-Saloon League in this city on January 19, 1932.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and Gentlemen: History tells us of many efforts to accomplish the impossible. It tells us of the search for a substance called the philosopher's stone which would have the magic quality of transmuting other metals into gold. It tells us of the endeavor to devise a machine which once set in motion would operate perpetually. It tells us of efforts to shoot rockets to the moon. Lately, it has brought to light two other enterprises, most fanciful and hopeless of all—the movement for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the movement for intoxicating liquor while the eighteenth amendment is in operation. Perhaps the most astounding fact is that men of wealth and business ability are found each year or every few years willing to sink hundreds of thousands of dollars in the pursuit of phantoms such as the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the restoration of wine and beer. When you see a man fall for things like these it becomes reasonable to suppose that you could sell him an all-day sucker at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. You could sell him a hippopotamus for a household pet. Actually, a man named Pabst, the man who at one time made, or helped to make, Milwaukee famous for foam, spent a million dollars last year, or said he was preparing to spend a million dollars, to build and equip a full-fledged brewery in the confident belief that old-time beer would be legalized at this session of Congress or at an early date. I can conceive of a man building a hotel at the present time to catch the tourist trade from Mars when communication with that planet begins but my imagination and my dreams stagger at the erection of a brewery in anticipation of the return of beer. Shortly before the earth passed through the tail of Halley's comet some two decades ago there were salesmen who sold numbers of people nose and mouth guards on the theory that they would be protected from inhaling fire as they glided through that flaming appendage, but these salesmen were amateurs compared to the artists who periodically hold up and shake down these tender and unsuspecting financial "angels" of the wet burlesque. The continuance of so lavish a policy on the part of these "angels" may leave them in the position of a man in the Southwest who was described by a local poet as follows:

"His horse went dead, and his mule went lame
And he lost six cows in a poker game;
Then a hurricane came on a summer day,
And blew the house where he lived away;
An earthquake came when that was gone,
And swallowed the land the house stood on.
And then the tax collector came around,
And charged him up with the hole in the ground."

The arguments the wets advance in opposition to prohibition are almost as fantastic as the prospect of its overthrow. They tell us in one breath that there is no prohibition and then they spend hours and columns telling us of what they call the evils of prohibition. They tell us that you can go into any place in the United States and get liquor in 24 hours, not realizing that they pay a tribute to prohibition enforcement when they make such a remark, because you can go into any place in the United States and violate any other law in far less than 24 hours. They tell us that we can not make people good by law, forgetting that while we can not make people inwardly good by law we can by legislation make their outward conduct conform to the rights of others and of society. They tell us that the way to overcome evil is to give it legal existence and then to regulate it, to allow evil to operate under regulation—an argument the mere statement of which is its own refutation. In order to obtain a few hundreds of millions of revenue for the Government they would restore the liquor traffic which in order to produce such revenue would exact from the people billions of dollars for intoxicating drink, billions now going for shelter, clothing, food, support of church and education, for healthful recreation, for normal entertainment and diversion. They would multiply waste in order to tax waste—waste of morals, health, vitality—physical and mental—of the supply of capital for the fundamental needs, facilities, and comforts of mankind.

The most vicious waste brought about by the liquor traffic is the waste of income that would otherwise bring health and comfort and security to the women and children of America. The mother and the child comprise the basic group of history and society.

The love of the mother for the child transformed the savage into the civilian, the cave into the palace, the family into the state. The care of the mother for the child was the beginning of all progress, the initial point of civilization. Practically all industry and progress are traceable to that love and care. Our complex industrial life of modern times, with its myriads of iron arms and hands, its millions of laborers, its billions of capital, finds there its origin. It was the woman who in primal eras carried on her back for the nourishment of her young the game her lord had slaughtered. She thus provided the first mode of transportation. To-day the railroad and the steamship perform this function. She plowed with a stick and reaped with a knife; to-day the machines of the harvest field are among our modern wonders. She tamed and gathered the first cattle; to-day vast ranches teem with multiplying herds. She wove the grasses and the bark; to-day great edifices of stone and iron mount the skies. She crushed the grain with heavy rocks; to-day huge roller mills perform this labor. She drew crude characters on the cliffs and sands, whispered a primeval prayer; to-day universities and churches rise. All in our civilization that is permanent and pure, all that induces peace and faith and hope and progress may be traced to the exhaustless fountain of a woman's sacrifice, a woman's love. To-day that love endures, unshaken through the ages, the shield of the modern as well as the ancient home. In return for that affection we shall continue to protect its chief beneficiaries, the home, the child, from the destructive influences of alcoholic drink. In return for that affection and in behalf of the purity and welfare of our institutions we shall continue to sustain and guard that hope of freedom, that light of progress, that radiance of the ages—our dry United States.

"The poet sings of sunny France,
Fair, olive-laden Spain,
The Grecian isles, Italia's smiles,
And India's torrid plain;
Of Egypt, countless ages old;
Dark Africa's palms and dates;
Let me acclaim the land I name—
Our dry United States.

"The poet sings of Switzerland,
Braw Scotland's heathered moor,
The shimmering sheen of Ireland's green,
Old England's rock-bound shore,
Quaint Holland, and the Fatherland,
Their charms in verse relates;
Let me acclaim the land I name—
Our dry United States.

"I love every inch of her prairie land,
Each stone on her mountain's side;
I love every drop of the water clear
That flows in her rivers wide;
I love every tree, every blade of grass,
Within Columbia's gates.
The queen of the earth is the land of our birth—
Our dry United States."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting two nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

REPORTS OF POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

Mr. McNARY (for Mr. ODDIE). Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report favorably several nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be received and go to the Executive Calendar.

Are there further reports of committees? If not, the calendar is in order.

TREATIES

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read Executive KK.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President I ask that the treaties on the Executive Calendar go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The treaties will go over.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations to the Federal Farm Board.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask that those go over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have noticed recently in the press reports that the Federal Farm Board has been guilty, in these times of distress, of paying salaries of $50,000 or $75,000 to employees. Under those circumstances I think we should ascertain which of these appointees are responsible for such extravagance, waste of public funds, and abuse of the rights of the taxpayers of America, and I would like to have these nominations go over until we can look into that matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations will go over.

CUSTOMS SERVICE

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Fred A. Bradley, to be collector, customs collection district No. 9, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask that this nomination may go over.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, may we have some sort of an understanding with the Senator about when he will be ready and willing to take up this nomination?

Mr. COPELAND. There are certain reports which I have asked for from the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice, and when they are ready, and I have had time to study them, I shall be glad to confer with the leader on the other side regarding a time when we may consider this nomination.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator think it will be very long?

Mr. COPELAND. It will be several days.

Mr. WATSON. The nomination has been on the calendar two weeks already.

Mr. COPELAND. It may be two weeks more. If the reports are voluminous, I shall have to take the time necessary to study them.

Mr. WATSON. I have no objection to the Senator having due time, of course, and I do not think the Senator would ask to have it postponed merely for the sake of postponing it.

Mr. COPELAND. I have no desire to postpone it for the sake of postponing it. I desire to postpone it for the sake of being informed, and ultimately informing the Senate regarding the matters at issue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will go over.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of James H. Douglas, jr., of Chicago, Ill., to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to commend to the Senate the appointment of Mr. Douglas. He is a gentleman very worthy, completely so in his character, and eminently fitted in ability.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, all postmaster nominations on the calendar are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotion in the Navy.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Navy nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, all Navy promotions on the calendar will be confirmed en bloc.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) took a recess until Monday, February 29, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 26 (legislative day of February 24), 1932

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Carl Eastwood, of Le Sueur, Minn., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 35, with headquarters at Minneapolis, Minn., to fill an existing vacancy.

COAST GUARD

Ensign (Temporary) Preston B. Mavor to be an ensign in the Coast Guard of the United States, to take effect from date of oath.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 26 (legislative day of February 24), 1932

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY

James H. Douglas, jr., to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee with no complaint; we find no fault; we trust Thy love and are sure of the way. It is very sweet, as time passes by, to look back and trace the finger of God where we saw once only the forbidding uncertainties along our pathway. Always day by day may love of country transfigure every duty and make it an exalted pleasure. O magnify the strong cardinal virtues in us and keep us aroused to wise, earnest, patriotic service. O Thou, the Christ of God, fill the world with hope. In Thee there is power to obtain justice and mercy for this tired and disappointing day. In Thy name there is more power, a thousandfold more, than in any other name in the wide world. Bind up the broken-hearted, proclaim liberty to the captives, and open the prison to them that are bound and give the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EMERGENCY HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 163

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 9642, a bill "To authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment."

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours—to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Roads—the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and any amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

SIGNING OF PETITION TO DISCHARGE

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yesterday there was filed at the desk a petition to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 208, to amend the eighteenth amendment, and the Members have been in process of signing that petition. Of the 23 Democratic Members from the State of New York, 22 Members have signed that petition. The reason that it has not been signed by the only remaining Member is that the gentleman is confined in the naval hospital. I am informed he will be there for at least three weeks. The doctors to-day said it was not even possible to move him here on a stretcher, which hardship he would be glad to endure, even at the risk of his life, to affix his name to this petition. But the doctors have positively forbidden such a hazard. I refer to the distinguished gentleman from the twenty-second district of New York, the Hon. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN.

My parliamentary inquiry is directed, Mr. Speaker, to the question whether or not there is any possibility of having the petition sent to the naval hospital, in the custody of the Clerk or some other officer of the House, so that it may be signed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

I call the attention of the Chair to the following sentence in Rule XXVII, clause 4:

The motion—

Which means the petition—

shall be placed in the custody of the Clerk, who shall arrange some convenient place for the signatures of Members.

We are accustomed to call it a "petition" rather than a motion and have been led to believe it must be placed on the desk in the House and must be signed at that desk. There is, however, no such exact requirement in the rule. I think, for instance, that the Clerk could have the petition signed in his office or anywhere else.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the rule contemplates that petitions shall be filed at the Clerk's desk and that Members shall sign the same at the desk. It could not possibly be considered that it might be used as a sort of round robin, to be sent from place to place for the purpose of securing signatures of Members. The petition can only be signed while the House is in session. Speaker Longworth so held in the first ruling made, touching this particular matter.

It seems to the Chair that that is a consistent and sensible interpretation of the rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I call the Speaker's attention to a somewhat parallel situation? Of course, as the Speaker well knows, many times a Member has been sworn in at some place other than in this Chamber. On those occasions the Speaker has deputized in writing a Member of this House to submit the oath.

The SPEAKER. That is when the House gives specific authority for that purpose. If the House desired to give specific authority that this petition may be carried to the naval hospital for the purpose of securing a signature, of course, that could be done. The House by vote can authorize that to be done; but the Chair does not think he has authority, under the rules, to permit the petition to leave the Clerk's desk, since it can only be signed while the House is in session.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Would the Chair recognize me to move that the House grant such authority?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather not do that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the Chair recognize me to ask unanimous consent that it be done?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to ask unanimous consent that such privilege be granted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask unanimous consent that the petition now in the custody of the Clerk, to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 208, to amend the eighteenth amendment, be placed in the hands of the Clerk after the close of the session of the House to-day, and shall be taken by the Clerk or some one of his deputies, or a designated Member of Congress to the naval hospital in the city of Washington to be presented to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] for his signature, and shall thereafter be returned to the office of the Clerk of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when 145 signatures are attached to the petition, under the rule, it is referred immediately to the calendar and is printed in the Journal and the RECORD, and additional signatures are not necessary. The Chair does not know that they could be included in the petition.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have the kindliest of feeling for both gentlemen from New York, the one in the hospital and the one making the request, but I think that establishes a very unwise precedent, and I object. The motion to discharge the Judiciary Committee from the consideration of a resolution proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States is a crucial step toward legislation than which there is none other more serious and important. The signing of such motion is a legislative act, and the floor of this House is the place for all such legislative acts to be transacted. To establish such an unwise precedent might lead to others even more important. I regret that I must object to the request.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] has just reported a rule calling for the consideration of a very important bill, which is of great interest to a large number of the membership of the House, the emergency Federal aid road appropriation. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina when he intends to call up that rule for consideration?

Mr. POU. The first thing to-morrow after the disposal of any other matters on the Speaker's desk.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE FACILITIES OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (H. R. 9203) to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9203) to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert:

"That the Federal reserve act, as amended, is further amended by inserting, between sections 10 and 11 thereof, a new section reading as follows:

"'SEC. 10. (a) Upon receiving the consent of not less than five members of the Federal Reserve Board, any Federal reserve bank may make advances, in such amount as the board of directors of such Federal reserve bank may determine, to groups of five or more member banks within its district, a majority of them independently owned and controlled, upon their time or demand promissory notes, provided the bank or banks which receive the proceeds of such advances as herein provided have no adequate amounts of eligible and acceptable assets available to enable such bank or banks to obtain sufficient credit accommodations from the Federal reserve bank through rediscounts or advances other than as provided in section 10 (b). The liability of the individual banks in each group must be limited to such proportion of the total amount advanced to such group as the deposit liability of the respective banks bears to the aggregate deposit liability of all banks in such group, but such advances may be made to a lesser number of such member banks if the aggregate amount of their deposit liability constitutes at least 10 per cent of the entire deposit liability of the member banks within such district. Such banks shall be authorized to distribute the proceeds of such loans to such of their number and in such amount as they may agree upon, but before so doing they shall require such recipient banks to deposit with a suitable trustee, representing the entire group, their individual notes made in favor of the group protected by such collateral security as may be agreed upon. Any Federal reserve bank making such advance shall charge interest or discount thereon at a rate not less than 1 per cent above its discount rate in effect at the time of making such advance. No such note upon which advances are made by a Federal reserve bank under this section shall be eligible under section 16 of this act as collateral security for Federal reserve notes.

"'No obligations of any foreign government, individual, partnership, association, or corporation organized under the laws thereof shall be eligible as collateral security for advances under this section.

"'Member banks are authorized to obligate themselves in accordance with the provisions of this section.'

"SEC. 2. The Federal reserve act, as amended, is further amended by adding, immediately after such new section 10 (a), an additional new section reading as follows:

"'SEC. 10. (b) Until March 3, 1933, and in exceptional and exigent circumstances, and when any member bank, having a capital of not exceeding $5,000,000, has no further eligible and acceptable assets available to enable it to obtain adequate credit accommodations through rediscounting at the Federal reserve bank or any other method provided by this act other than that provided by section 10 (a), any Federal reserve bank, subject in each case to affirmative action by not less than five members of the Federal Reserve Board, may make advances to such member bank on its time or demand promissory notes secured to the satisfaction of such Federal reserve bank: Provided, That (1) each such note shall bear interest at a rate not less than 1 per cent per annum higher than the highest discount rate in effect at such Federal reserve bank on the date of such note; (2) the Federal Reserve Board may by regulation limit and define the classes of assets which may be accepted as security for advances made under authority of this section; and (3) no note accepted for any such advance shall be eligible as collateral security for Federal reserve notes.

"'No obligations of any foreign government, individual, partnership, association, or corporation organized under the laws thereof shall be eligible as collateral security for advances under this section.'

"SEC. 3. The second paragraph of section 16 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'Any Federal reserve bank may make application to the local Federal reserve agent for such amount of the Federal reserve notes hereinbefore provided for as it may require. Such application shall be accompanied with a tender to the local Federal reserve agent of collateral in amount equal to the sum of the Federal reserve notes thus applied for and issued pursuant to such application. The collateral security thus offered shall be notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or acceptances acquired under the provisions of section 13 of this act, or bills of exchange indorsed by a member bank of any Federal reserve district and purchased under the provisions of section 14 of this act, or bankers' acceptances purchased under the provisions of said section 14, or gold or gold certificates: Provided, however, That until March 3, 1933, should the Federal Reserve Board deem it in the public interest, it may, upon the affirmative vote of not less than a majority of its members, authorize the Federal reserve banks to offer, and the Federal reserve agents to accept, as such collateral security, direct obligations of the United States. On March 3, 1933, or sooner should the Federal Reserve Board so decide, such authorization shall terminate and such obligations of the United States be retired as security for Federal reserve notes. In no event shall such collateral security be less than the amount of Federal reserve notes applied for. The Federal reserve agent shall each day notify the Federal Reserve Board of all issues and withdrawals of Federal reserve notes to and by the Federal reserve bank to which he is accredited. The said Federal Reserve Board may at any time call upon a Federal reserve bank for additional security to protect the Federal reserve notes issued to it.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9203) to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The first section of the House bill added a new section 10 (a) to the Federal reserve act, as amended, under which it was provided that upon receiving the consent of not less than a majority of the Federal Reserve Board any Federal reserve bank might make advances for a period not exceeding one year from the date of the approval of the bill to groups of five or more independently owned and controlled member banks if such banks had no adequate amount of eligible and acceptable assets to obtain sufficient credit accommodations through rediscounting at the Federal reserve bank.

The Senate amendment provides that such advances may be made upon receiving the consent of not less than six members of the Federal Reserve Board and removes the 1-year limitation contained in the House bill. The provision of the House bill limiting the advances in cases where the banks did not have eligible and acceptable assets to obtain sufficient credit accommodation through rediscounting is also clarified by the Senate amendment. The amendment also provides that such advances may be made to a lesser number of member banks if the aggregate amount of their deposit liability constitutes at least 10 per cent of the entire deposit liability of the member banks within the district of the Federal reserve bank from which the advances are to be obtained.

The first section of the bill as agreed to by the committee of conference provides that not less than five members of the Federal Reserve Board must consent to the making of such advances to groups of five or more member banks and retains the provision of the Senate amendment under which a lesser number of such banks may obtain such advances if their aggregate deposit liability constitutes at least 10 per cent of that of all the member banks in the district. The 1-year limitation contained in the House bill is eliminated.

Section 2 of the House bill added a new section 10 (b) to the Federal reserve act, as amended, under which it was provided that in exceptional and exigent circumstances and for a period of not exceeding one year from the date of the approval of the bill, any Federal reserve bank might make advances to any member bank of its district if such member bank had no further eligible and acceptable assets available to enable it to obtain adequate credit accommodations from the Federal reserve banks through rediscounting or any other method provided by the Federal reserve act other than through advances to groups of banks under the section added by section 1 of the bill and if the advance to the member bank was approved by not less than a majority of the Federal Reserve Board.

The Senate amendment provides that such advances may be made until March 3, 1934, and that they must be approved by not less than six members of the Federal Reserve Board. It also imposes the limitation that the member banks applying for any such advance must have a capital of $2,000,000 or less. The other provisions of the second section of the bill and of the Senate amendment are the same except for minor clerical changes made by the Senate amendment.

As agreed upon at the conference, this section is to remain operative until March 3, 1933, which in effect restores the time limitation contained in the House bill. It is also provided that an advance to any member bank must be approved by at least five members of the Federal Reserve Board, and that member banks having a capital of not exceeding $5,000,000 shall be eligible to apply for such advances.

Section 3 of the House bill amended the second paragraph of section 16 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, so as to provide that Federal reserve banks might be authorized to offer direct obligations of the United States as collateral security for Federal reserve notes for a period of 12 months from the date of approval of the bill if the Federal Reserve Board deemed it to be in the public interest upon the affirmative vote of not less than a majority of its members. At the expiration of the 12 months' period, or sooner if the Federal Reserve Board shall so decide, the authorization to the Federal reserve banks was to terminate and the obligations of the United States accepted as such collateral security were to be retired.

The Senate amendment extends the time for which such direct obligations of the United States may be offered as collateral security for Federal reserve notes to March 3, 1934.

At the conference it was agreed that the use of direct obligations of the United States as such collateral security should not extend beyond March 3, 1933. This in effect restores the time limitation contained in the House bill.

H. B. STEAGALL,
C. H. BRAND,
W. F. STEVENSON,
L. T. MCFADDEN,
JAMES G. STRONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is due the House to have a brief explanation of the changes in the bill as it originally passed the House and as found in the conference report. It is a matter of such moment that I think it is owing the House that some explanation be made of the essential changes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, there were but three essential points of difference considered by the conference committee. The first section of the bill provides for loans to groups of bankers. It requires that not less than five banks are necessary to form a group. There is also a provision in the bill, as reported by the conference committee, that a less number of banks than five may form a group to apply for loans, provided they have deposit liabilities amounting to 10 per cent of the total of deposit liabilities in the particular Federal reserve district. The House bill struck out the qualification that less than five members might be considered as a group to which loans could be made, but the conference committee adopted the Senate provision. The loans to groups are to be made upon their joint liability.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the provision that less than five banks may join together in case their deposits are less than 10 per cent——

Mr. STEAGALL. Not that they are less than 10 per cent but that their deposits equal 10 per cent of the total deposits in the district.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does that provision permit those banks having a larger capital than $5,000,000 to avail themselves of the provisions of this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. That is exactly what section 1 is designed to accomplish. Section 2 of the bill provides for direct loans to individual banks, with certain limitations. Section 1 provides for loans upon the joint liability of a group of banks. Of course, in practical effect, there will be no group organized of such banks as are permitted to apply for loans under the provisions of section 2. Section 2 of the bill provides for direct loans to any bank upon such collateral as is satisfactory to the Federal reserve bank, with the additional requirement that five members, which is a majority, of the Federal Reserve Board, shall approve the loan.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the security back of these loans can be any assets of the banks and that they do not necessarily have to come under the eligibility rule.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is quite true, and I was about to explain that. Under section 1 the Federal reserve bank may loan upon the joint liability of the group provided for. Under section 2 the Federal reserve may loan to any individual bank upon such security as the Federal reserve bank officials find to be satisfactory, provided it meets the approval of five members of the Federal Reserve Board.

There is in section 2 also the requirement that any bank applying must be shown not to have sufficient eligible paper under existing law upon which a loan may be made, and there is an additional requirement that loans made under section 2 shall bear a penalty rate of interest, amounting to 1 per cent in excess of the highest rate charged by the district reserve bank. There is in both sections 1 and 2 specific provision that no loans shall be made upon foreign securities of any character whatsoever.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. BACON. On what theory was the limitation in section 2 placed at $5,000,000 capital, thus excluding some 62 banks?

Mr. STEAGALL. I was coming to that next. I will give the Members the entire history of the legislation in that connection. The Senate bill as introduced in the Senate provided that loans should not be made directly to individual banks under the provisions of section 2 where the capital of the bank exceeded $500,000. The Senate amended the bill so as to provide that loans should not be made under that section to banks whose capital exceeded $2,000,000. The House bill did not have any specific limitation based upon the capital stock of applying banks. We left it to the rules and regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, and subject to the other limitations and restrictions to which I have called attention embodied in section 2. The conference committee agreed upon $5,000,000 as the highest capital to be possessed by a bank applying for a loan. Of course, it was a compromise between the extreme views. It was the thought of the committee that we should follow the fundamental purpose of this legislation, namely, the liberalization of the credit facilities of the Federal reserve bank to relieve an emergency.

I have not called attention to it, but another point of difference in the legislation, worked out in conference, was with reference to the period within which these provisions should operate. The House provision terminates the operation of section 2 and section 3 of the bill after one year. The Senate provision was that the operation terminate in two years. The agreement reached in conference limits the operation of sections 1 and 2 to a period of one year, or until March 3, 1933. So, following the theory that it was an emergency undertaking, and in view of the limitations embodied in the bill, we thought we would make it liberal as to the number of banks that would become eligible for loans under section 2. So we agreed to place the limitation as to capital stock of applying banks to $5,000,000. We raised the limit of capital requirement from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000.

I may say one word further to the gentlemen. There are many banks of $5,000,000 capital that accommodate a large number of small banks, many of them State banks. I have in mind the case of one bank that I am informed has a capital of $5,000,000 and has among its customers 75 or 80 banks, most of which are State banks, that are receiving accommodations. We let that bank come in and receive the benefits of section 2 of this bill because we see in that way an opportunity to accommodate a large number of small banks, most of which are State banks, and which do not have direct access to the facilities of the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. BACON. What happens to the State bank that is not a member of the Federal reserve system?

Mr. STEAGALL. A State bank, of course, can not obtain loans directly through the Federal reserve bank; but as I have stated, a State bank may borrow from a national bank or from another State bank that is a member of the Federal reserve system, and under the liberal provisions of section 2 of this bill such a State bank has its paper indirectly fed into the Federal reserve bank and indirectly gets the benefit of this legislation.

Mr. BACON. That is exactly the point I wanted to bring out. What happens to a State bank not a member of the Federal reserve system that may be a correspondent of a bank with a capital of over $5,000,000?

Mr. STEAGALL. They can not come in under section 2, but they come in under section 1, which permits banks of that type to form groups, just as I explained in the first part of my statement.

Mr. BACON. It seems to me that this limitation may defeat the purpose of the bill, because a bank having a capital of over $5,000,000 might not be willing to lend aid to the State bank not a member of the Federal reserve system that happens to be its correspondent and who applies to the larger bank for aid.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, that is possible.

Mr. BACON. My concern is with the State bank that is a correspondent of a city bank that may have a capital of over $5,000,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. That city bank would come under the provisions of section 1; and I may say that I do not believe an exception would be found where the banks that will be left out, because of the limitation which provides no loans shall be made to banks whose capital exceeds $5,000,000, will have the slightest difficulty in availing themselves of loans under section 1 of the bill. Besides, the banks that go above $5,000,000 in capital stock have now in their portfolios ample eligible paper to secure all the accommodations they will ever desire through the Federal reserve banks.

Mr. BACON. I think that is a very correct statement. The large city banks are in excellent shape—in fact, may be too liquid.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is the situation.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. JONES. In the event one of these State banks is taken care of, would the national bank that takes care of the State bank have to assume responsibility for its paper?

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, of course. It would already have assumed responsibility for its paper when it made the loan to the State bank in the first instance. Its attitude in that respect would not be changed at all because of its having used the paper of that bank to secure a loan through the Federal reserve. Its position would only be better because the paper of the State bank is more desirable when it can be used as a basis for loans through the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. JONES. Then the gentleman does not think that accommodating a State bank in that way will add to its burdens at all?

Mr. STEAGALL. Its burdens will be lessened, because under these provisions the security or collateral which a member bank or a national bank holds, covering loans made to State banks, under the provisions of this section, may be used as a basis for loans at the Federal reserve bank, whereas they could not be so used under existing law.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. With reference to the 5-bank proposition, who passes upon their collateral? That is the thing that has been bothering me. When they offer collateral, do they themselves pass upon the collateral?

Mr. STEAGALL. Here is what the provision is in that respect: The five banks get together and form a group, and they elect a trustee, into whose hands they place the collateral put up by each bank as a protection to the entire group upon their joint liability for the loan, and the group applies to the Federal reserve bank, and the loan is made without any reference to the collateral or to any security whatever but simply upon the joint liability if satisfactory to the Federal reserve bank.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand from a reading of the conference report, section 1 is permanent law and the provisions in sections 2 and 3 are temporary, being only for the period up to March 3, 1933.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is entirely correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. So it is the opinion of the conferees that at all times, whether conditions are exigent or not, the member banks of the Federal reserve system, when five banks make joint application, should be privileged to bulk their assets, if approved by five members of the Federal Reserve Board, and avail themselves of the additional credit as herein provided.

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; it was thought that that was an entirely sound thing to do under all conditions and that it should be made permanent law, and that is what the bill embodied in the conference report provides.

Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. STEAGALL, has just pointed out to you that the provisions of this bill were entirely sound under all conditions and should be made a permanent law.

Upon the adoption of this conference report, and upon the subsequent signing of the law by the President, this country will have the direct means of completely breaking this panic and depression. I want to say to you that if the situation is not entirely relieved it will be because the men in whose hands we have placed the administration of this measure refuse to act under the broad powers that we have given them.

The responsibility for its success rests entirely upon the shoulders of those who will administer the act. We have heard much from the supporters of this administration, and

I refer particularly to the editorial support which has been given it, and which has attempted to lead the people of this country to believe that this measure was originated in the minds of the President and his advisers. These same men should now make it perfectly clear that the responsibility of the administration of this act can not be divided with the Democratic Party, but that they must assume the whole burden.

However, I can not allow these statements of origin to go unchallenged, for the very provision of this act which is being held up to the country as being the one provision which is sure to lift us from the depression is not only of Democratic origin but has been advocated by Democrats for more than 30 years, and in order that there can be no confusion in the minds of anyone I submit the following legislative history, which has been taken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and which can not be effectively disputed by anyone, however partisan he may be.

Obviously the measure bears the names of two Democrats, Senator GLASS and Representative STEAGALL.

On page 2429 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 25, 1908, there appears a letter addressed to Hon. Robert L. Owen by Hon. James K. Jones, who was a Member of the United States Senate in the year 1900. It reads in part as follows:

> I inclose copy of the amendment which I offered to the financial bill on February 6, 1900 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1534).
> You will of course, recall the fact that you prepared the original draft of this proposed amendment, which I introduced in almost, if not exactly, the form submitted by you. * * * If that amendment had been adopted at that time, and it had been written in the law, it would, in my opinion, have prevented the late panic. [Refers to panic of 1907.]

The amendment referred to in this letter also appears on page 2429 and provides that emergency currency could be issued against United States Government bonds, under a penalty requiring contraction when the emergency was over.

This amendment, when offered to the Senate in 1900, was turned down by the Republican Senate without a record roll call.

Subsequently, a Republican Senate in 1908 refused to consider the same provision in connection with the Vreeland-Aldrich bill before the Senate at that time, when it was presented by Senator Robert L. Owen (Democrat, Oklahoma).

On March 25, 1908, Senator Robert L. Owen first made the demand for the National Monetary Commission whose work preceded the Federal reserve act. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 3874.) His demand was accepted by Senator Aldrich, then in charge of the Vreeland-Aldrich bill.

On January 4, 1932, I introduced H. R. 6704, providing for an emergency circulation fund, safeguarded against inflation by 5 per cent interest charge and 10 per cent forfeiture. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1277.)

On January 5, Hon. DAVID I. WALSH introduced the same bill in the Senate. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1290, S. 2675.)

On February 15, Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL, in addressing the House concerning the provisions of H. R. 9203, stated as follows:

> A similar bill, in principle, has been before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House for some weeks in the form of a measure introduced by the able and distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], and other bills of similar purpose and principle, one of which was introduced by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER], who is a student of economic questions, and whose views are held in high regard. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 3963, February 15, 1932.)

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, Democratic floor leader, in his remarks on H. R. 9203 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4136, February 15, 1931), said in part as follows:

> It is the same principle introduced by a Democratic Senator from Oklahoma, the Hon. Robert L. Owen * * *. It is the same principle as the bill introduced by the Hon. James K. Jones when he was chairman of the Democratic National Committee and Democratic leader of the Senate * * *. This is the identical provision in principle with that set forth in the bill H. R. 6704, by Hon. KENT E. KELLER, of Illinois, on January 4, 1932. Congressman KELLER is a Democrat.
> The only substantial difference between section 3 and the bill introduced by Congressman KELLER is that the Keller bill dealt with the matter without red tape and authorized the Treasury notes to be issued direct to any bank, corporation, or individual up to 90 per cent of the face value of the bonds, an interest charge of 5 per cent, payable to the Treasury, and a forfeiture of 10 per cent if the currency was not returned within 12 months. The Keller bill offers to the public a wider and better distributed relief.
> * * * The country can now be congratulated for this Democratic doctrine becoming effective. It took a terrifying depression to twist this concession out of the Republicans.
> Perhaps the exigency of the pending campaign and the absolute necessity for getting some reaction may have facilitated the consent of the administration. It is certain that during the last month the administration leaders have expressed their vigorous disapproval of bond-secured currency and, having sworn they never would consent, consented.

Subsequently Senator JOSEPH T. ROBINSON of Arkansas directed the attention of the United States Senate to the legislative history of a Democratic doctrine then about to be enacted into law and brought to fruition at the insistence of a Republican administration to save them and the country from an impending disaster, so very apparent to every citizen of the country. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 4223–4224, February 18, 1932.)

In conclusion, permit me to point out to you that my fear that the administration of this measure in the fullest interest of the country is well grounded and is based on the expressed disapproval of the provisions of this measure by the very men who are charged with its administration. In support of this I direct your attention to page 4328 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 19, 1932, to the letter of Hon. Eugene Meyer addressed to Hon. DAVID I. WALSH, which clearly states his objections to the principle of bond-secured currency, the identical principle contained in section 3 of the Steagall-Glass bill and without equal safeguards. I therefore repeat that if this bill is administered sympathetically that the back of this greatest of all panics will be speedily broken.

Let it therefore be remembered that whatever the extent of the benefits under this act may be, it will be in direct proportion to the liberality and intelligence or the lack of these qualities shown in its administration.

If this bill had been thought of and enacted during the Seventy-first Congress immediately following the stock crash of October–November, 1929, it would have exerted an immediate curative effect, and the unemployment and suffering for the last two years would have been largely mitigated.

If the American people wish to enjoy in full measure the benefit of a Democratic doctrine, they should put the Democrats in control and let them administer the Federal reserve act, which they certainly originated, and so well administered that there was but one bank failure in the last year of Democratic control, whereas in the last two years there have been 3,635 bank failures, a record which should make even the Republican leaders blush with shame.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD LANDS

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 268) to excuse certain persons from residence upon homestead lands during 1929, 1930, and 1931 in the drought-stricken areas, with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title and the following Senate amendments:

> Page 1, line 4, strike out "years 1930 and" and insert "year 1929, 1930, or."
> Page 1, line 4, strike out "necessary" and insert "necessary, or during 1932 should find it necessary."
> Page 1, line 6, strike out "and" where it appears the second time and insert "or."
> Page 1, line 8, after "register" insert "of the district."
> Page 2, line 1, strike out "1930 and 1931" and insert "1929, 1930, 1931, and 1932."
> Amend the title so as to read: "An act to excuse certain persons from residence upon homestead lands during 1929, 1930, 1931, and 1932, in the drought-stricken areas."

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9699, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill; and pending that, with the permission of the Speaker, I want to make a statement to the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD], who has charge of the time, tells me that he has requests for time. I do not know just how much time the gentleman from Indiana has requests for.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. About two hours.

Mr. BYRNS. It is evident, if all time is taken, that we can not conclude the general debate on the bill to-night unless we sit until a very late hour in the session. We are anxious to have general debate close to-day if we can. I merely wanted to make the statement and to say to Members, particularly on this side, that there is no disposition to cut anybody off, but there is another appropriation bill to follow, and another to follow that, and another to follow that, and unless it is extremely urgent, they might defer their speeches to the next appropriation bill. I make that suggestion with no idea of cutting anybody off in general debate.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. TILSON. Would it not be a good idea to get the permission of the House for Members to extend their remarks in the RECORD? Later in the day, when there are very few on the floor, as sometimes happens, if Members had leave to extend their remarks, they might do so, and consequently take very little time. They might curtail the remarks delivered on the floor if they have permission to extend them in the RECORD.

Mr. BYRNS. I have no objection to that. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who speak on the bill may have five legislative days from the date of the passage of the bill in which to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HOWARD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee, we have before us for consideration at this time the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill. Those of us who have sat in this subcommittee and listened to the evidence presented have had a very pleasant task, and at the same time it has been a rather strenuous one and one filled with grave responsibility.

We all realize the fact that the condition of the Treasury is such that it is absolutely necessary for us to pare down appropriations to the very lowest possible point, where it will not interfere with the ordinary functioning of the governmental departments.

With that object in view we have reduced the appropriation under the 1932 appropriation something over $44,000,000. We have reduced the appropriations carried in this bill something over $22,000,000 under the Budget estimates. We are aware of the fact that in doing so it was necessary to curtail some activities in these departments, and yet the committee feels that the curtailments have not been to such an extent as to interfere with the proper functioning of these departments.

We are faced with a very, very serious situation, so far as the Treasury is concerned. With a deficit of something like $900,000,000 for the fiscal year 1931, with a deficit something over $2,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1932, and with an estimated deficit of something over $1,200,000,000 for the fiscal year 1933 the task of balancing the Budget is a most difficult one. It becomes necessary for us as Members of Congress to do everything within our power to bring our expenditures and our receipts a little more nearly in balance.

That matter can not be accomplished entirely through retrenchment in appropriation bills. It would be absolutely impossible to reduce appropriation bills to the extent of taking care of this deficit that faces us for 1933. It is necessary to operate at both ends, not only to reduce appropriations to the very limit but to devise means through taxation methods and legislation that will help to bring the Budget more nearly in balance, and, of course, we know that it hurts both ways. Retrenchment pinches, but it does not pinch quite as badly as the imposition of additional taxes. When the tax bill comes from the Ways and Means Committee and we see what is necessary to face in that tax bill, it is going to hurt much more than the retrenchment we are trying to make in our appropriations.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] made a wonderful exposition of this bill yesterday, and it is not my purpose to undertake to discuss the bill as a whole. There are two or three features of this bill that I want particularly to call your attention to, not that we will be able to do any more than has been done in the bill, but more with the idea of calling attention of the Congress to the advisability of remedial legislation, and calling it to the attention also of the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries, and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with a view to bringing out some legislation that will remedy these conditions of which I speak.

In this bill we carry $38,816,000 for ocean mail. That amount is an increase of $2,216,000 over and above the appropriations made for the fiscal year 1932. The $2,216,000 is due to the fact that under the Merchant Marine Act passed here in 1928, the Postmaster General is given authority, carte blanche, to contract for the carrying of ocean mail without limit and without stint, except as to speed and tonnage of vessels employed in that service. He can enter into as many contracts as he wants to enter into, he can enter into contracts with as many competing lines as he wants to, he can enter into contracts for carrying mails whether there is mail to carry or not. The only limitation there is in that law is the amount per mile that he may contract to pay for mail space, based on the speed of vessels and their tonnage. I am not censuring the Postmaster General, and anything that I may say here to-day I do not want to be understood as a censure of the Postmaster General or his department in any way. In my opinion, however, we have placed entirely too much power in the hands of any one man. We have authorized and empowered the Postmaster General to enter into these contracts and bind the Appropriations Committee and the Congress in such a way that makes it absolutely necessary for us to make these appropriations to fulfill the contracts made by the department, whether we want to do it or not.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. For how many years at a time are these contracts entered into?

Mr. ARNOLD. Ten-year contracts.

Mr. PARSONS. The statement was made yesterday by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], with reference to air mail contracts that many of those were expiring, and they were getting much better rates now, at least that some of the air lines had come in and offered to take contracts for half of what they are paying now. Will that same thing apply to the ocean mails?

Mr. ARNOLD. It does not apply to the carriage of ocean-going mails. We find ourselves confronted with this situation. Forty-four contracts have been entered into by the Postmaster General with adjustable rates of compensation based on speed and tonnage, obligating this Government to pay by way of subsidy $18,911,474.60 for the fiscal year 1931. In other words in 1931 it cost this Government almost $19,000,000 more to carry the ocean mail than it would cost on a poundage basis for the carrying of that mail. It is a pure, unadulterated subsidy, with the power and authority vested in one man to make contracts and obligate the Government to an unlimited extent and when the contracts are made, it is an obligation of the Government, for which we can not refuse to appropriate. If we should refuse to appropriate the money for the fulfillment of those contracts, the contracting party can go into the Court of Claims, bring suit against the Government, and, of course, recover.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. Is there any provision in this bill for subjecting these contracts given out by the Postmaster General to the supervision of the Comptroller General?

Mr. ARNOLD. All of these contracts, of course, are under the supervision of the Comptroller General. As far as the Comptroller General could go is to see whether or not the Postmaster General has exceeded his authority given him by the law.

Mr. KELLER. Does he have no right to inquire into how the contracts are given and why?

Mr. ARNOLD. I do not think he would have that authority. The question for him to determine is whether or not these contracts are authorized by law; and if the contracts are authorized by law, necessarily he must approve the payment of the money due under the contracts.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has been fair, as he should be, to the Postmaster General. He admits that this important official has done no wrong in connection with these contracts. Is it not a fact that under the policy established by the Congress the Postmaster General is authorized to and is actually carrying out what the gentleman characterizes as a pure subsidy? It is a subsidy, but a legitimate subsidy, in order to maintain the merchant marine. It costs a few millions of dollars, but at that it is much less expensive than for the Government itself to run the ships by the Shipping Board or any other governmental agency.

Mr. ARNOLD. I am very glad the gentleman mentioned that proposition. As I stated a moment ago, I do not censure the Postmaster General. It was claimed before our committee, which the hearings will show, that proposals for bids were put out by the Post Office Department in at least one instance in such a way that only a certain favored company could bid. The particular instance that I call attention to, and you will find it in the hearings, is the so-called Seatrain Corporation. That is a concern that was engaged, or expected to be engaged, in shipping between New Orleans and Habana, Cuba. They had a vessel that was built in England, a company that was incorporated under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, American capital, it is true. The vessel was built or construction work on the vessel begun before the dead line fixed in the law for the construction of vessels in this country, and it had a 90-car capacity for carrying railroad cars between the ports that I have mentioned.

Another company, the Flagler interests, was engaged in a line of traffic that had ships of 40-car capacity. The proposal for bids that went out specified only 90-car capacity. That made it absolutely impossible for the Flagler interests to bid on a contract of that kind. They complain that they were not given a fair chance. Under the merchant marine act money is advanced by the Government through the Shipping Board for the construction of new vessels. An interdepartmental committee, composed of the chairman of the Shipping Board, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Postmaster General, pass on the advisability, kind, and character of ships to be built. The Government advances 75 per cent of the cost of the construction of these vessels, and the Post Office Department gives them a subsidy contract under the guise of carrying the mail. Under that provision a number of vessels have been built and are being built now, but the program already begun under this law is fast reaching the point where it will cost this Government $30,000,000 a year by way of subsidy for space for carrying mail, whether there is any mail to carry or not. I submit the Congress should have the right and power and authority to determine to what extent we are going to subsidize our merchant marine and not have delegated that authority.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. GLOVER. Can the gentleman tell us how much of the present postal deficit is due to this abuse which the gentleman has spoken of?

Mr. ARNOLD. The cost-ascertainment committee for the fiscal year 1931, as I say, listed this differential as $18,911,474.60

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. FREAR. What do other countries do in this direction; that is, in the line of subsidy and mail contracts to help their merchant marine, if anything?

Mr. ARNOLD. I can not tell the gentleman just how the matter is handled by other countries. I know that other countries do subsidize their merchant marine. I think it is proper that we should subsidize our merchant marine within due limits, but I think that the Congress of the United States should have retained within its own power the right to say to what extent we are going to subsidize, and not place the matter in the hands of one individual.

Let me repeat, I am not charging that the Postmaster General is guilty of malfeasance in office. As far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned and as far as Congress is concerned, we are blown about like straws before the wind, absolutely unable to help ourselves.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman not believe, if we are going to subsidize ocean-going ships and air service, it should be done out of some other fund and not be chargeable to the deficit in the Postal Department?

Mr. ARNOLD. A law was passed by Congress in 1925 authorizing a method of accounting in the Post Office Department, segregating the purely postal revenue and expenditure items from other items. Permit me to say that the total distributable loss from all sources in the Post Office Department—that is, the excess of expenditures over revenue—is $146,545,199.72. There are certain items that the Post Office Department was authorized to eliminate from their accounting on the theory that they are not properly chargeable to the Post Office Department, non-revenue-producing items. Among those is $9,886,456, revenue-equivalent value for carrying penalty matter for the various departments of Government.

There is franked matter for Members of Congress, $723,671; franked matter for other than Members of Congress, $128,970. In addition to that, there are publications going free in the county. Under the present laws newspaper circulation confined to the county limits pays no postage. The cost-ascertainment committee found that the equivalent-revenue value of that would be $704,579. Mail matter for the blind is carried free of charge, amounting to $132,161. Then there are certain differentials in second-class postage favoring religious, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, and fraternal organizations, with a revenue equivalent of $392,495.64. Then the excess cost of airplane service over postal revenues derived from air mail, $17,167,501.04. The theory of that is to develop aviation by way of a subsidy. In addition to that is this differential favoring vessels of American registry of $18,911,974.60, or a total of nonproductive and extraordinary items which should not properly be chargeable to the Post Office Department of $48,047,308.28.

Now, deducting that from the total deficit of $146,545,199.72 leaves a net operating deficit, exclusive of nonproductive and extraordinary items, of $98,497,891.44 for the fiscal year 1931.

That really, Mr. Chairman, is the proper deficit in the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1931. I think it is proper that these other items should not be charged strictly to the Post Office Department, because some are for the benefit of other departments of the Government and others public policy for the benefit of our merchant marine and developing aviation throughout the country.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. REILLY. What branch of the Post Office Department is not paying its way?

Mr. ARNOLD. I can give the gentleman that information, but it will take some time. I think, Mr. Chairman, in order to avoid taking the time, if I may, I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including this table so that the House may be advised as to what the situation is on the various classes of mail.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

Recapitulation of allocations and apportionments of postal revenues and expenditures for the fiscal year 1931 to the classes of mail and special services, not taking into account relative priority, degrees of preferment, and value of service in respect to expenditures

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. TILSON. Before leaving the table the gentleman proposes to insert will he indicate what percentage of this deficit is caused by mail that is franked by Members of Congress? There is sometimes newspaper criticism to the effect that a large portion of this deficit is caused by reason of the franked mail of Members of Congress. As I caught the gentleman's figures, the entire amount for all mail sent by the legislative department, if it paid full postage, would be less than $1,000,000, or, as the gentleman states it, $723,671. In other words, if all Members of the Congress paid full postage on all mail matter sent to their constituents or to the departments, the net deficit of the Post Office Establishment, instead of being $98,497,891.44, would be reduced to $97,774,220.44.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes. May I state to the gentleman that the cost of carrying franked mail for Members of Congress, as compared with the entire cost of the Post Office Department, is less than one-tenth of 1 per cent. Not one-half of 1 per cent but one-tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. ADKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. ADKINS. Has the gentleman any information as to the amount of postage that comes into our office here in response to the franked mail we send out?

Mr. ARNOLD. That goes into the general receipts of the department and there is no segregation of that made here. It all goes into the general receipts.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. I have in my hand the Post Office Department's statistical report for the month of December, 1931, dated February 5, as regards the amounts paid for carrying mail on the 34 air mail routes. I notice, for instance, on route 2, from Chicago to Memphis, a distance of 523 miles, the amount paid is $24,655.08, or $4.23. I notice also that from Salt Lake City to San Diego, a distance of 782 miles, where the same number of trips is made, the amount is $65,456, or $1.15. What is the cause of the discrepancy in the rates paid on these different routes? There seems to be a great difference.

Mr. ARNOLD. Well, there are several things that have to be taken into consideration by the Post Office Department in awarding these contracts for domestic air mail. Of course, new routes are subject to competitive bidding. Companies in some sections of the country, I presume, bid lower than those in other sections of the country. It depends quite a good deal also upon the amount of night flying. Night flying is much more expensive than day flying. It depends also upon the character and kind of equipment which the Post Office Department requires in its set-up. Then there are various other elements that have to be taken into consideration, such as the terrain of the country, the weather, and many other things. There are so many elements that enter into it that I could not give the gentleman a specific answer.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman says these contracts are let on competitive bids. My understanding is that some of these contracts are not let in accordance with the Watres law and that no competitive bidding takes place.

Mr. ARNOLD. I have not come to the domestic air mail as yet.

Mr. CLAGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. CLAGUE. One of the lines of which the gentleman speaks has a very large passenger traffic and that enters into it very much.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman is correct. I want to get to this other matter. The foreign air mail service cost us during 1931, $7,070,178.96, and we got back out of that in revenues $1,014,105, so that there was a net loss of $6,056,073. In other words, we are paying out $7 for our foreign air mail for every dollar we get back. These are 10-year contracts. The contracts have been made by the Postmaster General and therefore we could not reduce the appropriation in the bill for those purposes if we wanted to do so, because the obligation of the Federal Government has already been pledged by those contracts, and the only thing we could do in this bill was to go along and allow the amounts which the Government had already obligated itself to pay.

I now want to get to the domestic air mail service. In 1931 we expended $16,942,454.39 and we got back in revenue for that $6,210,344.86. I see there is some discrepancy in some of these figures, but that is approximately what it is, leaving a deficit of something like $11,000,000. This last amount is the Government's contribution to the development of aviation through the carriage of domestic air mail.

Now, gentlemen, under the Watres law, with which many of you are familiar, the Post Office authorities were given the power to contract for this domestic air mail service supposedly on competitive bidding. Yet a great amount of complaint has come to our committee because it is claimed this matter was not handled as it should have been handled by the Post Office Department. In fact, we had one concern come before our committee and tell us that they would be willing to carry all the air mail of this country, both foreign and domestic, for practically one-half of what we are paying now. That statement caused those of us who had the responsibility resting on our shoulders of recommending to you the amount Congress should appropriate for this purpose to give the matter our careful and serious consideration.

In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN], when he spoke about some of these contracts not being let by competitive bidding, there is a provision in the Watres Act that permits the Postmaster General to make extensions of existing air lines without competitive bids, and we have been told that many of these extensions that have been made are almost major portions of the air line that was let under competitive contracts. Whether this is right or wrong, whether there is abuse of this power or not, I am not saying. I am simply telling you gentlemen what came before our committee.

Now, this concern that came before us and said that the mail could be carried and that they would be willing to carry it for approximately one-half is none other than the Cord Manufacturing Co. These people, I understand, are absolutely reliable financially. They have assets back of them of something like $50,000,000, $15,000,000 of which is in cash. They say they are willing to enter into contracts with the Government, give approved bond for faithful performance, and surround their service with all the safety appliances now required or that may be required by the Post Office Department, and by so doing, save the Government something like eight or nine million dollars a year in carrying our domestic and foreign air mail.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not impossible at this time for the Post Office Department to cancel the contracts they have made for a given period, and is there not also a proviso that they can be extended?

Mr. ARNOLD. The only limitation there is in the Watres Act on that score is that the Postmaster General can not contract beyond the authorized limits given by Congress through appropriations; and permit me to call the attention of the committee to the necessity of legislative committees scanning most carefully legislation that is proposed by heads of departments.

When this so-called Watres bill came down here there was absolutely no limitation on the authority of the Postmaster General to award mail contracts as to number and frequency. When that bill was before the legislative committee this watchdog of the Treasury over here on my left, Mr. WOOD of Indiana, and our genial friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] looked over that bill and they say that for the protection of the Public Treasury something should be done, and these gentlemen thereupon insisted that a limitation be put on the Watres bill limiting the action of the Postmaster General on such matters to the appropriations provided by Congress, and I want to say that these gentlemen, Mr. WOOD and Mr. BYRNS, deserve the thanks not only of the Congress, but of the entire people of the United States for their scrutiny in detecting this defect in the Watres bill in the form in which it came down here from the department. [Applause.]

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Supplementing what the gentleman has said, I am inclined to believe that that act has not been made strict enough. I hold in my hand here extracts from opinions of the Comptroller General, Mr. McCarl, in which he criticizes the action of the Postmaster General in extending these routes thousands of miles, in some cases, and states that something further should be done by the Congress in limiting the authority of the Postmaster General in regard to these mail contracts.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield so that I may answer that question?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MEAD. I am just about to introduce a bill covering the criticism offered by the Comptroller General in respect of the awarding of these contracts, and I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania and other Members of the House will aid me in securing its passage.

Mr. McFADDEN. I shall be very pleased to do so, because I think there is discrimination by the Postmaster General here that should be corrected.

Mr. ARNOLD. Before leaving that point let me call your attention to this fact: By vesting this power and authority in one man it is made possible for him, if he is inclined to do so—and I am not charging that the Postmaster General is doing so—to favor certain transport companies to the exclusion of others and to drive those out of business that he does not care to contract with.

Let me call your attention to a very serious matter. I have not gone into this very far or very thoroughly, but it is charged that the Cord Manufacturing Co., through one of its subsidiaries, was engaged in carrying passengers from Chicago to St. Louis and from Chicago to Detroit; and after they had started and had been in operation carrying passengers on these lines, along comes the Postmaster General with an award of a mail contract to a line that had started in business something like 30 days after this Cord concern had established this line. Of course, with the subsidy carried by the air mail contract it was possible for the one favored by the mail contract to flourish and for the other concern not so favored to suffer thereby. In other words, if these two acts—the Watres Act for domestic air mail and the merchant marine act—are for the purpose of building up and developing these industries, there should be no discrimination practiced in favor of one company over another.

Here is a concern with $50,000,000 back of it. I understand they manufacture 60 per cent of the air equipment of this country and actually have in use by themselves something like 30 per cent of the total air equipment of this country, and they claim they are discriminated against and can not get contracts for carrying the mail. They are, perhaps, doing as much or more to develop aviation in this country than any other, and yet they claim they are discriminated against in the awarding of air mail contracts at the expense of the Treasury.

I am giving you that for what it is worth. I do not know anything about it. I hold no brief for the Cord Manufacturing Co. I am telling you some of the things disclosed before the subcommittee; and if it is true, as reported to us, it is a practice that ought to stop, and stop at once. [Applause.]

As I say, we have no power to control that. But there is only one thing we can do, and that is to bring the bill here to you recommending appropriations for these activities that the Government has already been bound and obligated to pay for.

The Bureau of the Budget cut these airplane costs a million dollars. We left the figures at $19,000,000, the same as the Bureau of the Budget recommended.

Early in 1932, under that provision of the Watres Act, which gave the Postmaster General the right to call in contractors and go over the rates, issue certificates at reduced rates, an arrangement was made whereby $1,240,000 was saved to the Government by readjustment of these rates. Other rates are in the process of adjustment, which might bring a further saving and a further retrenchment in this department of the post-office service. It is most earnestly hoped that the Postmaster General will be able to further retrench.

It is impossible for us to bring about a retrenchment on these expenditures, where contracts have been entered into, and refuse appropriations, because suits would immediately follow in the Court of Claims and judgment, of course, rendered.

This whole matter, gentlemen, ought to be thoroughly sifted and thoroughly investigated. [Applause.] There is a feeling on the part of some that matters are not as they should be. I can not say that there is anything wrong, but certainly if a concern with the financial backing of the Cord Co. comes to us and says that they can not get any contract from the Government, and say that they are willing to carry the mail at substantially one-half of what we are now paying, and surround their activities with all safeguards required, and thus making a saving to the Federal Government of $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 a year, we are derelict in our duty as Members of Congress if we do not do what we can to bring about a saving in this activity. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Indiana, in charge of the time, in yielding to me at this time, because I think he appreciates the fact that I am going to be somewhat critical of the action of his subcommittee on one matter, and possibly of him personally. However, it will all be in the best spirit on both sides.

I find a very peculiar provision in the bill as reported by the committee on pages 9 and 10, having to do with distinctive paper purchased by the Government for its money and bonds. It is something that practically never has been done in general practice, namely, placing a positive price on articles we are proposing to purchase by bids.

Bids are to be called for, with a suggested proviso that this distinctive paper, now being purchased at 42 cents a pound, is to be bought for not exceeding 38 cents per pound in price.

There is also a provision that the Treasury Department may in its wisdom split the bids. Now that, of course, is entirely contrary to the method of bidding. The Comptroller General has held time and again that it was necessary under the law to accept the lowest bid. This is an effort to divide the award on the ground that as now made there is a monopoly.

There may be a monopoly, Mr. Chairman, but it is not an arbitrary monopoly; it is not one in which any advantage has ever been taken of the Government.

A little later, when the bill is under consideration under the 5-minute rule, I may want to discuss the merits of that subject more in detail. What I am concerned with at the present moment is the references that have been made to this contractor in the hearings before the subcommittee.

The hearings on the Treasury Department appropriation bill became public the day before yesterday. I was very much surprised to find certain statements in that report. I shall quote one or two sentences. At page 135 Mr. Broughton, of the Treasury Department, was the witness, and in the course of the examination of Mr. Broughton the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] made this comment:

> Well, Crane so manipulated his contract as to make that possible. Crane has had a monopoly of it, and he keeps it just by doing that sort of thing. I think, if there ever was a hold-up in this country, it is the Crane hold-up of the Government in furnishing this distinctive paper. He has facilities for manufacturing it that nobody else has.

There are several extracts that I would like to read if I had the time, but I shall refer to only one other and that is this, also made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]:

> There is no more fraud practiced on the Government anywhere than in this paper business.

With all due respect to my good friend from Indiana, he is unfamiliar with the character of the people to whom he is referring when he makes those statements. We may sometimes exaggerate in the heat of debate. Sometimes we speak without due consideration of what we are saying. Allowances must be made for that sort of thing, but when a Member of this House deliberately makes statements of that nature about a man not represented at the hearing in executive session of the committee he ought to know what he is talking about, and with all due regard to my friend from Indiana, he does not know what he is talking about when he makes those references to the Crane family of Massachusetts. If there ever has been a family which, through a period of a century, has stood for all that is good in citizenship not only in Massachusetts but in the United States, it is that same Crane family. For 100 years that family has been making paper of the very highest quality in Dalton, Mass., and in addition to making paper they have been leading citizens in every philanthropic movement that has ever arisen. No one has ever gone to a member of the Crane family with any just cause for sympathy or support or aid, that he has not secured it in liberal measure. No fraud is practiced, and I can honestly say to-day without having the word of the present generation to which the gentleman from Indiana referred in that statement, that the good name of the Crane family is more valuable to them than any Government contract conceivable, and I stand back of that statement. Pride of family is a great thing, particularly when it means what it does to that particular family. It is too bad that the gentleman would so forget his position here as one of the most prominent Members of the House as to make such personal reference to an individual who to-day bears that honorable name and is bearing it in a manner worthy of his ancestry. I must feel that the gentleman from Indiana in using that language was ignorant of the facts of which he spoke. Fraud? How absurd! It is not worthy of discussion here on the floor, and I rise simply to offer this word of explanation to my colleagues relative to the statements I have quoted.

What is back of this whole proposition? I do not object to a man differing from my views on any subject, political or otherwise. I have the highest regard for the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle, not one of whom agrees with my political thinking. That is nothing to their discredit. There was a personal animosity back of the proposition I refer to when those insulting words were put into the hearings. It is this: Last year, under the influence of a certain official, who admitted at the hearing that he did not know anything about the paper business, a bill was introduced and hearings were held thereon before the Committee on Expenditures, the purpose of which bill was to build a paper mill in the District of Columbia for the manufacture of this distinctive paper. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] was beaten to a standstill; you could not hitch anything to any evidence that he submitted, and the committee practically turned him out. I was astonished when I saw that he was going to continue this fight. Let us be good losers. If you get licked, take it for what it is worth. Do not come back and insult the man you tried to beat but could not. That is the situation as it appears here to-day.

The language of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] yesterday was characterized with the utmost courtesy in connection with this matter. There is no exception whatever to that type of remarks, but the peculiar language that I have quoted and this effort to discredit the firm of Crane & Co. is purely a result of the defeat the gentleman from Indiana met last year when he tried to set up a Government paper mill. There is the whole story in plain English. As I say, it would have been becoming of the gentleman from Indiana to have been a good loser. He did not have a case. Every witness that appeared, except himself and this henchman of his, Mr. Brown, of the Efficiency Bureau—and he says he does not know anything about making paper—was on the other side with reference to that bill. The paper people themselves testified that the prices offered by the Crane Co. were fair prices in the market value. One of the big concerns that could be a competitor for this contract if it saw fit testified that the value of that paper would be 10 to 15 cents higher in the open market than the Government paid for it. There is no arbitrary monopoly of any kind whatsoever, and over a period of 75 years there never has been a day that that firm has not cooperated with the officials of the Federal Government in producing the best article conceivable. The only kick that has ever come, the only complaint that has ever been made, came from the Bureau of Efficiency. I do not know what the deuce that bureau is for; it is not aiding anybody in any way and is not doing any good. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury testified as to the manner in which Crane & Co. filled its contract. Every official of the Government, with the exception of this one particular man and our good friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], said that they had cooperated over a period of years under all circumstances and on all occasions to improve the paper that they made under the Government contract.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I quite agree with the gentleman in his castigation of the so-called Efficiency Bureau.

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not use all the language I had in mind. The parliamentary rules would not permit it.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, everything the gentleman would say about it I will indorse, but does the gentleman think it would be wise party policy to discredit so great a Republican leader as our friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]?

Mr. TREADWAY. I said a few moments ago that I respected just and fair differences of opinion, political or otherwise, but I do not think this is any place to bring in personalities and make personal feeling the object of legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. All of us have so much confidence in the utterances of our friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] when the gentleman tells us about high public officials that we do not want to lose our confidence.

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I do not believe the gentleman from Texas or his colleagues have voted with the gentleman from Indiana very often. If the gentleman has such confidence in the gentleman from Indiana, the gentleman should vote with him.

Mr. BLANTON. We follow him sometimes when he tells us about the extravagant leaders of the Nation.

Mr. TREADWAY. We will not follow him when he tells us about paper making or about Mr. Crane. I am one Member who will not follow him, in any event.

Now, I think I have explained in fairly plain English what my feelings are in this matter. A little later on we may discuss the merits of the item that has been inserted, under the leadership of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] into this bill, perhaps not contrary to all precedent, but contrary to established procedure in making Government contracts.

Permit me to make one other reference. I notice that certain distinguished gentlemen, including the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], were interested in the same thing. I wish all those gentlemen who sympathize with the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] would read the hearings and the evidence, which are matters of record and which appeared last year when this subject was being debated by the Committee on Expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] upon further endearing himself to the manufacturer of distinctive paper for the Government. The gentleman has done a good job of it and certainly is entitled to the further support of the Crane Co.

I have no word to retract that is set forth in the evidence with reference to what I said about the Crane Co. I said nothing personal about the gentleman who is at the head of that company. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] may infer as he pleases to whom I referred in using the language I did.

Briefly as I may, I wish to state the facts and let the membership conclude whether or not fraud has been practiced upon the Government of the United States by this concern that has had a monopoly of manufacturing this distinctive paper for very nearly a half century.

About a year ago, at the time the bill was introduced to which the gentleman has referred, to build a Government mill to manufacture our own distinctive paper, the gentleman now at the head of this concern, the junior Mr. Crane, came to see me and attempted to justify himself in the fact that they had a monopoly upon the manufacture of this paper. He said they had had it for all these years, and, in consequence of their having had that monopoly this long, they were entitled to its continuance. That was a very strange proposition to me.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not have time now.

Mr. PARSONS. I simply wanted to ask where they were located.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not yield.

Now, we have fixed a limitation in this bill of 38 cents for the manufacture of this paper, and we fixed it because of the fact that a competing company had offered previously to manufacture a certain proportion of it for that sum. We are using about 1,000 tons of this paper every year. This concern which offered to take a portion of the contract made a bid upon 400 tons of it at 38 cents a pound. You may be assured that this gentleman was not proposing to manufacture this paper at a loss.

The Crane Co., in order to freeze out this man who could only manufacture 400 tons of it, submitted a bid in the alternative. He would manufacture all of it for a certain figure, but if he were only given a portion of it he would manufacture it at a higher figure, and, taking the two sets of figures together, he would manufacture the entire amount of it cheaper than the man who would manufacture the 400 tons of it.

Mr. YON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. YON. Has the price varied much during the past 10 years?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It has varied but very little.

Now, the facts are that all kinds of paper have been reduced. The finest paper that is being used to-day at the United States Government Printing Office is costing us 16 cents a pound, whereas a year ago or two years ago it was costing 23 cents. There is not any reason on earth why these gentlemen should not reduce the price in proportion to the cost of their raw materials.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] says that Mr. Brown, head of the Bureau of Efficiency, admitted that he did not know anything about paper. Mr. Brown never admitted anything of the character. Mr. Brown is responsible to-day, or his Bureau of Efficiency is responsible for the Bureau of Standards having developed a paper made 50 per cent cotton and 50 per cent linen that is as good as or better paper, upon which we print our money and our bonds, than the 75 and 25 per cent paper. So Mr. Brown certainly knows something about paper, for it was through his ingenuity and his suggestion that this paper has been made by the Bureau of Standards and has been or will be adopted by the Crane Co. and all of the other companies.

Now, if Mr. Crane, during all of these years has been taking advantage of this monopolistic control of the manufacture of this paper, as he has been doing, charging the Government from 5 cents to 8 cents a pound more than it could be manufactured for by any other concern which had the facilities to do it, I want to ask, What is it but fraud? You will find that the paper will be manufactured within the limitation we have placed upon it. [Applause.] Last year we paid the Crane Co. 43 cents. There is not any reason why we should pay that to this concern. Well might he be philanthropic. Well might he be charitable and generous to his Congressman. The Government of the United States has been furnishing the wherewithal for that generosity and philanthrophy. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Notwithstanding the fact that they have been large contributors to the Republican campaign, our friend from Indiana nevertheless has told us what he deems the truth about them.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have tried to tell the truth. If they have been contributing anything to the campaign fund, I am thankful for that. We need it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Where are the headquarters of the Crane Co.?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Some town in Massachusetts; I forgot the name of the town, but it is somewhere in Mr. TREADWAY'S district.

Mr. PARSONS. Where is the company located that proposes to take the contract at a lower figure?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is also located in Massachusetts.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER]. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I assure you I appreciate the honor this committee has done me, a new Member, in giving me this unusual allotment of time of one full hour, the most that can be given to anyone under our rules. I shall do the best I can to lay before you those things which, in my judgment, are the most necessary for our consideration at the present moment.

We have been considering for the last two days a bill providing for the appropriation of money. Another great committee is considering the way of getting money. I shall address myself to another subject, that is, to restoring the national income, so we can get money and can appropriate money hereafter. It can be done—it must be done.

I am going to speak largely from my notes, for this reason: It would be an easier matter for me, and probably more pleasant for you, if I talked with entire freedom, but there is so much to be said on this subject that I do not feel I am at liberty to encroach on your time and on your patience by leaving out something that ought to be in or forgetting something that ought not to be forgotten.

UNEMPLOYMENT—ITS CAUSE AND CURE

The misfortunes under which we are existing to-day have not arisen from accidental causes. They are the direct result of some failure in government or misgovernment, or both. These terrible hardships could have been prevented, every one of them. If this were not true, then we are the creatures of circumstance, without any possible defense against the recurrence of other and greater cataclysms than these. We are compelled to take one position or the other. If we are the creatures of circumstance, subject to the winds that blow, then government is a travesty on reason, and our efforts necessarily are vain.

But the plain truth is, this nightmare of existence could have been prevented by law. These misfortunes can be cured by law. Their recurrence can as certainly be provided against by law. The full power to do all these things lies clearly within the hands of this Congress.

WHAT ARE THE CAUSES?

To find the causes and fix the responsibility is our first duty. Then, with clear vision, let us like statesmen lay the ax to the root of the evil without fear and without trembling. If I were not very sure that all these things lie well within human reason and human action, I would not impose upon your time or patience.

There is not a reason in the world why we shall not restore a higher state of prosperity than we have ever had before and maintain it permanently. There is every reason why we shall.

TECHNOLOGICAL UNEMPLOYMENT

Unemployment is the most ominous question that has ever faced the industrial world. No other question approaches it in importance. This is true because the production of all wealth is the result of labor. If we reduce the production of wealth, then to that extent we reduce all business, delay progress, and hinder or prevent the payment of debts. Whatever the origin may have been, the direct continuing cause of the present widespread depression is unemployment. There is one simple, certain remedy—a job for every man and woman who wants to work. Solve unemployment and we solve all.

In this February, 1932, we have in the United States 8,000,000 men and women in enforced idleness. Twice as many more are subsisting on part-time employment. Those who still have jobs are very generally working at reduced wages. Of the 8,000,000 entirely in enforced idleness 2,000,000 are technologically unemployed. Six million are out of employment from purely financial causes.

By technological unemployment I mean the unemployment caused by labor-saving machinery, whose victims will not be reemployed in industry unless we enter into an era of greater prosperity than that of 1923 to 1929. Otherwise these make up our ever-increasing army of the permanently unemployed. This is the new element in our economic life in America. These technologically unemployed must be given work. There is no other remedy. But that is easily and certainly within our power.

IDLENESS PREVENTABLE

It was entirely within the power of the Government to have prevented any and all of this enormous enforced idleness. If foresight had been used, provision could easily and certainly have been made to take care of the technological unemployment as it arose. If the powers certainly within the hands of the Government had been used vigorously and intelligently, the financial collapse, which precipitated the unemployment of the other six million, could also surely have been prevented. All these can as certainly be reemployed when we correct the conditions which brought about unemployment.

CAPITAL ALSO UNEMPLOYED

Legitimate capital is also unemployed just as labor is and to the same extent. The very same causes that have thrown laborers out of work have thrown the capital usually devoted to productive industry out of investment. We will restore prosperity by putting idle men and idle dollars to work again. Men and dollars working together produce all the wealth of the land. If we increase the production of wealth up to the limit of universal employment, we can pay as we go and pay all we owe and do it easily and quickly. If we do not largely increase the present rate of producing wealth, we can not by any means pay what we already owe.

WHICH METHOD SHALL WE ACCEPT?

Two methods of meeting present conditions are slowly but surely taking form in this Congress. One group of thought seems to be coming to the opinion that by scrimping and pinching we can starve through this difficulty again, just as we have done so many times heretofore; to let localities provide against actual loss of life through local charity and to repeat this operation as many more winters as necessary. Let us see just what this means. First, it means the reduction of wage scales along all lines. It means reduction of the amount of wages to be paid out; this in turn means reduction in the amount of money available for expenditures in business; that means in turn the reduced volume of sales; reduced amount of manufacturing, of transportation, of production. It means the continued low price of farm products. Carried to its ultimate result it means the reduction of salaries along all lines; reduction of all labor to a minimum. It means the reduction of all pensions. In short, it means that prosperity is not to return; that we must accept a lower standard of living; that we must march backward. That is the policy of the defeatist. That is the program of the deflationist.

I can accept no part of such a program. Humanity is on the march. It is not going to turn back. It is not going to accept defeat at the hands of the greedy few. It will not permit itself to be misrepresented by the timid timeservers in politics. The people demand deliverance from this unpardonable misery. We must awake to the fact that 8,000,000 idle men are not going to remain idle.

The other method of meeting this emergency and solving it holds that by borrowing as much as necessary to put men to work and keep them at work, we may the more certainly not only cure the present condition but restore prosperity and, by proper additional safeguards, make prosperity permanent and national income secure.

ANALYZATION NECESSARY

To judge between these two proposals it is necessary to analyze the conditions which preceded this present most unfortunate state of affairs and arrive at a rational conclusion as to the principal causes which are responsible. It is not necessary to consider the many minor causes that may have contributed to these conditions, but only those without which present conditions would not have resulted. It is evident that the condition of enforced idleness, the resulting poverty, bankruptcy, and misery are nation-wide. It varies only in degree. They touch large numbers in every congressional district represented in this body.

It is my intention to present an analysis of the facts leading up to these conditions so distinctly as to leave no room to doubt what I regard as the causes of the panic of October, 1929, and the devastating depression which necessarily followed it. To this I shall only add a statement of the remedies which, to my mind, automatically suggest themselves. The statement of these remedies shall be no less specific than the statement of the causes. Both statements are offered for the consideration of my colleagues in the hope that if they be found inadequate, they may at least offer opportunity for discussion and development of a more correct basis for assignment of causes and a more certain discovery of the remedy. In doing this I shall guide clear of political partisanship or personal antagonisms, but shall by no means refrain from calling to account those policies or agencies which, in my judgement, are responsible for our present misfortunes.

SEVEN YEARS OF PROSPERITY

During the seven years from 1923 to near the end of 1929 we experienced a period of comparative prosperity in most lines of endeavor. Then out of an apparently clear sky came a thunderbolt. The New York Stock Exchange on October 24 went into a panic the extent, severity, and continuity of which has never been equaled.

THE INVISIBLE GOVERNMENT BECOMES VISIBLE

Prior to and during this same period we had experienced the complete dominance in government of what were held out to the world as big business men. It was an opinion, very generally promulgated and freely expressed, that only great financiers, very rich men who had "made a success of their own business"—whatever that may mean—were at all qualified to direct or to advise about government. A propaganda long continued and assiduously directed taught the people to believe that Congress was an evil which the country would do well to abolish altogether, or at most permit to meet as seldom as possible, and to adjourn without action, leaving the affairs of the country actually in the hands of those same self-appointed captains of somebody elses industry. "The invisible government" of the period before the World War had become the visible, clearly ostensible dominating power of political action.

I call attention especially to this condition because an entirely mistaken idea has been permitted to arise as to what is called "Business in government."

BUSINESS IN GOVERNMENT

Under our capitalistic system business is for one certain purpose—for making money for the men who carry on that business. That is the sole business of business. The making of money is necessarily essentially selfish. It always has been and always will be, and very properly so. Because of this vital fact it always has been the necessity that government interfere in business to protect honest business against crooked business and to protect the laborer against oppression. It always has been the rule that business should not interfere in government. And it always has been and always will be a misfortune when business is permitted to interfere in government; because business, whatever be the original motive, naturally and invariably interferes for its own selfish purposes.

DIFFERENCE IN BUSINESS

There is a vast difference between legitimate business and big business. For the purposes of this address I shall distinguish constantly between the two by naming them. The utter failure of this big-business interference in government was never better illustrated than in the things that have recently happened in this Congress. That spectacle should never be forgotten, nor its lessons ever again go unheeded. After shouting from the housetops for two years past that there must be "No governmental interference in business," that if left alone they, the big-business men, would bring back prosperity, these same gentlemen come pleading behind closed doors for "governmental interference"; pleading that the Congress which they had decried should save them and their fortunes from impending disaster. And it ought to be perfectly plain that as soon as they get what they want from Congress they will openly return to their former attitude and practices in denouncing the impotence of this body.

BIG BUSINESS CONFESSES

The special representatives of big business have come and confessed—behind closed doors only, be it remembered—their utter inability to save industry and business from general bankruptcy without governmental interference. They asked for and received $2,000,000,000 as a fund for the reconstruction of finance. So far as we know they did not tell us why finance should need reconstruction. They did not tell us what caused the conditions that require reconstruction. No agency of Government has asked what caused this reign of financial terror. That question is left up to Congress, and it must not go unanswered. When the danger of the utter collapse of our financial system is past, our committees will doubtless bring out into the open the full confessions of failure on the part of big business in its attempt to run the country. The facts are vital to the remedy. For the present, suffice it to say that these confessions of failure are abundant proof that no imaginable Congress could ever have made such a tragic mess of running the country as big business admits it has done. But just here I want to call your attention to the fact that this was a confession for a purpose, and the method presented for meeting the requirements, to save the business of the country, provides for leaving control of the business of the country in the hands of the very same group who have brought unemployment, ruin, poverty, and disaster to the people of this country. They will repeat unless we prevent it.

PANICS ARE NOT BATTLES OF DOLLARS

A panic is a thing of tragic human import. It is primarily a force destructive of human happiness. It involves the lives of men, women, and children. Under the Declaration of Independence life is recognized as the first inalienable right. The right to work is the right to life. We can no longer sit back and regard panics as battles of dollars. Panics and their ever ensuing depressions involve human liberty as well as human life. Ideals must be accepted as real things. The right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness becomes a question of bread and meat, of clothing and fuel, and a roof over our heads. The least that government can offer is the opportunity to earn those things. Government owes no man a living. But the primary purposes of government is to guarantee those conditions which will assure every man the opportunity to earn a living—a job for every man and woman who wants to work.

It ought to be clear to any rational mind that in this the richest country on earth, only very partially developed, with the most efficient army of workmen along all lines of any people in all history, with abundant resources in capital and credits, with great stores of amassed wealth, that the conditions existing at the present time can be no less than the result of misgovernment, failure of government, or both. The whole theory that the individual can meet these conditions is no longer tenable. The presence of 8,000,000 men anxious to work, but compelled, through no fault of their own, for the first time to accept charity for their starving wives and children, is the unanswerable argument against that outworn theory. Government permitted the development of these devastating conditions. Government must permanently do away with them. And it can.

The poverty which we see all about us is but the physical expression of the mental and spiritual poverty of the men who have directed and administered government in these latter years.

We have had many panics and depressions in America. They have offered plenty of opportunity and time to study the causes of them and to work out a solution. The repeated refusals in the past to investigate the causes of panics must not be repeated again, no matter how urgent the pleading of those who wish to suppress it. That very thing is the task of this Congress—nothing less.

It is in the hope of directing the attention and enlisting the sincere active interest of this body along these lines that I am at all presuming on the time of my colleagues.

PRIMARY CAUSES OF 1929 PANIC

There were three primary causes for the panic of 1929 and for the ensuing and continuing depression.

The first was technological unemployment.

The second was the contraction of currency and credits.

The third was the concentration of wealth through the enormously extended major bull movement and its correspondent bear movement on the New York Stock Exchange.

These will be taken up in their order. It is not quite possible to draw perfectly sharp lines between these three closely related subjects. A certain amount of overlapping will necessarily result. Especially will this be apparent in the second and third causes stated. But I hope that even these may be sufficiently differentiated to justify these divisions.

Technological unemployment is the element comparatively little noted in past political considerations. It is the loss of jobs through labor-saving machinery that will not be restored unless higher levels of prosperity than that of 1923–1929 are reached. It is, therefore, important in proportion to its numbers and its influence on other labor, both as to the wage rate and the insecurity of employment which an element of outside competition always exercises. Financial arrangements can be made to reabsorb all the other idle men back into ordinary channels of industry at former wage rates, with the resulting purchasing power. It is, however, quite as vital to the industry as a whole that these 2,000,000 dispossessed shall be reemployed as that any other 2,000,000 shall be. We have come to understand finally that employment, jobs, permanent work for all, is equally important to the business of the country, to the farmers, to all producers, to all manufacturers, transporters, and sellers of goods as it is to the men themselves who work. All legitimate business is interdependent.

INTERESTED IN GIVING MEN JOBS

I am as much interested in giving a job to the idle man on the sidewalks of New York as I am to the coal miner in my district. I am as much interested in giving work to the dispossessed in Chicago as I am to bringing fair prices to the farmers who have always been my neighbors.

I am as much for the white-collared man whom business combinations have thrown out of work as I am for the railroad man whose train no longer runs. Let us understand that the farmer is no longer a capitalist. The deflation of 1920 settled that. He is a worker for existence, affected by exactly the same influences as the wage earner is. We ought to get this clear in our minds once for all. I observe, and by no means forget, that Congressmen from our great cities support loyally the programs that seek to benefit our farmers. We ought all to see that we can not bring prosperity permanently to one section without bringing it to all sections alike; nor to one business or group of industry without applying the same to all groups everywhere; that for permanent prosperity there is but one group, and that is the group that makes up the great American Nation.

There was no such thing as widespread unemployment as we have it to-day until power was applied to machinery. When labor-saving machinery first came into use the basic cause of our present unemployment was born.

THE MACHINE AGE

This is the age of machinery—the use of power to do the work of men. To-day one American using labor-saving machinery produces on an average in all lines of work ten times as much as his revolutionary ancestor did working by hand, and he works only half as many hours per week. Wealth has increased just as ability to produce has increased. Ninety-five per cent of all the wealth produced in America is produced by labor-saving machinery.

The most important single result of labor-saving machinery has been to so cheapen everything manufactured that all those things, the cost of which originally prevented their purchase, have now come into very general use. This makes such conditions of living possible to the average man as were undreamed of a hundred years ago. Men with steady labor in any American industry live better than the kings of our Revolutionary period. It is only natural and right that men shall seek to continue that constantly increasing betterment of living conditions; and we are going to do that very thing.

But we ought at the same time to see clearly that if the increased use of constantly improving labor-saving machinery is to result only in throwing men out of employment, with no other labor to be had, that we are simply forcing men into starvation for our own selfish benefit. That is unthinkable. That is not going to be done. America is not going to let anybody starve who is willing to work. American workingmen do not want doles and will not accept them save under the stress of dire necessity. They want work, opportunity to serve. They have a right to demand and receive that opportunity. And I say to you now that America, acting nationally, is either going to pay out money for work or for idleness. We are compelled to take our choice between the two, whether we want to or not.

IDLENESS IS A DESTRUCTIVE FORCE

And in this connection, let us hold in mind that the most destructive force in the social world is idleness; the most constructive force is contented employment; the most expensive thing is poverty; the cheapest thing is efficient well-rewarded labor.

Since it is so clearly to the benefit of all the people that men have been thrown out of employment, and that men shall continue to be thrown out of work by labor-saving machinery, it naturally follows that all who are benefited shall share in the responsibility of guaranteeing other employment for these men whom labor-saving machinery displaces.

Now, the Government of the United States is the agency of the people to accept responsibility for and put into effect the obligations which the people owe. It, therefore, is the duty of Government to employ these dispossessed men for the benefit of all the people, as well as a protection and assurance to those who must continue to lose their jobs for the people's benefit. And this is not an abstract theory at all.

MUST EXTEND USE OF MACHINERY

We ought not to falter a moment in extending constantly the use of machinery for saving labor and for infinitely improving the present living conditions of men. And this must and can certainly be done in such a way that all men shall participate in the benefits and advantages which result from labor-saving machinery, the men who labor and the men who are thrown out of work by the machine, as well as all others. We can do all that if we use the opportunity at hand.

LAND VENT NOW CLOSED

As long as we had a West to go to, the throwing of men out of employment by labor-saving machinery was not such a hardship. Little by little this new West was settled up. All the land of any value was taken and all the opportunities embraced, until for the past few years there is no longer any West to go to. And during these last few years where the machine went in the man went out to part or total enforced idleness.

MACHINERY BUILDS FORTUNES

Another result of the use of labor-saving machinery has been the building up of fortunes of such magnitude and incomes of such extent as men could not have believed possible a hundred years ago.

No man has such towering ability as to be able through his own talents and own energy alone to amass any one of these great fortunes. No man has such exalted genius as to alone earn any one of the tremendous incomes which many rich men of the present day receive. Every one of them owes the vastly greater part of these great fortunes and stupendous incomes to the opportunity which the American people, through the power of their cooperative efforts, have afforded them. And these fortunes and these incomes would soon melt away without the protection with which the American Government surrounds them.

MEN OWE GOVERNMENT FOR OPPORTUNITY

It therefore follows as a matter of justice and common sense that these most-favored beneficiaries of opportunity afforded by the Government should pay to the Government a sufficient part of these incomes, whatever part that may be, to maintain the Government in continuing opportunity equal to their own for the rest of its citizens, and for protecting them equally in participation of opportunity. The income tax, the estate and gift taxes are the means of collecting for this opportunity.

TAXES

The system of taxation which until very recent years America has followed had been in use in some form time out of mind. There were many variations of it, but the central idea was and always has been that men should pay taxes according to their ability to pay. Up to and at the time of the writing of our Constitution land constituted the principal source of income. The power to tax this principal source of income was retained by the States; and land taxes from that time till the present have been the chief source of revenue for States, counties, townships, municipalities, and schools. At the time the Constitution went into effect the income from the ownership of land provided 90 per cent of the income of the wealth of the country.

INTERNAL REVENUE TAXES

The General Government, therefore, had to subsist on internal revenue taxes, on import duties and excise taxes, and on the small receipts accruing to the Government for its part from sales of public lands. From first to last the gross amount received from the sale of public lands amounted to $535,000,000, and the Government's small share in this helped to carry the new and growing Republic over many otherwise lean years. As the land was sold to the people by the Federal Government, it became assessable by the States. The value of this real estate, including the lands already in private ownership at the time the Government was formed, increased in price from $535,000,000 to $200,000,000,000 in 1929, or three hundred seventy-three fold, or 37,300 per cent of its original cost price. This tremendous increase in value gave the States an immense basis for taxation for the innumerable improvements which the founding of a new civilization in the midst of a wilderness required. During this period of physical expansion the power of the States was paramount because of their power to raise revenue and carry on improvements.

SOURCE OF INCOMES

By the time the sale of public lands neared its end, another power had grown into great importance and the Federal Government found it necessary to tap that source of income. Fortunately for our national existence, industry as a whole had been left free of control by the States. The Federal Government therefore appeared to be free to raise taxes on incomes arising from industry. In fact, during the Civil War an income tax had been laid and paid. In due course this law was repealed and until 1893 no income tax law was passed, but the Supreme Court by a decision of five to four declared the law invalid and held that the original law had only been held valid as a war measure. But the necessity for other sources of revenue besides import duties and internal revenue was pressing, and in 1913 the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution was ratified. It granted Congress the right to tax incomes from whatever source and the power to tax inheritances and gifts.

In the meantime the source of income from industry had vastly increased. In 1929 the incomes reported consisted of 5 per cent from real estate and 70 per cent from industry. Comparatively this income on real estate had fallen from 90 per cent originally to 5 per cent, and conversely the revenue available to the Federal Government from industry had risen to 70 per cent in 1929.

POWER OF STATES TO TAX DECREASED

The power of the States had decreased comparatively and the power of the Federal Government had increased in proportion to its ability to raise revenue and carry on the expending responsibilities of a national government. The weak nationalism of early days had given place to the strong nationalism which necessarily resulted from national control of industry as a whole.

Industry had during this period expanded from the handwork of the individual to the vast power of machine production. The sole personal ownership of small industry had given way to corporate ownership and control of large industry with its immensely divided ownership. The comparatively small, but generally well distributed, wealth of the many individuals had gradually given place to the large wealth of the few individuals. The necessity to control and limit this concentration of wealth is clearly understood, and can only be done by the action of national government.

While the national income was increasing tremendously the power to continue raising sufficient revenue from land to continue the same proportionate improvements was constantly declining. The extent and meaning of this decline of revenue from real-estate taxes seems to be but little known or understood.

REAL ESTATE OF INDUSTRY

From the beginning of time to the present moment men had been taught that the safest investment to be had was an investment based on real estate. But little by little incomes had shifted away from real estate. Real estate did not pay; therefore its desirability as an investment waned to such an extent that "nobody wants real estate." The extent to which this extreme statement is true seems to be little if at all understood by our lawmakers.

As yet there are no statistics available on this subject because this depression for the first time accentuates it. However, the deficiency judgments very generally being taken all over the country in mortgage foreclosures is an indication of this vital trend. But the conditions at present existing in southern Illinois are no doubt typical. In one county, the tax sales in 1930, more than 9,000 pieces of real estate were forfeited to the State because no one would bid the taxes for any of that large number of parcels of land. In the same county in 1931 more than 13,000 parcels failed to receive a bid of the taxes due, and only 65 per cent of the taxes assessed were paid at the end of the State moratorium of six months. The same condition exists to a greater or less extent in many if not most of the counties in that rich State. There is evidence of the same condition in many other States The import of such a widespread condition can not be overlooked. The insistence of the governmental authorities that the States, counties, and municipalities go deeper into debt for the purpose of providing work for the unemployed who have been thrown out of jobs by industry opens the whole question for consideration; first, have these agencies, depending on property tax, ability to meet that demand?

If the people can not or will not buy United States Government bonds for the purpose of providing labor for the unemployed over into a period of prosperity, as the representatives of big business are now announcing they will not, how can they expect an overburdened State, county, or municipality to sell their bonds based on real estate which will not pay an income to its owners, and which, therefore, nobody wants?

Is it not also clear that where forfeitures of property to the State are made the real estate still remaining in the hands of owners must not only pay its present assessment but pay also the amount formerly due from the property now forfeited? This must in turn bring another series of forfeitures, and so along to final forfeiture of all property except that owned by the wealthy. It is well to look the matter squarely in the face. It is of fundamental importance.

WHOSE RESPONSIBILITY?

The second question is, What agency is morally responsible for carrying over periods of unemployment the workers who during prosperity create the wealth of the country and who have been denied their fair share of the wealth they created during prosperity?

If industry profits by the work of men, then industry must in all justice be responsible for seeing those men safely through seasons of unemployment or they can not justly hope to profit from the work of these men when opportunity for profit again returns.

As long as industry can profit more by letting men "starve through" periods of unemployment, than it can by keeping men at work clearly industry will let them starve, as it is now doing on a nation-wide scale.

But if industry as a whole is held responsible, as it is morally and legally, then industry will set about doing away with unemployment—and not otherwise.

If industry as a whole is made to provide work through taxes, work for the benefit of the whole people, for industry alike with all the rest through permanent national improvements, then we are assured of the exercise on the part of industry of its best efforts to employ men in making profits for industry and keeping them continuously at work.

But as long as industry can get along without accepting the responsibility it will do so. If industry is permitted to unload its own burden onto the real estate through a misunderstanding of State rights, it will utterly destroy real-estate ownership.

BACKDOOR COMMUNISM

I appeal to the common sense of men to face facts and to recognize that any theory that does not fit the conditions under which men may live in peace and happiness is no longer worth considering.

The captains of industry are perfectly willing to unload their natural, moral, and legal burdens upon the owners of homes and farms if they can.

No man who takes the facts now available can fail to see that the burden of taxation already laid up on land is rapidly consuming much of it. It should be equally clear that to add further to these direct tax burdens on land will result in increasingly continued forfeitures to the State for nonpayment of taxes that can lead to only one thing—communistic ownership of land and the necessary communistic control of it.

CONGRESS ALONE HAS POWER

Congress alone has the power and duty to compel the acceptance of national responsibility by industry. It would be a vital mistake for the States, under any theory, however old and honored, however often misinterpreted for selfish purposes, to permit the unloading of the responsibility of national industry upon the already overburdened real-estate tax rates. It will, if effected, destroy the real-estate values completely. This whole question of unemployment and employment is a national question. The States are not responsible for this condition. The National Government is responsible.

INDUSTRY ABLE TO CARRY BURDEN

Industry, on the other hand, is abundantly able to carry this burden without injury. It is purely a question of spreading this burden equally among all of the units of industry according to their ability. When that is done no given industry will be laboring under any other conditions than are all the rest of industry, and no injustice will be done.

WHO PAYS THE INCOME TAX?

There seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding as to who pays the income tax. Many seem to think that the producer pays all of the taxes. That, of course, is a mistake. It is true that the man who labors and the man who cooperates with him do produce all wealth. But he does not pay income taxes unless his income is large enough to pay directly to the Government under the law for this very simple reason: Income taxes are laid on profits, not on wealth; whatever profit a man gets from any source belongs to him. Whatever profit a corporation makes from its business belongs to the corporation.

Under our system the men who produced the wealth, after their wages are paid or the sale is completed, have no further direct interest in those profits. If the Government does not intervene and take part of those profits for its use, the whole amount remains the property of the individual or corporation who received it. It is therefore a tax direct on net profits, not on wealth.

The result is that where the individual or corporation pays income taxes, he or it contributes just that much to the use of the Government for furnishing the opportunity to make those profits. It is, in short, a forced sharing of profits, not of wealth, with all of the people through their Government. The result is that the profits arising from business are reduced just to the extent of the income taxes taken by the Government. Otherwise these amounts would remain the property of the individual or corporation, not of the producer.

That this is true in practice is well set out by Senator SMOOT at the time Congress gave back to the rich individuals and successful corporations nearly a quarter of a billion dollars of income taxes which were already due, immediately following the stock panic in New York in October and November, 1929. (See Senate CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, December 13 and 14, in which that subject is fully discussed.) And Senator SMOOT is entirely right, for the simple reason that all business charges and collects all that the freight will bear; that is, it sells for the highest price it can get.

If anyone has heretofore thought that the income taxes were passed along to the ultimate consumer, let him consider further that were this actually true the men and the corporations who pay the income taxes not only could have no objection to paying income taxes, since it would really cost them nothing, but be assured they would see to it that income taxes were laid on the ultimate consumer high enough to prevent any deficit.

In fact, if by such an easy and simple method they could raise revenue, they would set propaganda to work and by every means at their command insist on putting sufficient income taxes onto themselves, by way of the ultimate consumer, to provide for all the idle men and women in America. They would bring pressure, exert influence, plead to Congress, arouse sympathy for the poor and the downtrodden—if only they could compel these poor and downtrodden to pay the cost of it all. No, no; let us understand that the payers of income taxes can not and do not pass it along; that they resist increased taxes because they must pay them out of their profits, which they otherwise would keep.

MACHINERY REDUCES LABOR REQUIREMENTS

It is true that labor-saving machinery has created countless new jobs, several new industries, a whole new era, indeed. Nevertheless, as machinery continues to be improved all the time it constantly reduces the number of men required in all lines of industry, including these new industries which it has itself created. It is beyond doubt an ultimate result that every time a labor-saving machine goes in men go out. And this constantly operating principle accounts entirely for the normal and constantly increasing army of the technologically unemployed. It is not a temporary condition which can be met and cleared away by any temporary measure, however well intended. Barring only the increase of the percentage of employment over previous levels of prosperity, it is a permanent condition that can be met only by permanent provision and on a scale to guarantee against failure.

HIGH WAGES

Up to a few years ago men who employed labor honestly thought that the cheaper they could get labor done the better off they were. But in the last decade some of the wiser ones have learned that the rights of humanity are actually involved in plain economics—that steady employment and high wages are the best boon the business world ever found.

As soon as we began paying wages high enough so men could buy, they did buy everything they wanted, and every line of business began to thrive. As long as men were employed business of all kinds flourished greatly. As soon as employment began to wane business of all kinds naturally began going down, and as unemployment increased we began to have hard times. There are always "good times" when everybody is at work; there are always "hard times" when large numbers are idle. Good times or hard times is a matter of employment or unemployment—nothing more, nothing less.

IMPROVING BUSINESS

To increase the ability of the people to buy is the only way we can improve business. The only way we can do that is to provide employment. We can not do that by property tax, because property tax is already so high and property values so low that we have reached, if we have not indeed already passed, the taxable limits.

Income depends entirely upon prosperity and in the long run will vary as the tide of prosperity rises and falls. When prosperity is general, taxable incomes will be numerous and the rates of income high. When prosperity wanes, the taxable incomes will decrease and the rate of income will be low. Employment is the basis of all prosperity; unemployment the destruction of it.

Every hour wasted in enforced idleness is irretrievably lost to the service of mankind. Every dollar not assisting in useful industry is a dead dollar. The streets are full of idle men. The hoards of hidden places and the banks are full of idle money. Bring the two together and industry springs instantly into life. All that is required to bring permanent happiness to the one and prosperity to the other is the use of a little vision and the application of common sense by giving men employment. We have learned in the last 10 years that low wages, part-time employment, and bad working conditions is bad business—that high wages, steady employment, and good working conditions is good business.

A NATIONAL POLICY—WHICH?

Now, we must learn to apply the same rule to our governmental affairs—that a tight-wad policy is a bad national policy; that expenditures in keeping with the national wealth and proper national income is a good national policy.

There is only barometer of business and that is the proportion of people actually engaged in gainful pursuits.

CURRENCY

We now pass to the consideration of the second cause of this somber period of unemployment, poverty, destitution, bankruptcy, and industrial ruin, of which we are still in the midst. I refer to the contraction of currency and credits.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF CONGRESS

It is necessary first to inquire what are the powers and duties of Congress in relation to money. Article I, section 8, clause 5, of the Constitution says, "The Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures." This is the stability clause of the Constitution. This is specific in itself, and the holdings of the Supreme Court in the several cases under this clause still further clarify the intent and powers actually conferred upon Congress. In United States v. Marigold (9 How. 568) it is held that this clause confers upon Congress the exclusive power to coin money and regulate its value. Other cases under this clause extend and add to this decision, justifying the uses of all the different kinds of money we have found it necessary or convenient to use. We have obeyed that part of this clause in relation to the coinage of money. We have provided that 23.22 grains of pure gold are the standard American dollar.

DOLLAR VALUE NOT REGULATED

But we have not regulated the value thereof as the Constitution empowers us to do. Therein lies the devastating failure of Congress in this absolutely vital matter. I appeal to my colleagues to remember that this is a part of our sworn duty. We talk about a standard. Now, what is a standard actually? A standard is an exact measure, one that does not vary. The fact is, therefore, we have no actual monetary standard of value. We have a name—dollar. The dollar contains 23.22 grains of pure gold. But it is no standard of value, because that gold dollar has fluctuated ever since it was adopted, just as the bimetallic standard of our own and other countries had fluctuated before that time and just as the silver standard has fluctuated wherever it has existed. No metallic standard has ever in itself constituted an actual unvarying standard of value.

Yet an actual unvarying monetary standard is the absolute requirement if we are to have business security and permanency of prosperity once it is reestablished.

I FAVOR THE GOLD STANDARD

I answer your question without your asking it. I favor maintaining the gold standard as a practical matter. It is not at all necessary to change it. If we use our great supply of gold wisely and patriotically it will not become necessary to change it.

But I am for regulating the value of our gold dollar. I am for carrying out that provision of the Constitution which empowers Congress to regulate the value of our money.

The reason, nay, the necessity, for that regulation lies in these basic facts: A man has a right to pay back his debt in exactly the same unit of value as that which he borrowed. If he pays his debt in a unit of less value than that which he borrowed, he cheats his creditor. If he is compelled to repay in a unit of higher value, his creditor cheats him. If the unit of value is the same, neither is cheated. A dollar that fluctuates in value is a dishonest dollar, because any fluctuation of value cheats either the debtor or creditor. I am not for a 50-cent dollar nor a hundred fifty cent dollar. Both are equally dishonest. The only honest dollar is the hundred-cent dollar. I am for an honest dollar. At the present time we have a hundred fifty cent dollar. It is a 50-cent dishonest dollar, because it compels the debtor to pay 50 per cent more than he borrowed. It is as dishonest for the creditor to want to collect a hundred fifty cents where he only loaned a hundred cents as it is for the debtor to want to pay only 50 cents where he borrowed a hundred cents.

FLUCTUATION OF THE DOLLAR

There has been much misunderstanding about the fluctuation of the value of our gold dollar.

This is the table issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, showing the fluctuation of one American gold dollar. It was based upon the wholesale price of 550 commodities. This number was increased to 783 on January 1, 1932.

This table, as you will see, is based on the commodity price index of 1926 as the 100-cent dollar. The fluctuations of our good American gold dollar have been worked out on this basis back to 1890 in this table, and up to and including December, 1931. This 1926, 100-cent dollar also is almost the exact average over a 15-year period, that of 1915–1929, both inclusive. And this is an important item to hold in mind. You will observe that following the panic of 1893 the gold dollar reached the value of 219.8 cents in June and an average of 215.1 cents for the year 1896. Then observe that the average value of the dollar for 1920 was 64.8 cents and for May of that year it was 59.8 cents.

Then you will observe that following the "deflation" of the farmer and panic on the New York Stock Exchange that in a 6-month period—September, 1920, to April, 1921—the dollar jumped from 64.4 cents to 101.1 cents, and with that increase came wreck and ruin. Notice again that some force held the dollar near the 100-cent level from 1923 up to and including 1929. Then following the panic of that year the dollar started up again and reached 150.8 cents for last December.

So having envisioned the tremendous fluctuation of our own American gold dollar from 219.8 cents in 1896 to 59.8 cents in a 14-year period we should be ready to observe with candor other fluctuations and to consider the reasons for and the effect of these changes in the value of the gold dollar on the economic changes of the country.

WORLD WAR BRINGS MONEY REVOLUTION

Let us pass to that most interesting and instructive period beginning in 1914 and extending to the present moment. The World War brought about as great a revolution in relation to money as in any other possible line. The students of the subject of money, currency, and credits here find a veritable storehouse of information, the like of which does not exist in any other period of history. True enough, there had been individual experiences and isolated cases paralleling many of those which we find in this prolific war period. But in those isolated cases there had been many conditions which offered room for different opinions and divergent conclusions. Thus it was that when the World War came on the economists of the world were not at all agreed as to the wise course to pursue, so that mistake after mistake was made, which, in the light of the full experiences of this World War period, seem utterly inexcusable. The national tragedies which resulted will for all time to come supply the student with invaluable material and the statesman with a source of such enlightenment as ought to prevent the recurrence of any of those devastating conditions which stunned mankind.

It is true in every instance in all these countries that business thrived and prices rose just as currency and credit increased.

It is perhaps sufficient to point out that whatever conditions had existed prior to, during, and following the war, whether the country had been forced off the gold standard or not, as most of them had, and whether the deflation was for the purpose of restoring the gold standard to pre-war values or not, that following the World War every country which deflated its currency where inflation had really taken place, or which contracted its currency where expansion of currency had occurred—every country following this course of decreasing the amount of currency went invariably into financial panic, with the universally resulting depression, unemployment, poverty, bankruptcy, and ruin to the business of that country. To this there is not a single exception. The efforts to deflate slowly were quite as tragic as those where deflation was carried out rapidly. Those where deflation was carried out only partially had the same proportionate difficulties till stabilization at some figure was finally effected. It should be noted that after considerable difficulty trying to deflate France stabilized her franc at 4 cents instead of 20 cents, as before the war. Since stabilization France has thrived greatly.

GERMAN INFLATION

German inflation, on the other hand, with its unlimited paper currency, led as certainly to tremendous business activity, increase in wages, and extraordinary increase in property prices as the amount of currency in actual circulation constantly increased. When the peak was finally reached, and no attempt was made to stabilize, the inevitable collapse came, and with it the same paralysis of business, unemployment, poverty, and bankruptcy occurred from inflation of currency which had resulted from a contraction or deflation of currency in so many other countries. The folly of both these courses, with the unnecessary and heartbreaking losses, is clearly shown by the action especially of two small countries, Finland and Belgium. Both immediately stabilized their currency where the war had left it, and not a sign of panic or depression has occurred in either country, though both had been sorely tried, one an old government, one a new government.

And now let us proceed to examine the action taken in our own country on this subject of currency.

PURPOSE OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

The primary purpose of the Federal reserve system was to prevent the fluctuation of the value of the dollar by keeping the supply of money adequate for that purpose. A section specifically providing for stabilization of the dollar when the bill was first written was very unfortunately rejected by this House. The tremendous flexibility of the emission of Federal reserve notes was wisely provided for. The intention was to provide a sufficient amount of currency to keep business at an unvarying level to give the people assurance against the very tragedy which mismanagement of that law brought to the country in 1921 and again in 1929. Because of the intent and possibilities of the Federal reserve system, the great banks of the country opposed that law viciously. But defeated in that they bided their time, and finally after that splendid system had carried us triumphantly through the World War the superbanks got control of the system apparently by convincing the Federal Reserve Board that following the example of the other countries of the world we too should deflate.

INFLATION AND EXPANSION DEFINED

It is necessary here to define inflation, deflation, expansion, and contraction. Expansion of currency is the legitimate increase of currency required to carry on business to the best advantage; inflation of currency, on the other hand, is the improper, abnormal, imprudent increase of currency.

CONTRACTION AND DEFLATION DEFINED

Contraction and deflation, of course, are the opposites of these two terms. It is very necessary to get the definition and understanding of expansion and inflation clearly in mind, because there has been so much misuse and misunderstanding of the words as to have completely muddled the entire matter in the minds of many. This seems to have been willfully done by those who desire to prevent public understanding of this simple matter.

A very great fear of inflation has been instilled into peoples' minds, so much so that the mere word "inflation" inspires timid souls with terror. No one ever tells them the plain fact that vastly greater damage has been inflicted on the producers of wealth by contraction of currency and credits than has ever been done by inflation.

Nobody ever seems to tell them that we never have had an inflation of national currency in America. That we have had the expansion of currency necessary to carry on business as it should be done only once, that during and immediately following the World War. And that the contraction of currency of 1920, when the farmers were "deflated," brought wreck and ruin in its track.

We can not, of course, deflate what has not been inflated. The expansion of currency and credits during the World War period was made very properly and very necessarily to meet the business conditions of that period. It therefore was not inflation at all. Nevertheless, immediately following the war the cry was sent up from every controller of large amounts of currency and credits to "deflate" what had not been inflated. What it really amounted to was the demand that their cheap war dollars should be converted into high-priced dollars; that is, that the value of their dollars should be increased.

We had expanded our currency and credits from necessity during the war to meet the conditions which required a large amount of currency and credits. The necessary result was that the large supply of currency and credits reduced the value of the dollar. This was brought about by three purely temporary conditions: First, 30,000,000 producers had been taken out of producing and put to destroying. This gave a fictitious value to every commodity.

Second, the countries of the world issued tremendous credits to pay for the supplies for the contending armies.

And, third, sent their agents to the United States to "Go get it."

These conditions necessarily decreased the value of the dollar in proportion to the increase in the number of the dollars. Under the stress of war business responded and adjusted itself to the new conditions, to the new dollar value. Business made money rapidly. The war was won on these cheap dollars. The war millionaires were cheap-dollar millionaires. Those who increased their already millions, as the great majority did vastly, increased their millions by adding other millions of cheap dollars.

This condition would have passed without difficulty if conditions had been permitted to adjust themselves. Because when the war ended what was left of 30,000,000 producers were turned from destruction back to production. The emission of great credits ceased. The orders of the agents to "Go get it" were canceled. These three conditions being the reverse of what had existed, the matter would have worked itself out beyond question of a doubt if it had been left alone.

During the war the farmers and stock raisers of the country had been powerfully solicited by the Government to borrow money to enable them to produce as much grain and livestock as possible. They were assured that the prices to be received for their livestock and grain would be such as to make it a matter of profit to the farmers to meet this great war need of the Government. The farmers had obeyed that call to duty. The military authorities expected the war to go a very much longer time than it did go. The result was that when the war ended suddenly the farmers found themselves in this position: They had gone in debt to meet the demands of Government for war. They were in possession of livestock and grain on a very large scale. The prices were high, the world was hungry and needed the food. If left alone, the farmers could easily have sold their livestock and grain at sufficient prices to have paid their debts without difficulty. The world was at work and could easily, and would willingly, have paid those prices for these farm products.

THE FARMERS ARE DEFLATED

However, this was not permitted to them. In August, 1920, the order went forth from the Federal Reserve Board that the farmers should be deflated. The banks which had made the loans were ordered to call on the farmers to pay their loans.

The livestock, therefore, was started for the market. It became evident very quickly that this would glut the livestock market completely and reduce the price so low that the farmers and stock raisers could not pay. Instead of admitting the mistake and cancelling the order to call these loans, as common sense dictated, it was considered sufficient to save the face of this big board by the means indicated in the following circumstance: At Belle Fourche, S. Dak., the stockmen, as they always did before, called on the station agent of the railroad to deliver stock cars on certain dates. The cattle for a distance of 50 miles around began coming in to Belle Fourche. The cars did not arrive. The stockmen "burnt the wires" calling for these cars. The cars still did not come, though there were plenty of cars available. But with more than a million dollars worth of cattle filling the pens, the lots, the stables, the surrounding fields of Belle Fourche, a blizzard came out of the Northwest and froze these poor dumb brutes and ruined the stockmen and small banks of that section. It afterwards leaked out that through some mysterious force the agency which had ordered the deflation had arranged secretly with the railroads not to deliver the cars.

EFFECT OF CURRENCY CONTRACTION

The ghastly effect of this contraction of currency was to break 6,000 banks, and in connection with the stock panic of 1921 to compel the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation to restore what business was left from the wreck.

Within two years from the order for deflating the farmer, the value of farms and stock farms had fallen from $79,000,000,000 to $58,000,000,000, a net loss to the farmers of America of nearly $21,000,000,000, in a period of two years. This was a ghastly price to pay for an unwarranted folly of the Federal Reserve Board in ordering the deflation of what had not been inflated. The farmers had hardly begun to recover from this terrible loss of 1921–21 when they were hit again with a still greater loss of another much more extensive and still more unwarranted contraction of currency and credits, through the stock gambling and resulting panic of 1929.

FARM VALUES FALL NEARLY 50 PER CENT

The total farm values at the present time have fallen from seventy-nine billion to less than forty billion. And what was the other result of this postwar contraction? It brought bankruptcy; it brought business failure; four and a half million men were thrown out of employment by this contraction of currency, and the total dislocation of credits brought about by the collapse of stock prices on the New York Stock Exchange. The general result of this deflation was to increase the price of the dollar from 60 cents in 1920 to 100 cents in 1923, and there the price of the dollar remained until 1929 with very slight variation.

METHODS OF CONTROLLING PRICE LEVELS

There are four principal methods or ways of controlling price levels; that is, of increasing or decreasing commodity prices or holding them at one level.

The first is by selling or buying securities—preferably, of course, Government securities.

To illustrate: Other things being equal, if the commodity price level is too low, and the Federal reserve banks begin buying bonds and paying out currency for the bonds, that currency will not be kept idle because it draws no interest. But it will at once seek investment. This creates a demand for property, for service, and ultimately for commodities of all kinds. The demand for commodities increases just as currency is expanded or put into actual circulation. When any desired price level is approached, the paying out of currency ceases and the increase in commodity prices soon stops.

On the other hand, if securities are sold by the governmental agencies, currency—or cash credits convertible into currency—comes in. The urge of investment in commodities slackens and the price falls in proportion to the drawing in or contraction of currency.

By varying these operations as required, a very close approximation to any desired commodity price level can be maintained—that is, the commodity price level is stabilized, held close to the desired average price for all commodities in common use.

The second powerful means for encouraging the carrying on of business is by the control of the interest rate. If the rate of interest is set at a low figure and liberal time allowances made, enterprising men very soon begin trying for ways to make higher returns on this borrowable money. This loaning of money to the banks through the Federal reserve banks, and through the banks to the people, is simply a means of expanding currency; that is, of getting money into actual circulation, which always increases commodity prices. On the other hand, the calling of loans outstanding at a low rate, and raising the rate of interest and shortening the time lessens the use of money in business and contracts the amount of currency in actual circulation, invariably reducing the commodity price levels. This interest charge is a tremendous weapon of offense or defense and should be used with very great precaution.

The third way to prevent expansion or to bring about contraction of currency is to limit the right of member banks of the Federal reserve system to the acceptance of other than such securities for loans as the Federal reserve system shall direct. Of course, the liberalization of rules in the acceptance of a wider range of securities will act in the opposite direction and tend to expand the use of currency. But this third way, while it may be a very effective way of controlling credits, is, in my judgment, fundamentally wrong. The general remonstrance of business and banks against this practice classes it at least as a way capable of very great abuse. It is not necessary at all, in my judgment, and should be discontinued.

The fourth way of affecting commodity prices is through psychological means, by propaganda calculated to stimulate or depress business, as may be desired. It is very often effective. A rumor may boost a stock, while another rumor is putting a bank broke. It is questionable because it is capable of such great abuse. It might never be necessary if the first two methods or ways are used intelligently and courageously.

If, on the other hand, publicity could be used, always intelligently and conservatively, by the Federal reserve system for the purpose of stabilization, it would be tremendously valuable. It is simply one of the ways that can be used.

IMPORTANCE OF STABILIZATION

The importance of stabilization on a fair basis can hardly be overestimated. An average or standard commodity price level has actually been established—that of 1926 as the 100 per cent. This is almost exactly the average over a 15-year period, as has already been pointed out. Actual stabilization would have automatically prevented any of the extreme fluctuations that have been so destructive to employment, to industry, to farming, to banking, and to small business everywhere. It is an interesting thing to calculate the economic saving that could have been or now can be made by this process of stabilization over any given period, and to compare this saving with all our attempts at saving through what we consider "economies in governmental expenditures." All the great farm organizations are entirely right in demanding a return to the 1926 wholesale commodity price level. If possible, they are still more justified in demanding stabilization of the dollar at that price level when it is reached. Unless that is done no farmer now in debt has a chance to pay out. If that is done, the farmers will, the next year, receive $5,100,000,000 more than they received in 1931 for their products.

But unless men are put to work we can not restore commodity price levels within a reasonable time. Because it is only possible to do so by restoring the purchasing power of the people equal to that which automatically established that price level originally.

PEOPLE NOW PAY 50 PER CENT MORE INTEREST

The total indebtedness of every kind in the United States is about $200,000,000,000. The average rate of interest is around 5 per cent. In short, the American people are paying out $10,000,000,000 in interest on borrowed capital every year. The tremendous importance of this fact lies just here. At present our gold dollar is worth a hundred and fifty cents, instead of 100 cents. The result is that we are actually paying out 50 per cent more interest than we appear to be paying. That is, we are paying $10,000,000,000—each worth a hundred and fifty cents—or actually $15,000,000,000 a year. This is "the nigger in the wood pile" of this 50 per cent increase of the dollar in the last two years. If the powers which are to profit most by this 150-cent dollar shall now resist the return to the 100-cent dollar of 1926, we shall be justified in suspecting that the increase in the dollar was not accidental but was a conspiracy on the part of big business to pile an additional $5,000,000,000 of interest onto the people by this means, thinking the people will be too dumb to understand.

The fact that prices increased with the increase of money in actual circulation was well understood and commented on following the bringing into Spain, and from Spain to the balance of Europe, of the large amounts of silver and gold from Mexico and Peru. The low prices resulting from a shortage of coin was constantly experienced and equally well understood.

As the business of the world began to be carried on on borrowed capital, that is, as soon as debts were contracted for carrying on of business, the necessity for keeping these debts on an even keel compelled the study of the question of supply and demand of money and its relation to debts.

Little by little the fact that the fluctuation of values was actually in the money and not in the commodities began to take form. The idea of the existence of a commodity price level was first put into simple form about 1750 by an Italian named Carli. The idea grew among the thinkers and writers.

When the wage system came into being along with labor-saving machinery, the unemployment, the poverty, and destitution which always resulted from violent fluctuations of commodity prices, from whatever cause arising, were noted and commented on by all the writers of the period of the industrial revolution in England.

A commodity price index as the basis for calculating the value of money developed slowly but surely. A fair understanding of the idea and a practical application of it began taking place about 130 years ago. Since that time the fact that money varies in value and that the price of commodities depends on the supply of money has grown constantly. For 50 years there has been a general and constantly growing acceptance of that idea among the economists of the world, and the statistics slowly accumulating and tediously gathered from industry have abundantly proven that fact. At the present time all the important countries of the world fully accept that view and have their own commodity price indices. All scholars understand perfectly that the amounts of currency may be varied in such a way as to maintain a given average price for the commodity price index. They accept the corollary that if that is done that the currency by that method is being held at one regular value, or is stabilized. Then there follows the clear understanding that if that price level is constantly maintained that money or dollar value will not vary. So that if a man borrows a dollar he will be permitted to repay in a dollar of the same value.

COMMODITY INDEX A STANDARD

It is from this long experience that our own very exact and excellent commodity price index has been developed. There can be no question of its correctness. It is accepted as the standard by all scholars and governments all over the civilized world. Our price index, from which the value of the dollar is constantly calculated, is made from the principal commodities in the simpler forms men constantly use. There are 550 articles listed in this price index. The new commodity price index which went into effect on January 1 is made up of 783 articles, the addition being largely from the manufactured forms of the 550 commodities making up the former price index. The result indicates a slightly lower dollar value. They include everything used by men to a sufficient extent to find continuous sale in the wholesale markets. Each article is given its proportion in making these calculations in accordance with its relative use. Because the commodities making up this list constitute the chief commodities which men constantly use to any extent—other things being equal—the average or index price will vary but slightly. It is for this reason the best standard for economic uses yet arrived at. All other civilized governments are using their own commodity price index for the same purpose that we are. Other things being equal, the individual articles making up the list may and do vary sometimes widely in price without any marked variation in the average price. Because when one or a few articles for any reason go down in price some other one or more will go up in price, so they constantly operate to keep the average very near to one level.

If dollars are supplied in sufficient quantity to maintain a constant average price for all these commodities at some unvarying figure over a sufficient period of time, all other articles of ownership—stocks, bonds, real estate—if unaffected by outside means, will tend also to take on a price level commensurate with this commodity price level, individual articles varying always, but the average remaining largely the same, just as in the commodity price index. Men only starve for food, where business starves for money. Let us note the facts as shown by experience. No theories are necessary.

Every time our dollar increases in value we have hard times, unemployment, poverty, and bankruptcy just in proportion to that increase of value. Every time our dollar decreases in value we have good times—increased employment, business success. And that continues to increase as long as the dollar continues to decrease in value. Other things being equal, it has always resulted that way in our country, as well as in every other country. There is a place where the decrease of the dollar value must end to prevent the disaster of inflation, as German experience so dramatically warns us. There is a place also where the increase of the dollar value must cease if we are to prevent the financial destruction which the contraction of currency always brings. As long as the dollar value varies there can be no security in business, because there is no stability. Business can not stand great fluctuation in prices. The experience immediately following the war was tragic in the losses of nearly every new business established during that period of high prices and cheap dollars. Then the dollar was shot up in value through the withdrawal from circulation of a billion and a half dollars in currency and six billion in credits in a 2-year period. The sudden drop in prices ruined these new high-priced shops and the high-priced materials for use in them.

HOARDING MONEY

Hoarding is the taking money out of general use. It is the most effective means of contracting currency and credits.

There is now said to be in circulation $5,100,000,000. That is, there are that many dollars somewhere in the United States or elsewhere, not in the Treasury or Federal reserve banks.

Where is this money? Is it turning over rapidly, carrying on the exchange of commodities? That is what money is for. But perfectly clearly a large part of it is not being used for that purpose. Of this five billion one hundred million that is supposed to be actually in circulation there is apparently no less than two billion that has been withdrawn from circulation and put into safety-deposit boxes or hidden away for sake of having it when needed.

More than a quarter of a billion has been withdrawn from the banks since December 20. Another two hundred and fifty million is tied up in failed banks. There is a very large amount of our American money in Latin America, in Europe, and in Asia, because it is everywhere preferred to bank drafts and commercial exchange. The total actually out of use in the United States is certainly as much as one-half of the total amount alleged to be in circulation.

Of that remaining half, another large part is practically hoarded because the great majority of the banks all over the country are not loaning any considerable proportion of what they do in prosperous times. The effect on business of this failure to loan is the same as if this were also put in safety boxes and locked up.

CAUSE OF HOARDING MONEY

There is one principal cause of hoarding money; that is, the fear that it will not be available when needed. This fear does not exist without good reason. Lack of confidence has developed through lack of safety, through actual insecurity, through the terrible losses to millions of depositors, through the failure of 3,700 banks since November 1, 1929. This record of losses from bank failures abundantly justifies the present fear, the resultant lack of confidence. Business is going to ruin and people are starving purely for lack of money for carrying on business. It is worse than childish to wonder at the present lack of confidence or to blame the people for their fears. The shame is that this Government standing idly by should have permitted these thousands of bank failures. It was not necessary; it was inexcusable. We can only remove that fear when we remove the cause of the fear. We can only restore confidence when we restore actual security, which is the only just basis of confidence.

To do that, the very first necessity, the absolute requirement, without which there can only be continued disaster, is the providing and keeping always available a sufficient supply of money, whatever that amount may be, to give the people the certain knowledge that they can always have money to carry on business as it ought to be and can be carried on. As a part of this plan it ought clearly to be recognized that it is absolutely necessary for government to provide adequate means for safeguarding the bank deposits of the people as a matter of national security. We insure everything else under the sum with great good sense. We can, beyond question, also insure the people against loss when they deposit their money in the banks. The failure of a few States in attempting to safeguard the depositors of their State banks has furnished us with the experience necessary to assure success to the National Government in providing security to bank depositors.

The fact is, people are not going again to deposit their money in banks with the freedom and continuity which our credit stream requires unless they are guaranteed against loss. National security and safe banking both require this insurance. The business can well afford to pay the cost. This is too vital a matter to be treated superficially. Let us go to the root of the whole matter like statesmen and correct it all, and hoarding will soon be forgotten, a thing of the past.

CONCENTRATION OF WEALTH—WORLD-WIDE DEPRESSION? NO

The claim is made and widely heralded to the Nation that there is a world-wide depression that grips all nations and that we are merely a part of that depression with no fault of our own. Let us examine this claim, because if it is true, then we face the task of curing a world and not a Nation. Unemployment is the one inevitable result and final proof of depression. There is never any depression where the great majority of men are at work. There is always depression where large numbers are idle. The very first result of depression is unemployment.

Let us hold in mind that Europe and America together carry on 90 per cent of the world's business. If depression is world-wide, it must include all the principal countries of Europe. If it does not include all the principal countries of Europe, then it is not and can not be a world-wide depression at all.

Let us see. Let us first name the countries that have unemployment. The only two large and important countries in Europe that are suffering from depression as indicated by large numbers in enforced idleness are Great Britain and Germany. In addition to these two large countries there are to be added the small and economically comparatively unimportant countries of Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, old Austria, Poland, Rumania, and Greece, all of which are experiencing more or less difficulty, all of which have some unemployment as a result. But all of these small countries taken together do not do 2 per cent of the business of the world.

Now, what of the other countries of Europe?

France, with 40,000,000 people, and her vast colonies, the richest country in Europe, has no unemployment. Russia, with her 150,000,000, has not an idle or hungry man or woman in all her wide borders. The same is true of Finland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland. There is no unemployment in Italy because the Italian Government has known enough to put men to work making needed permanent governmental improvements. What little unemployment Italy has had Premier Mussolini charges was due to our American panic, and he points to dates and facts as proof of his contention. These countries do much more than half of the business of Europe. There is no depression in any of this long list of important countries. There is, therefore, no world-wide depression at all. It is purely and simply a political alibi to get away from the responsibility for these awful conditions.

PANIC NOT DUE TO WORLD WAR

The next very general claim is that this panic and depression is the result of the war. Let us see. We had a panic in 1920–21. That was charged to the war. But this panic came almost 11 years after war had closed. Between the end of the panic of 1920–21 and the panic of 1929 we had seven years of actual prosperity along most all lines and increased our national wealth and annual national income tremendously. The Congress of the United States in 1921 reduced the income taxes—the war taxes, as they were called by the men who voted the reduction—because the war was over. In 1924 the Congress again reduced the income taxes, giving as its reason that that reduction represented a fair peace-time rate. In 1926 the Congress again reduced the income taxes and emaciated the inheritance and gift taxes almost to the point of destruction. The reason assigned was that that action would recall into useful industry the $14,000,000,000 already tied up in supposed tax-proof securities. Since that time the amount invested in these supposed tax-proof securities has more than doubled. In 1928 the Congress again reduced the income tax, because, foorsooth, we had too much money in the Treasury. On December 14, 1929, in the midst of tumbling prices, panic, and ruin, with 3,000,000 men already out or facing immediate unemployment, the Congress again reduced the income tax, and it remitted a full year's taxes already due (as they had done at every other previous reduction).

This gift was supposedly $160,000,000—ninety millions to the corporations and seventy millions to the individual income-tax payers. It turned out to be a much larger amount. This reduction was made for psychological reasons, again because the Government did not need the money. Too low a tax rate is as bad as too high a tax rate. The first denies the growth which the best interest of the people requires; the second confiscates the money which should go into savings for investment. All reductions were made in the full conviction that the war was over, that prosperity was permanent, that there was no danger of a relapse. Such reductions and remissions of taxes already due are unthinkable if the influence of war still affected or was at all likely to affect the prosperity of the country.

But these statements by no means justified the action of Congress in the reductions and remissions of income taxes that were made. That was, as a whole, a withering mistake. If the very moderate rate of 1924 had been retained and the technologically unemployed had been put to work with that surplus making permanent national improvements as fast as these men lost their jobs, there need not have been an idle man in America.

OUR PANIC—OUR DEPRESSION

No! No! There is no world-wide depression. This depression is not due to the war.

This is our panic. This is our depression. We made them both ourselves. They did not come through accident. Eight million men in enforced idleness can only result from definite causes, capable of clear ascertainment. This terrible panic and the resulting ominous depression came for the very same reasons, resulted from the very same basic causes which produced the panics and depressions of 1921, 1907, 1893, of 1873.

PANICS ARE PREVENTABLE

They were all preventable, every one of them. But the sinister import of this whole matter lies in the fact that the causes of panics have been so well studied by the interests which have profited by them in the past that they know how and why panics come, if not actually how to induce them at will. At each succeeding panic they are enabled the more thoroughly to profit as a result of these repeated experiences.

On the contrary, the misfortune of the American people lies in the other most significant opposing fact that our Government has done nothing to learn why and how panics come and has made no move at all to prevent the recurrence of panics. This is an inexcusable failure of Government.

ONLY ONE CONGRESSIONAL ATTEMPT TO FIND CAUSE

In all our congressional history I find only one serious attempt to inquire into the causes of panics and the part which the stock exchanges play in creating them. The Pujo committee of this House carried on an investigation with great intelligence, 1912–13. It did not have the power nor authority which it ought to have been granted. Yet, if the report which it brought in had been acted upon, we would not have had either the panic of 1921 nor the panic of 1929. And if the committee appointed in 1926 had fought for and compelled the stabilization of the dollar on the commodity price index of 1926 there would have been no depression to-day. If the income tax of 1924 had been retained, as it ought to have been, and the technological unemployment had been met as it arose, there would not to-day be an idle man in America. It is the failure of government that has permitted unemployment, contraction of currency, and the desolation of nation-wide robbery in the name of speculation.

THE COMING OF THE PANIC

If we trace the coming of the panic of 1929, we shall understand how all the rest have come about, because the main points will closely coincide. Prosperity came as soon as men were put to work after 1922. The value of the dollar was in effect largely stabilized by the Federal reserve system, whether consciously or unconsciously we can not say, from 1923 to 1929, inclusive. The result was that business flowed along very securely and very successfully, as it always does under stabilized standard of values. This tremendously profitable stabilization of the dollar was permitted to lapse with the coming of the peak of the major bull movement on the New York Stock Exchange and the dollar started precipitately upward when the crash came on that market. In the 27 months since that stock crash the dollar has increased exactly 47 cents, or nearly 2 per cent a month.

Our dollar, which remained at 100 cents for our 7-year period of prosperity and security, in the last two years has contributed largely to the poverty and chaos by its 47-cent increase in value.

The period from 1923 to 1929, both inclusive, was a period of very general prosperity. Outside of the building or buying of houses, automobiles, and many articles of service or luxury which they could never afford before, people had saved unheard-of amounts out of their earnings. These savings had as a rule been invested along the lines of ordinary conservatism—loans to business and mortgage loans. Many had intrusted the investing of their savings to their local bankers. That meant bonds and mortgages and current loans to local business at the ordinary rates of interest. This class of investment reached into every nook and corner of the country. The amount saved in this 7-year period by the 40,000,000 people occupied in all lines of gainful pursuits ran into many billions of dollars—very many billions. This stimulated enterprise and interest in investments and money making along many lines and among many more millions of people than ever before. There were many combinations of companies already in existence and many new ones were formed on the expectation of getting part of the country's savings invested along these new lines. The favorite method was to list the stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, encourage speculation, and start the price upward.

BANK AFFILIATES

Several powerful banks and banking houses of high standing and reputation, in New York especially, either already had or soon formed affiliates; that is, actual stock-selling companies owned or controlled by the same directors as the banks, though not legally connected with them. These affiliates, dealing on the reputation and good name of the banks and using the names and reputations of those banks whose officers generally owned them, sent out several thousand high-powered salesmen into every section of America.

These salesmen sought out everyone who had money or investments in every community in America. These salesmen pointed out that these stocks, as a rule, were listed on the New York Stock Exchange and could always be converted into ready cash at a higher price than they were selling at. They showed that over a long period the prices of stocks had, on the average, gone up steadily. These thousands of high-powered salesmen talked to millions of people about stocks and the extraordinary profits being made constantly. A propaganda of nation-wide extent and peculiar appealing power to the ordinary man's imagination was carried on everywhere. The leading newspapers of the country were induced by the tremendous interest aroused to devote from 10 to 30 per cent of their entire space to the stock markets. The advertising value of this space repeated day after day is almost beyond calculation. The psychological effect on the minds of men was tremendous. The two to three million originally investing or speculating grew by leaps and bounds, until at the peak of the market, on September 5, 1929, 17,000,000 men and women in America had invested their savings in outright purchases of stocks for good cash money or had "bought stocks on margin"—that is, purely for speculation—on the New York Stock Exchange. A constantly increasing horde speculated; that is, gambled in stocks.

These same famous banks, through these same affiliates, themselves put out new stock issues, so little justified as to amount to little less than plain thievery. The bonds of foreign countries of questionable ability to pay were eagerly sought by these affiliates. In one case a relative of one of the officials received a plain bribe of nearly half a million dollars for granting to one of these organizations the privilege of selling one of these foreign bond issues to the American people.

Most of these sales by salesmen were outright purchases and had some percentage of actual value as a rule, often amounting, however, as experience proved, to only a few cents on the dollar. But the amount of money taken out of the usual local investments in this manner in the aggregate was very great.

MARGIN BUYING

But the greatest injury came from the buying "on margin," that is, gambling on the rise or fall of stocks. This required the withdrawal of the cash resources of the speculators from local uses and resulted almost invariably in complete loss. And it came out of every community however small, and from one end of America to the other. Several million new "operators" were induced to gamble. These were quite incapable as a rule of competing with the men who literally controlled the market and manipulated it to suit themselves. The mania increased. The small banks all over the country, and the larger banks only to a less extent, were drained of cash to send to New York for gambling in stocks.

The margin required by the brokers was constantly increased so that when the peak was reached the margins required were 50 and 60 per cent of the price of the stock purchased. This fact should be clearly noted. As the mania spread the dealings were so large that the New York banks could by no means supply the tremendous brokers' loans required to carry the market.

The interest rates on call loans began going up, and this being a perfectly safe loan, the high interest rates began attracting more and more money from all over the United States, taking it increasingly away from the regular legitimate business of the country, and sending it to New York to be used for purposes of speculation. The interest rates constantly rose and called more and more money away from the business which had depended on this money, and which could not carry on without it. And legitimate business could not possibly pay 10, 15, and finally 20 per cent interest—which money was bringing in New York on call—and survive.

LEGITIMATE BUSINESS SUFFERS

The result was that the legitimate business of the country suffered sharply and unemployment began to result perceptibly in the spring and early summer of 1929. This unemployment increased markedly as the summer and fall wore on.

The Federal Reserve Board, after limiting the securities which member banks might accept, itself began raising interest rates, ostensibly to discourage speculation, it being one of the old and senseless fallacies that high interest rates tend to curb speculation on the stock market. The fact is and always has been that the winnings in stock gambling are often so large in proportion to the amount risked, and are always expected or hoped for, that the interest rates cut no figure. (This fact had been fully dealt with in the book by Owen and Hardy and published to the world in 1925. The Federal Reserve Board did not seem to know either the fact or the book.)

But it is equally true that increased interest rates always limits business and, if carried far enough, finally destroys it. And that is the very thing our Federal Reserve Board helped to bring about.

The full extent to which capital had been withdrawn from the business of the country may never be known. But at the peak of the boom $8,600,000,000 in brokers' loans, carrying these stocks bought on margin, was outstanding on the New York Stock Exchange alone. Facing this was the margins put up by speculators at the time of purchase of the stock—much of it a 50 to 60 per cent margin, be it remembered—a total amount probably approximately equal to the brokers' loans on call money.

SEVENTEEN BILLION CASH CREDITS CONCENTRATED

This $17,000,000,000 in margins and call loans combined is by no means all that was engaged in stock gambling in New York. There are always very large amounts loaned privately and never reported. There are several other smaller stock exchanges to be accounted for. There are vast interests requiring no loans. It is probable that no less than twenty-two billions of bank credits, ordinarily available for and used in ordinary business, were taken away from business and used in stock gambling on the stock markets in 1929. The total bank credits available for that year for all business was $55,000,000,000. When 40 per cent of the total amount of cash and cash credits upon which business necessarily feeds and exists is withdrawn from business any schoolboy will be able to understand what was the inevitable result of such tremendous withdrawals. The deluge was impending. It only required two things—the calling of these brokers' loans to compel the selling of the stocks held on margin, and that sabotage of finance known as selling short—to sweep the business of the whole country into the abyss. Both occurred. Loans were called in tremendous amounts. There was no hope or expectation of these call loans being paid; the certainty was that the holder of stocks on margin would be sold out. Three and a half billions of these loans were called the first 30 days. No financial system so far invented could withstand such a strain. The bulls had suddenly turned bears, and with the hammer of Thor they smashed the very prices they had so assiduously built up and unloaded on "the innocents." The profits to the controllers and manipulators of the New York Stock Exchange during the nation-wide major bull market of long duration were enormous. To these same controllers and manipulators in the terrible ensuing crash the profits were appalling.

Ninety-nine out of each hundred who speculated only knew how to make money through buying at one price and selling at a higher price. They were "the innocents." The other 1 per cent knew as well how to make money on a falling as on a rising market.

If by any means the gambling in stocks could be limited in its effects to the individuals directly engaged in it, we might only be under the same obligation to declare the agencies carrying it on "national gambling institutions," and provide the law necessary for their abatement, as we did in the Louisiana State lottery.

But that is not at all possible for this reason: Out of the savings of some years by the whole American people the controllers of currency and credits, the controllers of the New York Stock Exchange for a purpose, gained for themselves approximately $13,000,000,000 as the total net result of the major bull movement culminating in the major bear movement in the stock crash on the New York Stock Exchange following October 24, 1929. The loss to the several million "innocents" actually engaged in stock gambling was, therefore, $13,000,000,000. But the loss to the other 120,000,000 people who had no hand in the gambling, who had no fault in the whole matter, lost the staggering sum of not less than fifteen times as much as those who did gamble, and from which only a few actually profited.

THE CONCENTRATION OF WEALTH

The extent to which the concentration of wealth into the hands of the few has already taken place and the rapidity with which that operation is constantly progressing seems to be but little understood. The significance of it is but little appreciated.

Yet in a report to the Senate in 1926 the Federal Trade Commission shows that at that time 1 per cent of the people owned 60 per cent of the national wealth; that the 99 per cent of the people owned the remaining 40 per cent of the national wealth. It shows further that of this 40 per cent of the national wealth, 22 per cent of the people own 35 per cent out of the 40, and the remaining 77 per cent of all the people of America owned the remaining 5 per cent of the national wealth.

This concentration of wealth here set out was for the prosperous year of 1926. The great major bull movement culminating in the stock panic of 1929 resulted in the greatest concentration of wealth of any other 10-year period in the history of the world. What the proportion is to-day no man knows. But that the 1 per cent of the people now own largely more than 60 per cent of the national wealth and the 77 per cent of the people now own much less than 5 per cent of the national wealth there can be no reasonable doubt.

The same year that 7,000,000 men were in enforced idleness with no income at all, 504 individuals reported a net income of $1,185,000,000.

COSTS OF PANICS

Let us recall that we had no difficulty in meeting our costs of government, nor meeting our payments of the costs of war, till the panic of 1929 swept us into financial chaos.

We are not suffering from the costs of war. We are not suffering from the costs of government. We are suffering from the costs of our panics. The shrinkage in prices resulting from the panic of 1929 in the 2-year period has cost the United States alone more money than the war of 1914 to 1919 cost all the countries of the world engaged in it combined. The total direct cost of the World War for all countries combined was $186,000,000,000. The shrinkage in prices which have already resulted from the panic of 1929 has passed the $200,000,000,000 mark. We have in this same 2-year period irretrievably lost in national income more than double our total direct cost of the World War. Our national income fell from $90,000,000,000 in 1929 to $70,000,000,000 in 1930 and to $60,000,000,000 in 1931. In wages alone we have lost more than $24,000,000,000 in this 2-year period. The total irretrievable loss for the year 1930 was $20,000,000,000; in 1931 the total irretrievable loss was $30,000,000,000.

The question I put to you gentlemen is this: Supposing it does cost $5,000,000,000 per year to put all our men to work and five billions more each year to keep them at work, which is the better economy, to spend that five billion and stop the $30,000,000,000 annual loss or to leave them idle and go on accepting the loss of $30,000,000,000 and more every year, for it will increase if we do not go to work.

BUDGET CAN NOT BE BALANCED WHILE MEN ARE IDLE

There is no department in this Government, there is no committee in this Congress which can show any method of even balancing our Budget within the next three years or five years without putting our idle men to work creating wealth. The answer to the whole thing is that we must create wealth before we can pay our debts. If we make employment universal our income will reach $100,000,000,000 a year. At the present time our total indebtedness, including currency charged as a part of our indebtedness is $17,000,000,000. To this must be added the two billion already voted for reconstruction of finance. To that must be added one billion more for the deficit already existing, a total of twenty billions. Now, if we add to that amount $5,000,000,000 of prosperity bonds, assuring universal employment over a period of two years, we will owe a total of $25,000,000,000. That is about 6¼ per cent of our national wealth before the panic struck us. No man would consider it bad business to put that proportion of a mortgage on his property if it enabled him to succeed in business. A wise government will not hesitate to put 6¼ per cent, or 10 per cent, for that matter, if it takes us certainly out of this depression with its tremendous continuous losses. If we put our indebtedness up to $25,000,000,000 there is no need to worry about it, because we earned $30,000,000,000 every four months when we were 85 per cent at work in 1929.

IN DEBT BEFORE

Let us see whether we have ever before been so deeply in debt in proportion to our national wealth as we would be if we should issue $5,000,000,000 of prosperity bonds. Let us see. At the close of the Civil War our national wealth amounted to approximately $20,000,000,000. Our total indebtedness was $2,775,000,000; that is to say, we owed 13.37 per cent of our total national wealth. With $25,000,000,000 of indebtedness now, we would owe a little less than half of that proportion, or 6¼ per cent of our national wealth. We ought to see that it is not the amount of indebtedness that is the important factor. It is the relation which the debt bears to the national earning capacity. Billions or millions is not the question. If we are earning—that is, creating wealth—in billions we can pay billions just as easily as we can pay millions when we are only earning millions. And our ability to produce wealth has increased fivefold on the average, man for man, since the Civil War period when we owed 13.37 per cent of our national wealth.

Our difficulty is that we go into mental panic over a few million or a few billion dollars. We are being told that penury is economy. It is not. This is a $500,000,000,000 country when we were all at work. It is only a $200,000,000,000 country now because we are idle. When we were 85 per cent at work in 1928 and 1929 our national income was $90,000,000,000 a year. If we put 95 per cent of our able-bodied men and women at work our national income will pass the hundred billion a year mark. And that is not more than a normal percentage of employment in a young, undeveloped country like this.

It is true we are in the midst of a great emergency. But we are not defeatists. True enough the emergency is greater than that which we faced at any time during the World War. It is therefore a war condition we are facing. War measures are necessary to meet it. If we restore the full war taxes at the highest period, it will not be too much. To that rate should be added a minimum tax of $50 on all jobs paying $2,000 or more, and then increase that rate as the incomes increase. That would be the best possible insurance for keeping jobs. The security afforded would abundantly repay the cost. And let me repeat to you, it is jobs we must provide, and permanency of jobs we must guarantee. Even that rate would not be sufficient to meet the requirements because incomes depend on prosperity, and with the present low production of wealth we could not get enough to balance the Budget in three years or four years unless men are put to work. But if and when the rich people of this country willingly accept the full war-time rate of taxation on incomes and inheritances and gifts you will, under that condition, find the laboring men and farmers of America willing to accept a sales tax sufficient to carry the balance. I doubt whether any man in this body will accept the principle of a sales tax with greater regret than I do. But "It is a condition, not a theory, which confronts us." This condition, as I have pointed out, is the result of misgovernment. The way to correct that is as open to one party as it is to another, and to the men of one party as it is to the men of another. We must accept conditions as we find them. We must cure this condition by whatever means we find necessary. A half-hearted, halfway policy only sufficient to balance the Budget would be fatal. It would only drive us farther into helplessness.

Any policy which fails to provide means to put all our idle men to work would lead us inevitably into disaster.

We must face these facts. We must consider men and women and children. We must know that we can not provide for a balanced Budget except by providing a balanced ration.

If we say honestly and frankly to our people that these charges are necessary, the patient, long-suffering, patriotic people of this country will march with us and cheer us on and trust to better days.

THE SALES TAX

If the men who labor and have jobs know that 2 per cent or 3 per cent, for that matter, of their income will assure jobs to their idle buddies—2 per cent on everything they use, mind you—not a one will deny them. If the idle men of America are shown, as we can and must show them, that only by putting a tax of 2 per cent on all they use can we assure them work they will take the jobs with a cheer. It will cost the wage earners a half billion dollars, but it will increase their present income by twelve billions a year. What man who labors will object to that change? If the farmer, now able to pay almost nothing, has the assurance which universal employment would bring, that the 1926 price level is to be restored and the dollar stabilized at that point, all his produce will meet with a ready sale at a fair price. A 2 per cent universal sales tax would cost the farmer a quarter of a billion dollars a year. But he will not hesitate to accept the 2 per cent, much as he dislikes sales taxes, because it would increase his gross income $5,100,000,000 each year. That would give the farmers of the country four billion eight hundred million net more than they had last year, an average of $800 for every family now on the farm. Do you think any farmer would object to that under present conditions?

TARIFF ON OIL

Let us grant a tariff on oil for the benefit of American producers and then put a 3 cent national tax on gasoline—not 1 cent, not 2, no less than 3. That would bring us half a billion a year. These three sources will balance our Budget the first six months. By the time the increased income, inheritance, and gift taxes are effective, always a year off, the incomes will have increased so largely that these three sources of taxation at that time will balance the Budget, provide from there on out $5,000,000,000 a year to keep men at work, making permanent improvements for the Government, and in a 10-year period pay off every dollar of our indebtedness if we should desire to do that. When the emergency is passed, we may then stop and argue about the injustice of a sales tax, the injustice of high rates of income taxes, if they are unjust; but in the meantime, if under such taxation we put every man to work, and keep them at work, it is not only the greatest service we can render our country at the present time but it is the only way out of our present condition.

We must put aside all theories which apply to ordinary times. No precedent applies. No action which we find it necessary to take need establish any precedent for the future. This is a geat national emergency. We must meet it the best we can with the means we have at hand. The people who are suffering will understand this necessity every time and justify our acts if we have courage to meet these conditions as we must.

This is a matter of putting men to work. This is a matter of providing jobs. Unless we do that, we fail utterly.

THE UNCOUNTABLE COST OF PANICS

Then, there is another loss that never can be estimated, never can be expressed in dollars, however many billions we may use in the attempt. It is the loss of human enterprise, the sense of human waste, the lessening of abiding faith in our Government, the eternal question mark that must hereafter be put by every man who considers investment, the sense of insecurity of the man and woman whose hearts' desire homes and children, the question that every father and mother of children already in being as to whether they may be able to bring up and educate those children as they ought to be educated, what will be the effect of partial starvation of some millions of children—what price will they pay, and what price will society in afterlife pay for them.

These are some of the losses utterly beyond calculation—beyond estimation—losses that touch the souls of men and bring the deformities of civilization that are to mark future centuries.

There is another loss, vast, incalculable, which will not be put off to future time but which will follow us and dog our footsteps till we answer the riddle it propounds. That loss is expressed in the profound questioning of our Government and the system upon which it is founded and upon which our Nation has grown up.

Taken as a whole, the American people have never heretofore faltered in their faith in our Government, or the capitalistic system underlying it.

But under present conditions it is equally certain that as a whole, among all the men and women of America taken together, the question is being asked and discussed whether that faith has been well founded; whether a system that permits unemployment, bankruptcy, and poverty on a nation-wide scale in the richest country in the world is worth saving; whether some other system may not be found that will prevent such catastrophes. Those questions are in the minds of the American people on every farm, in every hamlet, village, and city in America to-day.

They are considering the questions sanely and patriotically, with every doubt resolved in favor of their country and its institutions.

They are reserving judgment where the evidence is not clear and complete.

But of certain facts the people have taken cognizance and can not and will not be shaken in their decisions. They know that big business, a comparatively few men with similar interests, working purely selfishly, have for years past been in control of industry through control of government. They know from hard experience this terrible condition, existing and becoming constantly more difficult since October, 1929. They know that big business did not prevent this misfortune. They know that the interests in control could or could not have prevented this cataclysm. If they could not have prevented it, they are weak and unworthy of leadership; if they could have prevented it and did not, they are criminal. That in either case control of industry must be taken from big business for all time to come. They are not only ready but demanding that the officials whom their votes elected shall step in and accept the duty and responsibility of restoring prosperity and guaranteeing its permanency. They will accept nothing short of that. And they ought not to.

I hear repeated within this body two statements which I must not overlook.

One is, "We can not borrow ourselves rich."

Now, the fact is that is exactly what is done by ninety-nine men out of every hundred who ever get rich, and every one of us who stops for a moment to think, knows that. I doubt whether there is a man in this body who ever made any considerable amount of money except on borrowed capital. That is exactly the way most men have got rich, by borrowing enough money—not half enough, mind you, but enough money—to do business on properly and by putting other men to work making money for them. It is nonsense to limit ourselves with such fallacies. Every wise business man and every wise government borrow money wherever it is thought that they will be better off by borrowing than they will be by not borrowing. It is a matter of common sense, and no other means will solve this problem.

The next one is this, repeated with even greater gravity and, if possible, folly: "The power to tax is the power to destroy." I answer back, "The power to tax is the power to employ."

We can not be timid souls and serve our country in times like these.

We must look the facts straight in the face, keep our feet firmly on the ground, know that God is guiding us, that this is America, and go straight ahead.

70-YEAR PERIOD

It is now 65 years since the close of the Civil War. During this time labor-saving machinery has progressively improved and enormously increased its field of usefulness. Wealth has increased as our power to produce has increased. Our national wealth at the close of the Civil War was $20,000,000,000. Our population at the close of the Civil War was around 30,000,000 people. In 1929 our national wealth was $400,000,000,000 and our population 125,000,000 people. Our power to produce wealth as a nation has increased twentyfold in that period, and our population has increased fourfold, so that, man for man, our ability to produce wealth has increased fivefold during this same period.

If we extend this to a 70-year period, ending in 1936, and calculate that our present depression shall end and all its wounds be healed by that time we can make a fair estimate of the effects of the panics of those years.

During that 70-year period we have submitted to five major panics—those of 1873, 1893, 1907, 1921, and 1929. Each panic was invariably succeeded by industrial depression, unemployment, bankruptcy, poverty, and destitution.

The panic of 1873 and its resulting depression required seven years for economic recovery.

That of 1893 required seven years.

That of 1907 required two and a half years.

That of 1921 required two and a half years.

That of 1929, the most severe of all, will require no less than a 7-year period for recovery.

In short, out of the 70-year period we must count that we have spent a total of 26 years recovering from our major panics and their inevitable resulting depressions. If we count that only 40 per cent of this 26-year period has been lost to progress and normal growth—and that is far too low—if we disregard entirely the minor panics of this same period, if we eliminate the endless human suffering and misfortune of those years, and place it all purely on an economic basis, what does that statement mean? It means that full 10 years has been taken out of the lives of all our people and cast into the bottomless pit of wasted toil. It means that throughout that whole 70-year period the producers of all our wealth will have bent their backs one day out of every seven to repay the terrible losses resulting from panics and depressions which they had no part in making. If we are willing to face the apalling total of that economic loss, we may get some idea of what our panics mean. If we open our ears to the cries of suffering and despair that have gone upward in the nights of those desolate years, we can no longer sit idly by. If we open our eyes to the meaning of the scars which those struggles against poverty must carry over into the future, we will arise in protest against such inhumanity. If we open our hearts to the poverty and destitution all around us, we can not fail to see that these millions of unemployed are flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone. They are in veriest truth our blood brothers and sisters and our own children under our protection. Our first duty is to them, to relieve their present suffering, to make certain that they be never again subjected to such ignominy. These be the duties of this Congress; these its great opportunity to serve, and this Congress will not falter in fulfilling those duties.

I understand our very efficient Appropriations Committee hopes to figure out by various and sundry economies the splendid saving of $125,000,000 a year under the Budget estimates. That is a princely sum. It requires great ability, endless labor, breadth of viewpoint, devotion to principle, and the courage of the American soldier to accomplish such a result. I would not detract one iota from such service and sacrifice, and I do not. But that I may appeal to these men to render even a greater service when their present work is completed, I point out to them that the $125,000,000 they are saving is exactly the amount of income earned by the American people each three and a third working hours during the years of 1928 and 1929.

That through idleness we lost the total sum of their saving each 10 hours working time during the entire year of 1931. It is a great economic service to save a hundred and twenty-five millions to the American people, but it is a two hundred and forty times greater economic service to restore the thirty billions of national income now being lost each year.

The great Committee on Ways and Means is engaged in the search for four billions a year to run this mighty Government of ours. The same great ability, resourcefulness, persistent effort, and courage are at work there that we have found in our Appropriations Committee. May I not, with the same praise for them and their efforts, also point out to them that when America was at work we earned that full $4,000,000,000 every 14 days; that because of our idleness we have lost seven and a half times that much in 1931 as compared with 1928 and 1929; that if we restore men to work, give jobs back to men, we can earn seven and a half times more than our Government needs each year out of that increase over our present national income?

I plead with my colleagues, whose experience in shaping legislation to our needs is of such inestimable value to the country, that they turn for a moment to this vastly greater field of restoring national income. For therein lies our way out of our present economic difficulties.

But there is a vastly greater service to be rendered by restoring this national income than any economic service can be. It will do away with unemployment, poverty, and destitution. It will set the wheels of industry humming again. It will restore prosperity. It will revive faith in our institutions. It will bring gladness and rejoicing to the children of our country, and thanksgiving and songs to the women who have borne these hardships so heroically.

If we provide a job for every man and woman who wants to work, we would have 100 per cent prosperity. Our national income under those conditions would reach a hundred billion dollars a year against sixty billions for the year 1931. In short, universal employment would be worth $40,000,000,000 a year more than our present condition of idleness, poverty, destitution, and despair. Three hundred and twenty new dollars apiece for every man, woman, and child more than we had in 1931, an average of $1,600 apiece for each family more than they had in 1931. That is worth fighting for. That totals twice as much as our national debt, including our deficit and our two-billion-dollar dole to the financial institutions. This must be the gift of this Congress to the American people for the next fiscal year.

It can be done, it must be done.

I do not propose any new plan. I only propose the doing of those things which we have always done from the beginning—only doing them on a sufficient scale to meet our present needs.

Build a great national system of trunk-line highways to connect up the State highways—all we need of them—wide enough and heavy enough to outlast the roads of Rome.

A great series of national buildings for all purposes, permanent and beautiful.

A great system of canals—one from New York all the way to Brownsville, Tex., on the Mexican border, safe in storm or in war for the increased traffic which it will bring.

A great canal from the Gulf of Mexico to the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi for the greatest ships afloat, to bring the very heart and center of our vast country down to the seven seas.

The canals from Chicago and the Great Lakes to the Atlantic seaboard. The many other canals which only our poverty complex has prevented our building before this time.

The deepening and equipping of our harbors for the carrying on of our foreign commerce, which must more and more increase as time goes on.

The reforestation of those sections which should never have been brought under cultivation.

The control and improvement of all our national rivers against overflow, for navigation to fullest extent practicable.

All these things to be done permanently and economically, and to do the other new things which will constantly arise in the same permanent manner.

In this program there will be found 50 years of work for every surplus idle man in America—great national betterment, physically and spiritually. And they will extend with the doing of them. These can be done; these must be done. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does the gentleman feel that the country can absorb the additional $5,000,000,000 of prosperity bonds that he mentions in addition to the bond issue that will have to be absorbed to take care of the deficit for 1931, plus the deficit for 1932 and the prospective deficit for 1933?

Mr. KELLER. There will not be any deficit in 1932 or 1933 if you follow this plan; and there will not be any responsibility for the $2,000,000,000 we have voted for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Because if we restore the national income, the businesses which have received that $2,000,000,000 dole can and will pay it all back. If we do not restore the national income, business can not repay, and the people must pay for them.

To answer the question directly, following the Civil War our national wealth consisted of approximately $20,000,000,000. Our national indebtedness was $2,775,000,000, or 13.37 per cent of our total national wealth. If we issue $5,000,000,000 of prosperity bonds, this will be 6¼ per cent, or less than one-half what it was following the Civil War. Does this give the gentleman an answer?

Mr. ARNOLD. My inquiry is, Who is going to buy the bonds? Has the gentleman any assurance that the country is in shape to buy the bonds?

Mr. KELLER. All right; I am going to answer that, if I can. In other words, if we are not able to carry 6¼ per cent of our national wealth in the form of bonds, when we carried 13.37 per cent of it following the Civil War, when did we get so poor? Certainly, they will take the $5,000,000,000 as rapidly as we need the money. If you tell the people of this country that this is to put men to work, every man, every woman, everywhere, will do their bit, as they did during the war, because we are facing much more difficult conditions now than we ever faced during the World War. [Applause.]

Mr. McGUGIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does the gentleman think the situation now is comparable with the situation after the Civil War, when a few years thereafter we fell into possession of a great domain?

Mr. KELLER. Yes; if we have the courage to do what we ought to do. Certainly, it is.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FIESINGER. The gentleman said that France is enjoying great prosperity.

Mr. KELLER. That is true.

Mr. FIESINGER. Has the gentleman any information received within recent days?

Mr. KELLER. Oh, in the last three or four weeks they have been having some squabble among themselves.

Mr. FIESINGER. My reading has been that they are having the same difficulty, but not to the same extent, in balancing the budget in France that we are having in this country, and that unemployment is on the increase; but I read in the New York Herald Tribune of last Sunday two articles from which I want to quote in part:

LONDON, February 21.—The money market received a genuine surprise on Thursday when the Bank of England announced a reduction of the bank rate from 6 to 5 per cent. During the first week of this year, with sterling showing every sign of stability and the discount rate steadily dwindling, the change has been expected.

PARIS, February 19.—French economists are beginning to see signs of financial recovery in Britain, which makes them fear that refugee capital may start back across the channel soon. Writing in Information, the most important financial daily, Lucien Lamourex, reporter general of the budget, says: "Britain's financial recovery has been as remarkable and swift as France's in 1926. The budgetary situation is much improved and credit strengthened, with sterling firm. The day is coming when the London market will be made entirely sound and foreign capital again will be drawn to it."

On the same day, speaking in Paris, Pierre Quesnay, director of the Bank for International Settlements, said: "London will begin soon again to play the rôle of distributor of credit. Money that has sought refuge in Paris then will go to England.

Mr. KELLER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that during the entire period it has been my pleasure to work constantly over these things, I can assure the gentleman there has been no difficulty in France and there is no difficulty of any importance in France at the present time.

Mr. FIESINGER. What I wanted to point out was that business seems to be picking up in England, and Canada, I am informed, is showing signs of recovery. Both are off the gold standard. The same paper reported unfavorable trade balance for January in Germany of 100,000,000 marks.

Mr. KELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FIESINGER. Now, the United States, France, and Germany are on the gold standard, Canada and England are off the gold standard. If the above facts are true would the gentleman attribute anything in connection herewith to the gold standard?

Mr. KELLER. Not necessarily to the gold standard. It is all a question of having sufficiency of currency and credits upon which to carry on the business of the country to the best advantage. England decided she had not sufficient currency and credits to carry on her business on the gold standard. She therefore decided to go off the gold standard and enjoy the increase in business, employment, and profits arising from foreign commerce which the cheaper pound sterling afforded her. The results so far seem to justify the judgment of British statesmen on that matter.

Mr. FIESINGER. Then does it not follow that we must also deflate our gold dollar?

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman from Ohio is entirely correct. We must do that very thing through the means I have already pointed out, that is, through restoring the commodity price level of 1926.

Mr. FIESINGER. Would improving the price of silver help conditions in the United States?

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman opens up a subject of tremendous import and one which I should not presume to answer without more time at hand. But that the question may receive the best consideration which my rapidly expiring time will permit, I answer: In my judgment a way will be found for a very wide use of silver to the very great advantage of American business, both domestic and foreign, without at all disturbing the gold standard. We have a highly intelligent committee working on that subject at the present time. I refer to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, of which I think the gentleman [Mr. FIESINGER] is not only a member but also a member of the subcommittee carrying on these most important investigations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With reference to that part of the gentleman's argument on the proposition of stabilizing commodity values, is there any concrete legislation now pending before the Banking and Currency Committee seeking to effectuate, in a broad way, the gentleman's theory upon that proposition?

Mr. KELLER. There is. I can not speak fully, of course, but I can speak of my own work. On January 4 I introduced H. R. 6720, which provides for making all Government securities eligible for the circulation privilege. I did this so as to provide the Federal reserve system with the power to issue as much currency as conditions should require, and at whatever time it might be required. In other words, it is an enabling act for the whole system along this line.

Second. On January 22 I introduced H. R. 8246, declaring it to be the leading purpose of the monetary policy of the United States to stabilize the dollar on the basis of the 1926 commodity-price index, and making the policy mandatory on the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, when this Congress convened, with the Democrats in control of the House, I, in common with the people of the country, expected some sharp division. We all expected the Democratic majority to effect some marked changes in some of the Republican principles which the Democratic orators and press had for years denounced. Such has not been the case. Everyone expected the Democratic majority in this House to cut the heart out of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. Not so. The Democratic majority brought in a tariff bill by name only. It never lowered a single schedule. The leader of the Democratic Party in this House stood upon this floor and said: "The Republicans will not lower the tariff and we, the Democrats, do not dare to lower it when our markets are about to be flooded by foreign products." This surrender upon the part of the Democratic Party in its century-old opposition to tariff should forever silence opposition to the tariff policies of the Republican Party.

After the Democratic Party's frank repudiation of its assault upon the tariff in the campaign of 1930 the people have been in a quandary as to what would be the program or policy of the Democratic Party in opposition to the Republican Party. Weeks and months of this Congress went by before the country was finally informed as to the policy of the Democratic leadership, which is in opposition to the program of the Republican Party. Our genial and capable Speaker [Mr. GARNER] on last Saturday informed the country as to the line of demarcation between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party.

The Speaker told the country that the Democratic Party would go to the country and fight to the last ditch, demanding that Congress and not the President should take the responsibility of consolidating the bureaus. I despair of the calamity which would fall upon the country if the Speaker should be taken from the Congress and transferred to the White House. That would mean that the people had decreed that Congress, not the President, should consolidate the bureaus. Then with the gentleman from Texas in the White House and no longer in Congress, the country would be denied his guiding hand in the momentous problem of consolidating the bureaus.

I am not such a hidebound partisan but that I can see a great opportunity for the Democratic Party to render a great service to the country in taking opposition to the Republican Party. Monopoly and concentrated greed have been in the councils of my party too long for the good of the party and the country. The Democratic Party could render a great service by making the political line of demarcation the issue of concentrated wealth. If it will make that issue, I make the prophecy that the Republican Party will in a few weeks be forced to surrender and join the Democratic Party as the Democrats have surrendered and joined the Republicans on the tariff issue.

From the record to date in this Congress, it is apparent that the Democratic leadership would rather court monopoly in the hopes of matching Republican campaign contributions than to raise the only issue vital to the country and in which the people are interested.

I commend to both parties the policy of writing their platforms here in Congress by legislative deeds rather than waiting for the Chicago conventions. If both parties continue to fiddle along, silent on this question of monopoly and wholly unmindful of the traditions and principles of Roosevelt, Wilson, and Bryan, then the people may take over either or both parties. Again, they may establish a party of their own. The people will not forever permit concentrated wealth to prostitute the two and only political parties with campaign contributions.

Some of the things which partisan leadership can effectively perform at this time include shortening the hours of labor, starting the movement to get several million unemployed back to the farm, providing the same credit and banking facilities for individual business as are enjoyed by large business, waging war upon the system of chain ownership of all profitable business in the local communities, and, last but not least, restoring the antimonopoly laws until all combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, reasonable or unreasonable, are unlawful. The antimonopoly laws should be restored to the same force they were for the first 20 years after their enactment and until the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco cases in 1911.

If one had no source of information except the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and had read every word which has fallen from the lips of congressional leaders during this session of Congress, he would not believe that in the United States a great industry like the tobacco industry is so highly monopolized that it can dictate starvation prices for the producers of tobacco, then rob the consuming public until one company made so much in 1930 that it could pay a million-dollar salary to its president. In the following year, 1931, it displayed more monopolistic insolence by increasing the price which the consuming public should pay for tobacco. This is exactly what the tobacco monopoly has done in the United States during the last two years.

Tobacco is produced in the Southland, the bulwark of the democracy. I do not know of any Democratic leader in either House of Congress so far this session having uttered one word against the tobacco monopoly and in defense of the tobacco producers.

If one were obtaining his entire information from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he would likewise never understand or believe that there existed in the United States a chain monopolistic system which has been set up on every main street of the country and is daily draining every community of its financial sustenance. I think I am safe in saying, without fear of any contradiction, that the congressional leadership in both parties are purposely and designingly remaining as silent as a tomb in this session of Congress about this monopolistic program which is destroying the respective communities which we represent.

One receiving his sole information from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would not believe or understand that the industrial world is so highly monopolized that it is still arrogantly maintaining its war-time prices on steel products and that the 27,000,000 farm people are still obliged to pay virtually war-time prices for the steel products which they buy while the price received for the raw products of the farm is on an average of 40 per cent below the pre-war level.

One receiving his sole information from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this session of Congress could scarcely believe that there are eight and one-half million people out of employment largely because American industry has forever lost some foreign markets which were enjoyed while its European competitors were at war, and that a goodly part of these unemployed must find their way back to the small farm. No one will insist that there has been any aggressive leadership in either party to promote any sort of a program which will be helpful toward the getting of several million men back to the farm.

One receiving his sole information from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this session of Congress would scarcely believe that there are eight and one-half million men out of work largely because modern machinery has been installed in American industry during the last 10 years. At least there has been no aggressive leadership in this Congress advocating a reduction of the hours of labor rather than reducing the number of employed in order to take up the slack in labor brought about by modern machinery.

From anything which Congress has done during the last three years one would not believe that two of the five great American industries, the oil industry and the coal industry, are bankrupt with hundreds of thousands of people engaged in these industries suffering dire human distress because the oil industry is denied the benefit of the traditional American policy of giving American industries tariff protection from ruthless foreign competition. The oil industry is denied this protection primarily because this ruthless foreign competition consists of four great monopolistic American oil companies. So that there will be no misunderstanding, these four monopolistic companies are the Standard Oil of Indiana, the Standard Oil of New Jersey (two Rockefeller companies), the Gulf Oil Co. (a Mellon company), and the Shell Oil Co. owned primarily by foreign capital.

If the waging of congressional warfare on monopoly is not the crying need of this country, then Wilson and Roosevelt should not have been in the White House. To-day, monopoly is the deadly foe of American liberty and opportunity, whereas in the days of Roosevelt and Wilson it was only a competitor and an embarrassment to liberty and economic opportunity for the American people. If to-day the crying need is not congressional warfare against monopoly, then Lincoln was a misfit, he should never have been in the White House, and it is a frivolous waste of money for this generation to erect monuments to his memory. In his latter days he expressed more anxiety for the future of the Republic growing out of monopoly than he ever expressed over the future of the Republic growing out of rebellion.

Ironical as it may be, yet the fact remains, if one obtained his sole information from the record of this session of Congress he would undoubtedly believe that monopoly and concentrated wealth is not an issue, and that the great and burning issue of the day is whether or not the President will reorganize the bureaus or Congress will reorganize the bureaus. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of Members of the House, and especially those who, like myself, have the honor to represent districts which are in large part agricultural, to the fact that the pending bill carries a considerably reduced appropriation for Rural Free Delivery Service, and to the additional fact that this reduction is certain to result in injury in many ways to that branch of the Postal Service unless corrected.

The appropriation for rural free delivery for the fiscal years 1931 and 1932 was $107,550,000 each. The appropriation contained in this bill is $106,000,000, or a reduction of $1,550,000. An examination of the hearings had before the subcommittee considering this bill shows that the most material items of reduction contemplated by the department consist entirely of an estimated decrease in operation costs through rural-route consolidations, the entire abandonment of the previous policy of the department of establishing new routes where needed, and the practical elimination of rural-route extensions.

Referring to these in their order, my observation has been, and I am sure it is supported by the observations of many Members of the House, that the department for some years has been pusuing a policy of rural-route consolidation which has tremendously damaged the service. I have no question but that in some sections of the country, where good roads exist in all rural sections, it is possible for a carrier to make 50, 60, or 70 miles in a day conveniently and without bringing about unreasonable delay in the delivery of mail; but when the authorities of the Post Office Department attempt to apply the same rules to routes which run through hilly, mountainous country, where many of the roads get almost impassable in winter, they create by some of these route consolidations conditions whereby not only are insufferable burdens placed on the carriers but service to the people is so long delayed oftentimes as to be inferior in character to that formerly afforded by the old star routes and fourth-class post offices.

The second item of saving I mentioned is in the proposal not to establish any more rural routes. Expenditures for this purpose have been steadily decreased during the last three years, but the Chief of the Bureau of Rural Mails, testifying before the subcommittee, testified that this decrease is not brought about by there not existing any need for new routes. On the contrary, he said that about a hundred proposed new routes have been inspected and approved. The chairman of the committee upon these hearings, I regret to say, indicated his opinion that all rural routes necessary have been established. He lives in a large city, with a rural area surrounding it traversed by excellent roads, upon all of which rural service has doubtless already been established; but he should not forget those of us who come from districts where thousands of farmers are still without Rural Free Delivery Service, despite the requirement of the act of 1916 to the effect that this service should be extended as rapidly as possible to the entire rural population of the United States. Let not those who have be too negligent of the rights of those who have not, but who are equally with them entitled to these benefits. In this connection let me state that the third item of reduction contemplated by the bill is in extensions of existing routes. These, according to the evidence delivered before the subcommittee by the Chief of the Bureau of Rural Mails, run into many hundreds, extensions that have already been approved, but which can not be granted if this bill is passed without increasing the amount of this appropriation. It carries, it is true, $50,000 estimated for rural-route extensions, but there is no suggestion in the evidence that this sum will be anything like sufficient. There is a suggestion that the department in some way not definitely outlined expects to or, rather, hopes to effect some savings by which a few of these extensions may be granted. How it can reasonably hope to effect any savings in such fixed charges as the salaries and equipment maintenance of rural-route carriers I do not understand, and the chief of the bureau was not requested by the subcommittee to explain. For the fiscal year 1930 this item of extensions was $581,336.35; for 1931, $483,014.50; for 1932, $200,000; and now it is proposed to continue the decline by providing only $50,000 for this purpose. There is not only no suggestion that a great deal more is not needed, but there is positive evidence indicating that it is.

Many Members of Congress, I feel sure, have had for several months the same experiences that I have had with rural-route extensions. All of such applications, whether approved or not, have been denied on the basis of economy, and this during a fiscal year when the department had at least $200,000 available for that purpose. Now we are asked to reduce the amount to $50,000, and when we do, we must know that the effect of our action will be to cut off any rural-route extensions, under the present policy of the department, for at least a year and a half. In the meantime I have people in my district who were assured that Rural Service would be extended to them if they would place their roads in good condition and who have expended large sums of money, as well as labor, in complying with the requirements of the department on this point, only to be told now that while their applications are now approved they can not have the promised service "for reasons of economy."

I assume from the evidence before the subcommittee that there are thousands of people similarly situated throughout the United States. The denial to them of service accorded to others similarly situated is not economy; it is rank injustice. If the administration is reduced to such straits as that in order to make ends meet, if it is necessary to deprive the farmers of the United States of some of the small benefits of government that they receive and must cut off the comparatively small sum of $1,550,000 from the Rural Free Delivery Service, then, indeed, the condition of the Treasury must be desperate.

When this item is reached in the bill I am going to offer an amendment. I am not going to ask the House to even do the just thing of restoring the figure to what it was last year; but, accepting the department's estimate that it will save $400,000 in operating costs through rural-route consolidations already effected and that it can properly effect a further saving during the next fiscal year of $300,000 in this way, I am going to ask the House to put the other $850,000 of the $1,550,000 reduction back in the bill for the express purpose not only of making necessary extensions and establishing routes that have already been approved, but for the purpose also of making it unnecessary for the department to effect rural-route consolidations, which damage the service, in order to stay within the limits of its appropriation.

We have many Members on this floor who, in frequent arguments on prospective, idealistic, and impractical legislation that can never come to pass, and would not help conditions any if it did, pose as the friends of the farmer. Here is something—not much, it is true, in amount; but still something—which no man can deny will not only be of benefit to the farmer, but which is his undoubted legal and moral right. Will these friends of the farmer unite to give it to him?

Mr. Chairman, I wished to take advantage of this time accorded me by the gentleman from Illinois to call the attention of the House to these facts. I feel that if the Members of the House will read the hearings on the subject they will reach the conclusion that I have reached. I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include as a part of my remarks excerpts from the hearings before the committee relating to this subject matter, with the hope that the membership of the House will study these hearings and will arrive at the same conclusion I have—that the amount of the reduction should be restored, at least in part, so that there will be no injury to the Rural Free Delivery Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The excerpts referred to are as follows:

PAY OF RURAL CARRIERS

The CHAIRMAN. The next item is for pay of rural carriers, $106,000,000.

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. That represents a decrease of $1,550,000 from this year's appropriation. The expenditures for this fiscal year are estimated at $106,323,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that represent any new routes that you are going to put in; and if so, how many?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. The appropriation of $106,000,000 for next year will be substantially enough to run the present service, and such extensions as are absolutely needed to maintain the service we now have in operation.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not, as a matter of fact, contemplate any new routes, although, of course, some might be put in?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Some might have to be put in, for one reason or another.

The CHAIRMAN. Have we not gotten almost to the point where we have covered the country with rural routes; I mean in those sections where they will probably ever be needed?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. No; not from the number of applications, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. How many applications have you, Mr. Wood?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. I think I have now nearly a hundred in my office that have been inspected and approved.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean you have a hundred approved applications?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. New routes that have been inspected and that we have approved. There are about a hundred of them. We also have many hundreds of approved applications for extensions.

SAVINGS THROUGH CONSOLIDATION OF RURAL ROUTES

Mr. ARNOLD. Are you still adhering to the policy of consolidation?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. Have you anything that you could put into the record to show the number of consolidations and the savings due to consolidation during the past year?

Mr. COLEMAN. Yes; it is all here.

The CHAIRMAN. You will save in the year 1932, you estimate, $400,000. In 1931 you saved through consolidations $447,770.61.

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. I will revise those figures. In 1931 we saved $447,770; for 1932 we expect to save half a million dollars. For 1933 it is problematical, but I am anticipating at least $400,000.

The CHAIRMAN. What about these 100 routes that have been approved and are waiting for action? Are you going to take care of those out of your savings?

Mr. COLEMAN. We will try to do so. We have not any money to take care of them now.

AVERAGE SALARY AND ROUTE OF RURAL CARRIER

Mr. LUDLOW. What is the average salary of a rural carrier?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. About $2,100, not including the equipment allowance.

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. What is the highest?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. On a very long route it will run much higher. We have one route in southern California that is nearly 90 miles long, and that carrier gets, including his equipment allowance, nearly $5,000 a year.

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. Does he make the round trip on the same day?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. He makes the round trip in a day.

Mr. THATCHER. You had better give him an airship.

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. He makes it all right. He is satisfied.

Mr. LUDLOW. What is the standard length of a rural route?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. There is no standard length, Mr. Ludlow.

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. What is the average length?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. The average is about 32 miles. It is growing all the time.

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. Take the man who has a route of 32 miles. How long does it take him to cover his route?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. You mean on the average, of course?

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. I would say it might average about four hours. Of course, to that you have got to add the office time.

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. That depends somewhat on the condition of the roads, the weather, and so forth?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Surely. I was speaking of the average only.

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. In good weather that 4-hour man could cover it, I imagine, in three hours.

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Well, it not only depends on the route; it depends on the man.

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. That is true.

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Some men will make it quicker than others.

Mr. WILL R. WOOD. And it also depends on the machine?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. And on the machine, possibly.

Mr. ARNOLD. Do you have any seasonal variance in the number of rural carriers?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. No, sir; the number remains steady all the year.

Mr. ARNOLD. Could not a plan be worked out that would result in quite a saving along that line? For instance, in the winter time, when the roads are bad, of course, we know they can not cover the territory. In the summer time, when the roads are good, they can cover two or three times the amount of territory. Could not some plan be worked out whereby that seasonal necessity for additional carriers could be avoided?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. To lengthen the routes in the summer time, of course, the number of rural carriers would have to be reduced.

Mr. COLEMAN. There is no seasonal time for bad roads. In many places it is a mud condition in the spring, and at times in the summer; in other places it is in the fall, and in other places it is snow in the winter, with periods of bad roads in the summer and in the spring, when they are thawing. In North Dakota to-day the carriers are probably averaging nearer 10 hours a day than 4.

Mr. ARNOLD. Do you have anything in your office showing the comparative amount of unimproved roads that the carriers traverse?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. No, sir.

Mr. ARNOLD. Have you any way of getting that information?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Only this: We do not establish routes unless they are on pretty good roads.

Mr. ARNOLD. I understand. You put them on unimproved roads?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. They do travel unimproved roads; yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. But you have no data on that?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. I have no ready way of getting that information.

Mr. ABERNETHY. When you establish a new route, you usually abolish a number of offices, which helps some?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. At times. The smaller offices which are located along the lines of the rural routes are usually discontinued.

Mr. COLEMAN. Or we discontinue one, perhaps, and it may be an office that pays two or three hundred dollars a year or less to the postmaster. There is not much saving in that.

Mr. LUDLOW. What is the rule as to the number of families to be served on a route before the route will be established? Is there any standardization of that?

Mr. COLEMAN. No. We rather feel that there ought to be four to a mile. That is used for a standard.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. How much annual leave do you allow these people? How many days?

Mr. COLEMAN. Fifteen.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I see that the annual-leave practice costs the Government $3,485,000 a year.

Mr. COLEMAN. That is right.

Mr. THATCHER. What is the situation with reference to sick leave for the department?

Mr. COLEMAN. Ten days a year, and it is cumulative.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I want to make this observation, if I may, without any impropriety. I hope the time will never come when the Government will cease the extension of the Rural Mail Service. I think it is one of the greatest services rendered in the country. If there is any Government service that is really in the interest of the people, this is it.

BASIS OF SALARY FOR RURAL CARRIER

The CHAIRMAN. The salary of a rural carrier is based altogether upon mileage, is it not?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. In addition to the salary he gets a certain amount for equipment?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Four cents a mile.

The CHAIRMAN. How much of this $106,000,000 is for equipment?

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. About $17,000,000. To be exact it is $16,570,000.

CONSOLIDATIONS OF RURAL ROUTES

Mr. GEORGE L. WOOD. Special attention is invited to the savings in the Rural Delivery Service which have been accomplished on account of the consolidations of rural delivery routes as included in the statement.

	Actual saving
Consolidations effected during 1931 (842)	$447,770.61
Consolidations already ordered for 1932 (400)	343,698.60
Probable additional consolidations during 1932, estimated (236)	56,301.40
Total for 1932 (636)	400,000.00
Probable number of consolidations that can be effected during 1933, estimated (575)	300,000.00

DISTRIBUTION OF ESTIMATE

The following tabular statement shows in detail the expenditures, actual and estimated, for the various items that are paid for from this appropriation, being submitted in comparative form for four consecutive fiscal years:

	Expenditures, 1930	Expenditures, 1931	Appropriation, fiscal year 1932	Estimate, fiscal year 1933
Annual rate June 30, preceding year	$85,489,137.39	$85,710,792.99	$85,508,000.00	$85,100,000.00
Equipment maintenance	15,915,187.67	16,189,535.88	16,495,000.00	16,570,000.00
Additional routes	143,815.79	62,398.34	44,000.00
Extensions of existing routes	581,336.35	483,014.50	200,000.00	50,000.00
Annual leave	3,464,977.98	3,484,291.54	3,485,000.00	3,485,000.00
Sick leave	962,832.35	963,112.55	975,000.00	975,000.00
Station clerks	55,421.58	58,113.18	58,000.00	60,000.00
Tolls, ferriage, etc	4,738.94	4,435.05	5,000.00	5,000.00
Lock-pouch allowances	53,094.10	52,075.95	53,000.00	55,000.00
	106,670,542.15	107,007,770.61	106,823,000.00	106,300,000.00
Savings through consolidations	332,636.15	447,770.61	400,000.00	300,000.00
	106,337,906.00	106,560,000.00	106,423,000.00	106,000,000.00
Balance	662,094.00	990,000.00	1,127,000.00
Appropriation	107,000,000.00	107,550,000.00	107,550,000.00	106,000,000.00

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORR].

Mr. HORR. Mr. Chairman, I was highly amused and received a considerable amount of information from the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina who addressed you a short time ago. He said he was dry because his district was dry, and that he intended to be dry as long as the district was dry, and maintained that attitude.

Having soldiered down in North Carolina and having had an opportunity of spending a considerable period of time in that State, I can readily see why prohibition had no effect whatever in North Carolina. I can see why they can vote dry and still receive all the benefits that were theirs before prohibition. [Laughter.]

As a matter of fact, and I have listened and tried to be patient as a new Member should, but having seen the wonderful demonstration by several new Members, I have taken heart, and for the purpose of trying to call attention to a few things, I have taken the floor.

It has been the one cry since I entered Congress to save money, to economize. Everywhere we hear it on the floor of the House, until in my opinion we have reached the hysterical stage of saving money. [Applause.]

I call attention to the fact that we preach economy in all branches of the Government, and then, when we come down to one particular item—the prohibition item—we must have the exact amount of money that was appropriated a year ago. No economy is practiced here. No curtailment is made in this item.

Permit me to call attention to just what you have done with appropriations in other departments of Government. In the State Department you have saved approximately $3,276,942.22, a 17 per cent reduction in that department. In the Department of Commerce you have saved $10,292,393, a reduction in that department of 20 per cent. In the Department of Labor—and you all emphasize that you want to do much for the poor downtrodden laboring man—you have reduced the appropriation this year over the appropriation of last year $14,403,119, approximately 11 per cent. In the Department of Justice, which includes the item of prohibition enforcement, we find the only department of the Government that does not show any appreciable reduction; scarcely 0.04 of 1 per cent is saved over the appropriations for last year. The Army and the Navy appropriations are to be reduced. As I understand it, every bill that carries any appropriation whatsoever, under instructions from leaders, is to be reduced. You people who are for economy, how are you going to tell the people of the country that you are saving in every line, cutting down the national defense, excepting in the matter of prohibition? The other day you refused an appropriation in the deficiency appropriation bill for the reserve aviators, the men who give their time and lives for the benefit of their own country.

Still, when it comes to the prohibition item, you say that you must not reduce it.

One gentleman the other day said that this is in keeping with the reduction of the appropriation for immigration and the appropriation for the enforcement of the antitrust law. It is far from the truth. If he had read the report closely he would have found that that remark applied only to the unexpended balances, and that in the item for antitrust enforcement there was a reduction in appropriation of $10,300 and in the immigration item a reduction of $14,700.

The committee report is very deceiving. Turn to page 12 of the report and we read:

> The majority of the committee felt that as this appropriation is for the enforcement of a law which presents unusual difficulties at times in its enforcement the appropriation should not be reduced. Similar action was taken by the committee for like reasons in the appropriations carried for enforcement of antitrust laws and immigration laws, under each of which heads unobligated balances are shown from the present fiscal year.

The unobligated balances do still exist. This would lead one to believe that the appropriations for the enforcement of antitrust laws and immigration laws had not been tampered with, and it requires several readings to disabuse one of this thought.

However, if we turn to page 33 of the report we find that the appropriation for antitrust enforcement has been reduced $10,300 and immigration $14,700.

The country, naturally, will be led to believe that the appropriation of $11,000,000 plus will be the cost of enforcement of prohibition laws during 1933.

The bill submitted shows an appropriation as follows:

Penal and correctional institutions	$13,866,012
Marshals and deputies, district attorneys, clerks, commissioners, justices	10,917,980
Fees, jurors, witnesses, bailiffs, criers	4,900,000
Or a total of	29,683,992

Approximately 50 per cent of this goes for prohibition, or $13,534,522. Add $11,369,500, which brings the cost up to $24,904,022.

How do we arrive at these figures? Let us analyze the appropriation item by item. We appropriate $13,866,000 for criminal institutions, and approximately 52 per cent of these offenders are violators of the Volstead law. Why not put this under the head where it belongs and charge the Prohibition Department with $7,207,320?

The appropriation calls for $10,917,980 for marshals, deputies, district attorneys, and assistants, clerks, commissions, and justices. Approximately 40 per cent of this should be charged where it belongs. Let us, then, add $4,367,192.

Appropriation is made in this bill of $4,900,000 for juror fees, witnesses, bailiffs, and criers. Forty per cent of this should be charged to the Prohibition Bureau, adding in the other costs to the bureau of $1,960,000. The total cost, then, not provided for in the prohibition budget, but which should be charged to that bureau, is $13,534,522; adding to that sum the money directly appropriated, $11,369,500, the true amount appropriated for the Prohibition Bureau is $24,904,022.

Would you go to the country with the statement that we are appropriating $24,904,022 to carry out a policy that has made us the laughingstock of the world?

And this is not the entire financial enforcement burden you have placed on the country. Commissioner Woodcock, in his November report, stated that one-fourth of the Federal arrests were taken into the State courts. Add another $4,000,000 on your cost of prohibition, and people have to pay it. Approximately $29,000,000 for enforcement alone. Add to this $13,389,135 for extra cost of the Coast Guard Service due to prohibition and we have the startling amount of $43,293,151.

Would you dare to bring in a report that the United States Government has lost $10,984,000,000 in revenues in the 12 years we have been so nobly experimenting?

And $1,000,000,000 a year loss in revenue to the Federal Government alone, not considering the immense loss in revenue to the cities and States. Professor Seligman, of Columbia, among other eminent economists, is authority for this figure.

Would you who are from the farming districts dare to tell your farmers that when the brewing and distilling interests ceased operations in 1920 that a legitimate market for 40,000,000 bushels of corn, 60,000,000 bushels of barley, and 10,000,000 pounds of hops was lost? Add that to your cost of prohibition and think what fools we have been to permit our revenues to go to racketeers and bootleggers. Your farmers in the Corn Belt may get some solace out of the fact that the production of corn sugar has increased from 157,000,000 pounds a year in 1919 to over 857,000,000 pounds a year in 1929.

Have we gained by this huge expenditure and loss?

We have established an illegitimate business estimated at almost $3,000,000,000 a year—greater than the entire automobile industry.

We grow oratorical when the folks from home are present in the gallery. Gentlemen will remember when some members of National Education Association were in the galleries a few days ago how members struggled to be recognized on the floor so as to send word back through the school-teachers that Congress was taking good care of prohibition. The Members little realize that there are really some sensible people in that association. I wish the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM] were here to-day so that I could read to him what one of these educators stated in their convention relative to the conditions that exist to-day. Permit me to read this news item.

Expressing grave concern over the increasing rate of criminality among the young, David Snedden, professor of education at Teachers College, Columbia University, yesterday challenged educators in session here to find a solution. He said:

> We spend more dollars on public schools, we have more of our youth in high schools and colleges than all the rest of the world together. Quantitatively we have gone far. But the actual achievements of our millions of learners seem to fall sadly short of popular expectations. Perhaps our schools have helped to reduce old-fashioned criminality, but in the meantime automobiles and machine guns and prohibition have made new kinds of crime immensely profitable and moderately safe.

With all of your appropriations, what have you done? Do you prohibit, or have you created a fanatical atmosphere of which we are all ashamed? I have heard California boast of her climate, tell of her sunny days or her sun-kissed fruit, but I hold in my hand an advertisement that I hope the drys will permit me to get into the RECORD, which I shall do unless I am stopped. I am going to read it so that all will know. Here is the advertisement which I show to you printed in blue and red:

> Yes, we have no wine; but what do we get from California? Pure as a baby's dream; what will you have? Port, sherry, Tokay, champagne, muscatel, angelica, Riesling, Rhine, claret, sauterne, Moselle, Burgundy.

If any of you desire to purchase, I have here a little card which goes with this, so that you can fill it out and send it down, and I guarantee delivery of any of the advertised brands. You say that is bootlegging. I admit it; but let me show you something else. To those of you who have a thirst does not this bring back memory of the olden days? You think this to be a pamphlet of ancient vintage. Far from it. It was recently issued, and by whom? By a company whose attorney is Mrs. Mabel Willebrandt. And they call her a dry and label me a wet! Oh, they related the other day how the school people would tell how they would protect the youth of the land, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM] told us how this law was being enforced in the State of Michigan, and, gentlemen, read this article in the American Weekly: "Seven college dormitories raided for rum and padlocked."

One hundred and eighty-two University of Michigan students tumbled out of bed in the early morning hours and the famous old fraternity houses searched from attic to cellar. The photographs of seven leading fraternity houses I show you. Seven fraternity houses at the University of Michigan, in the State where the gentleman comes from. And he tells this House and tells that prohibition is effective in Michigan—Michigan the home of wort. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, it is the youth of the land that we should be thinking about.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORR. I have only a little time and I know the gentleman is with me, so what is the use of further contribution? This appropriation that you make goes to pay what and whom? We have a prohibition agent by the name of Chidester to-day in the city of Seattle who was run out of the Territory of Alaska. He was ordered to Tacoma, and there was caught by the sheriff as he was loading his automobiles with linens, rugs, silverware, and personal belongings of the owner—a common thief. Afterwards he was taken from the city of Tacoma and was placed in my own city of Seattle. To-day he is stationed there.

They talk about conditions in the early days of enforcement. It happened in our State within the month. I asked Mr. Woodcock to dismiss him and he has not. Two of the agents went out of our city and set fire to a little building. The fire spread, and you have now before you for consideration a bill for the payment of moneys due because of the vandalism of those agents in setting fire to private property owned by innocent people. You will be asked by me to reimburse those people. There, in fact, is how your appropriation is being used.

Surely, gentleman, it is not the lack of courage to meet the issue which allows of such an appropriation. Your experience here in Washington should convince you of the terrible conditions existing under this law.

Speak-easies being maintained within a block of the President's mansion, operating on Government property. Social teas that invariably turn out to be cocktail parties. Punch for squirrel whisky that would make one climb a tree.

It can not be that we are completely under the domination of the Anti-Saloon League; that those religious racketeers like Bishop Cannon and his ilk are the controlling factors in legislation.

Because he hovers like a vulture above us in the galleries, are we fearful of him and his kind? A man who, under the cloak of religion, plies his nefarious trade and brings discredit upon his church and God.

Do we fear a man whom Doctor Van Dyke, of Princeton, characterized as a man who has not the truth in him—a man of many bank accounts; a man who gambled in the market and who escaped the penalty of a wronged church by the subterfuge "I am sorry"; a man who has betrayed a church that stands for the highest ideals and in whose edifice dwells the spirit of God?

Will such a man mold and dictate legislation? I, for one, say "no," and now throw the gantlet of defiance in his face. The Anti-Saloon League and Bishop Cannon do not control my vote, and my vote will be against any appropriation to continue this "era of fanaticism," as this period will be known in history. We may not repeal the eighteenth amendment at this session of Congress, but the people will repeal it for us. Read the Literary Digest and beware!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ].

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise this afternoon in order to say a few words about the manner in which some $196,000 was cut from the Commerce Department appropriation bill, in the item of the Bureau of Mines, which was done by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS]. I called the matter to the attention of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS] and told him that some time this afternoon I would have 10 minutes, and that, if present, he would have an opportunity to answer me. In view of the absence of the gentleman I shall ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS] have permission to extend his remarks by inserting immediately after my remarks a letter that he said he would have prepared sometime this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, the Budget allotment for the Bureau of Mines for 1933 was $214,233 less than the appropriation for that bureau in the previous year. A further cut of $11,580 was made by the Appropriations Committee of the House, so that the total reduction amounted to about 10 per cent. Thereafter, on February 22, when many Members of the House were absent attending ceremonies in observance of Washington's Birthday, the gentleman from Arizona offered committee amendments cutting off an additional $194,635 from the appropriation of the Bureau of Mines, and they were hurriedly passed. The total reduction thus amounts to $402,450, or nearly 18½ per cent, without counting a reduction of $64,768 in the revolving fund for the Government fuel yard.

It is surprising that the representative of the great mining State of Arizona identified himself with such an act. He is a mining engineer descended from distinguished miners who made important contributions to the development of the mineral industries upon which the wealth of this country is largely founded. Yet it is evident that he had slight interest in the welfare of the Bureau of Mines, which may be excused by the fact that he appears to know little or nothing about it, as indicated on page 4470 and other pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 22, from which I quote:

Mr. KVALE. The gentleman, in the subcommittee, has probably broken down this item so that the gentleman from Arizona (Alabama?) will be able to tell us how many people will lose employment as a result of this cut.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. I will have to state frankly to the gentleman that I do not know how many will lose employment.

Evidently the gentleman from Arizona had not deemed it important to learn in advance the number of people who would be thrown out of employment, the number of research and experiment stations in mining areas which will have to be closed, what field crews may have to be retired, what mine-rescue cars or trucks will have to be put out of commission, what health and safety courses and accident-prevention instructions will have to be discontinued; yet it is apparent that all these things require careful consideration.

I should like to ask the gentleman from Arizona whether, before introducing these amendments, he had written the Department of Commerce asking questions as to the effects his proposed cuts might have, or as to the damage or distress this further withdrawal of Federal support might occasion. If he has done so, may I ask that he spread on the record the reply he received from the department in which an analysis appears, so that we may learn the opinion of the department and the bureau concerned as to what mischief would be done.

The Bureau of Mines, like all other bureaus, should contribute to curtailment of appropriations, but it is not one to be singled out for destructive treatment. The raw materials of industry are derived from agricultural or mineral industries, and without raw materials of either group modern civilization would vanish. Not the slightest difference in importance can be established as between the two industries, because they are mutually dependent. Though people are fed by agricultural products, the production of food required by so large a population as that of the United States is made possible only by use of farming implements and machines made of metals, and, in addition, the necessary distribution of food products is made possible only by a transportation system, including traffic on land by railroads, trucks, busses, automobiles, and traffic on water by vessels, all made of metals and moved by the energy of mineral fuels. In modern times we no longer live by bread alone, and all manufactures, including those based upon agricultural products, are made possible by the mineral industries that provide the metals for machinery and power for its operation.

In 1930 the primary production of agriculture was valued at $9,402,000,000; that of mineral industries was $4,810,000,000—a ratio of less than 2 to 1. But a large part of agricultural production is promptly consumed with little added value, while all primary mineral production requires manufacture of some sort so that the value in consumption is probably at least equal, and possibly greater, for mineral products. The latter, moreover, tend to create permanent forms of national wealth, including organized means of production and distribution represented by the buildings, factories, streets, and other facilities of the cities, by roads, railroads, and ships, and by accumulated stocks of metals in use that are to a remarkable degree a measure of the civilization attained by nations.

In 1930 agricultural products could have had no distribution at all without support of the mineral industries, as the railroads would have ceased to operate had they been deprived of the 831 millions of tons of freight, 74 per cent of their total traffic, provided by mineral industries, as against the 229 millions of tons provided by agricultural industries, the ratio here being about 4 to 1. Likewise, the railroad freight revenue paid by mineral industries was $2,048,000,000, compared with $1,338,000,000 paid by agricultural industries.

In that year there were 13,617,811 paid workers engaged in agriculture and related industries, and 5,523,454 paid workers in mineral industries, a ratio of 2½ to 1. Yet in spite of the fewer workers in mineral industries, the Federal income taxes paid by the mineral industries average about twice as much as those paid by agricultural industries. The estimated figures in this respect for 1928, selected as a recent year more normal than those subsequent to it, was $172,000,000 for agricultural and $332,000,000 for mineral industries, a ratio of about 1 to 2.

In spite of these facts the one basic industry, agriculture, is represented, as it assuredly should be, by a great department having a member of the President's Cabinet at its head, while the other basic industry is accorded merely a small bureau, now joined in the Department of Commerce, as a seemingly casual afterthought, with such unrelated activities as the Patent Office, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, aeronautics, radio, the Bureaus of Navigation, Fisheries, Lighthouses, Census, and the Steamboat Inspection Service. It has no voice in the Cabinet or even an Assistant Secretary to protect it from encroachment of other bureaus more highly favored by the department. And now the gentleman from Arizona would single out the Bureau of Mines for especially drastic curtailment of its activities.

In 1930 appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, exclusive of $106,400,000 for rural roads, $4,602,000 for the Weather Bureau, $500,000,000 for the Federal Farm Board, and $1,020,000 for the Federal Farm Loan Bureau, amounted to $109,286,164.

In the same year the appropriation for the Bureau of Mines, exclusive of that for helium plants that are chargeable to national defense, was $2,258,870. Another $442,000 appropriated for the Geological Survey is directly chargeable to the benefit of mineral industries, and likewise $110,000 appropriated for the Bureau of Standards. The total of direct appropriations to the three bureaus for the benefit of mineral industries was $2,810,920. The appropriations for agricultural and mineral industries thus derived were in a ratio of 39 to 1.

These figures lead to the astonishing conclusion that for every dollar of appropriations made for agriculture, as reckoned above, $1.56 is paid in Federal income tax, while for every dollar appropriated for the mineral industries $118.21 is paid in Federal income tax. The ratio here is 1 to 75. Putting the facts in another way, agriculture receives back in appropriations 63.4 cents of every income-tax dollar it pays, while the mineral industries receive back 8½ mills.

It should be stated emphatically that I, myself, am a farmer as well as a mining engineer, and that I represent many more farmers than miners. I believe in liberal support of agriculture as a great basic industry which returns incalculable benefit to the Nation for all encouragement it receives. I would not assent to further reduction of its appropriations unless after careful study and investigation justification is found for such reduction, but I think the great disparity in treatment of the mineral industries should be made plain when those who are obviously ignorant of the facts in regard to it lightly attack the already niggardly appropriation for the Bureau of Mines.

I have been informed by the bureau that to meet the decrease in appropriations first proposed, its work must be contracted to such a limit that further cuts, represented by amendments of the gentleman from Arizona, must be met by abolishing activities, by the discharge of 175 employees, and the closing of stations and offices in many States.

If this should happen, I trust those responsible will still be present here when the inevitable happens and we learn through increase of mine disasters and accidents, through lack of authoritative statistics for guidance of mineral industies, and by many other means that such drastic economy costs the Nation many times the amount it saves. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, the letter referred to above is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1932.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On Monday last there were several amendments offered by me and accepted by the House to the Bureau of Mines item in the appropriation bill for the Department of Commerce. The amounts of reductions carried in some of the amendments were hastily arrived at and without adequate supporting evidence.

As a result of subsequent investigation, it is my opinion that some of the reductions were too drastic. It is, however, my belief that substantial reductions can be made below the Budget estimate.

I am calling this to your attention so that you may before your committee, in the event you see fit to do so, hear the proper officials of the Bureau of Mines in order that there may be repaired any substantial impairment of necessary and requisite functions of the bureau effected by the amendments.

Very sincerely yours,

L. W. DOUGLAS.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State, through either error or the logic of events, is enveloped by an international dilemma that may well have disastrous results to our own country. Japan, through either economic pressure or the crafty timing of a long-planned Asiatic thrust, has defied world opinion, popular and legalized.

Were China a strong state, the world would not be in confusion as to the Asiatic situation. Had not the world confused the Asiatic situation, China would be a strong state. The confrontation of war despite a barrage of antiwar treaties is a rebound from a general injustice meted by all powers to China. The solution of to-day's dilemma may be in fair play by all toward China. The Nationalists' government of China, with a program for domestic rehabilitation, was hampered by all the powers, not excluding the United States. We, in spite of protestations of devotion to Chinese reconstruction, interfered for no apparent reason in the Nationalists' endeavors. For this departure from ideals we may pay the price in war. Japan quite properly reminds us that we fired on Nanking. However, we did that on the rather broad thesis of protection of American lives and property, if that is a justification. A safer thesis would call for the evacuation of American lives and movable property, leaving the irremovable to international arbitrament. Japan offers the same excuse as we did at Nanking, with more particulars. But we quit after one day's firing and a Chinese protest to the League of Nations. Japan seems bent on permanent occupation, which, of course, violates the whole gamut of peace guarantees—the League of Nations, the Kellogg pact, and the 9-power treaty.

Secretary Stimson in his note to Senator BORAH stresses the Japanese violation of the 9-power treaty. But had we lived up to the full spirit of the treaty China to-day would have been a strong sovereign state and Japan would not have been so ready to question her rights. Of great importance to national control of China was the abolition of foreign courts in China. Congress, by a vote of 262 to 43 for the Porter resolution, urged that we give up our extraterritorial claims. Our courts are still there for the trials of American divorces and petty American criminals. The prestige of the Nationalist government would have been enhanced tremendously by the withdrawal of these courts, but Americans in China insisted on them, and now we have to send troops and ships to China to protect them. Kellogg, the author of the famous peace pact, which if it means anything now means war, coordinated with the British in molesting China. This was done because we had no real American foreign policy and tailed Great Britain. Our hostility retarded Chinese political development and we shared the bad grace of Great Britain. The responsibility for most of China's political retardation, and Japan's excuse for action on the ground of a disorganized China, lies at the door of the Coolidge administration. Hoover was heir to a bad Asiatic problem and made the worst of it.

Stimson has had the questionable courage to try to have a strictly American policy. Kellogg coordinated when he should not have. Stimson is on his own when he should coordinate. At the outbreak of the present difficulties, he waited for the League of Nations, which, true to the policy of the powerless and the procrastinators, appointed a commission. Japan went ahead with an army. In October the plain course for Stimson, representing the country responsible for the 9-power treaty, was to have called the signers of the same to Washington. This would have checked Japan. But now Japan has obtained vast territory at a terrible cost in blood. In time a realistic world will recognize the de facto situation in Manchuria as de jure. The possession of Manchuria and the Japanese blood loss in the present Japanese temper is more important to Japan than the Kellogg pacts, Stimson notes, the 9-power treaty, or the League of Nations.

Stimson's most recent suggestion is entirely out of line with Hoover peace reasoning. Based on Japanese violations of the 9-power treaty as a part of the disarmament resolution, he suggests a violation by us of the latter. The pacifistic reasoning has been that naval races create war. That is as well Hoover reasoning. So, accepting the pacifist philosophy, we must conclude that Stimson to stop one war would sow the seeds of other wars.

It should be quite evident that the League of Nations will take no aggressive step in the Far East, and the Stimson blustering will go for naught unless he plunges us into a war. There are critics of the administration who believe that in war it sees political salvation, but I can not subscribe to that view of an American political party. The Japanese contentention that the 9-power treaty is not part and parcel of the Washington Disarmament Conference will not stand the test of inspection of the minutes of the conference, for the invitation of the President of the United States plainly states that the powers are "to participate in a conference on the subject of the limitation of armament in connection with which Pacific and Far Eastern questions will also be discussed."

The Japanese contention that the 9-power treaty rested on a Utopian China instead of a China in a state of flux will not stand the test of the minutes of the conference. Only in the case of the abolition of extraterritoriality was there a reservation as to treaty obligations. No amount of argument at a conference of the nine powers could convince the conferees that the position of Japan was correct, and such a conference would organize world opinion against the Japanese. The League of Nations is to meet on March 3. Why can not the nine powers as such meet contemporaneously and resolve on behalf of all the signers to live up to the obligations of the treaty. Russia should also be invited to the conference. It requires self-denial on the part of all, but the treaty was predicated on self-denial. Japan would lose its excuse for military aggression if China were granted the fullest powers of sovereignty.

The League of Nations can not invoke the boycott having in mind the trade interests of constituent nations without knowing our position nor can we invoke a boycott without knowing the extent of cooperation. No American wants any war with Japan and surely no American wants America of and by itself to war with Japan. This is the time for coordination.

It may be true that the force of economic events has caused the Japanese onrush. That can be put before a conference of the nine powers and they may be able to ease the Japanese pressure. Let Stimson calm down and try by conference to arrange an adjustment satisfactory to China and Japan. Let us lead in peace and not in war.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHNEIDER].

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose and intent of H. R. 6589, a bill which I have introduced, is well explained by its contents which read:

> That on and after the passage of this act no money appropriated by act of Congress, to be used to provide food for human consumption for any person entitled thereto by virtue of any law, rule, or regulation of the United States of America shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine.

Regulating the sale of oleomargarine is nothing new in the history of legislation in the Congress of the United States. We find that on August 2, 1886, a bill was approved that placed a 2-cent tax on every pound of oleo manufactured. This law also taxed manufacturers $600 per annum, wholesalers $480, and retailers $48. In 1902 the so-called Grout law was passed, which reduced the tax on uncolored oleo to one-fourth cent per pound and increased the tax on colored oleo to 10 cents per pound. The Grout law reduced the tax on wholesalers of uncolored oleo to $200 and on retailers to $6.

Recently manufacturers of oleo made a very important discovery from their point of view. They found that by the introduction of certain vegetable matter they could color oleo in such a manner as to make it look like butter to anyone except an expert.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue ruled that the introduction of this vegetable matter, palm oil, was not artificial coloration. Being used as one of the ingredients, oleo so colored could not be brought under the law requiring the 10-cent tax. To cure this situation the 1931 act was passed, which provides that oleo colored in any way of any shade of yellow shall be taxed 10 cents per pound.

During the consideration of the 1931 act on the floor of the House, I was one of several who tried our best to have the 10-cent tax applied on all oleomargarine, both colored and uncolored, thereby making it impossible for the sellers of oleo to evade the 10-cent tax.

WISCONSIN'S OLEOMARGARINE LAWS

Wisconsin is one of the great dairy States of the Union. Many State laws have been passed in protection of the industry. In addition to the Federal laws, Wisconsin has placed a State tax of $1,000 on manufacturers, $500 on wholesalers, $25 on retailers, hotels, and restaurants, and $5 on boarding-house keepers. All oleomargarine is taxed 6 cents per pound under this law. This legislation was passed by the recent short session of the State legislature and is known as the Loomis Act.

The stringency of this law in my State shows the feeling in the dairy industry about it. The Wisconsin farmer has been facing a terrible problem, and his vigorous demand for protection has compelled the legislature to enact such laws virtually ruling out completely the production and sale of oleomargarine. However, the Wisconsin farmer is not alone in his predicament. Practically every phase of agriculture to-day is in a similar situation.

AGRICULTURE IS AMERICA'S BASIC INDUSTRY

The farming industry is the basic American industry. It is so essential that should it perish civilization would descend to a condition unimaginable. Coincident with the fact that agriculture is our greatest industry it follows that its problem is our greatest problem. Every effort should be expended toward its solution. I believe that farm-cooperative organizations, honestly and efficiently managed and farmer controlled, offer the farmer the best chance of securing the standard of living that the wealth and resources of this country entitle him to receive.

COOPERATIVES IN DENMARK

What cooperative associations can do for the farmer is well illustrated by what they do for the farming industry of Denmark. That country is hailed as the model agricultural country. It is not menaced, as our farmers are, by speculators in farm products. When the Danish farmer markets his product he does it as a cooperative-enterprise. Denmark has no horde of middlemen to take the lion's share from the consumer and give a beggar's pittance to the farmer. In these United States all must live, but facts are that all of these middlemen live better than the real producer, the farmer.

FARMERS AND CONSUMERS GYPPED

A vivid illustration of the way the middlemen are working both consumer and farmer was presented to the Senate Committee on Agriculture last November by Mr. John Simpson, president of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union, Oklahoma City. Mr. Simpson spoke before this committee as follows:

Out in Denver about 60 days ago I met a man by the name of W. B. Estes, who was secretary of the State Chamber of Commerce of Oklahoma for many years. He recently has become a farmer near Denver. He sent on July 6 of this year, on his own truck, seven sheep, and he delivered them to the A. A. Blakely Livestock Commission Co., at Denver, and they sold them for him. I have the sales sheets here. Two of those sheep were sold to the Hurlburt Packing Co., at Denver, weight about 125 pounds, and brought $1 a hundred, $1.25. Five were sold to the Swift Packing Co., and they weighed a little over 410 pounds. They brought 50 cents a hundred, $2.05—a total gross of $3.30. Charges were, yard insurance 10 cents, yardage 70 cents, inspection 80 cents, and commission $1.75, a total to deduct from the gross of $2.55. This left net to him 75 cents. Here is the check they gave him. He made me a present of it. Seventy-five cents he got for those seven sheep. He took these sales sheets to the representatives of the Department of Agriculture and had them figure out what the consumer would pay for those seven sheep, and their figures on the back of this sheet show the consumer will pay $83.70 for the sheep that he got 75 cents for. Now, something is the matter when we have conditions like that.

I know personally a great many of just such illustrations as this in which the farmer gets practically nothing for his labors and the consumer pays a tremendous price therefor. It is a common condition and one that can not and should not be permitted to continue. A system that will permit such a condition is not only outrageous but criminal.

FARM EXPERIENCE

I was born on a farm in Outagamie County, Wis., and lived there until 20 years of age. I therefore know something of its hardship and drudgery. All of my people so far back as I can trace them were farmers. The farm problem has, therefore, been one of great interest to me. Moreover, as a progressive Member of the House of Representatives, every legislative measure that has had for its purpose the promotion of agriculture has received my support.

COMMON CAUSE

Where a stable American wage is paid, the worker can purchase the things produced, and that spells prosperity in any world. It applies as well to the price the farmer receives for his produce. When the worker can purchase agricultural products to meet all his needs at a price permitting farmers to maintain an American standard of living, then agriculture will be in a position to buy upon the market the commodities manufactured by labor, thus keeping the wheels of industry and commerce turning. The American farmer provides America's best market.

ONLY THE DESTITUTE BUY OLEO

No one eats oleomargarine knowingly except from compulsion. Certainly no one buys it for his own use except when economic conditions make it impossible for him to buy wholesome butter. In a country so rich in resources as America, with an abundance and even surpluses of products of all kinds, there should be no need for anyone to purchase cheap and inferior foods as a substitute for the wholesome and nutritious.

It is, I believe, unnecessary to take the time to cite authorities to establish the inferiority of oleomargarine as a food. It is generally admitted that oleo is made from oils and fats which do not compare at all with the wholesome ingredients of butter in nutritious value.

USE IN GOVERNMENT HOSPITALS

The astounding thing to me, Mr. Chairman, is that notwithstanding the known fact that oleo is a very inferior food, so much of it is used in our soldiers' homes, veterans' hospitals, Army, Navy, and marine hospitals, Indian boarding schools, sanitariums, and the numerous other Federal institutions.

Our Army hospitals used 13,756 pounds of oleo last year. The naval hospitals used 5,752 pounds, the marine hospitals 4,658 pounds. Veterans' Administration hospitals used 176,754 pounds. These institutions, however, used a great deal of butter also, which is some consolation. The national soldiers' homes used the enormous sum of 410,110 pounds of oleo during the fiscal year 1930–31. Over the same period they used only 340,697 pounds of butter. In the face of the technical information available to all of these institutions, it seems little short of criminal to serve oleo to our sick and convalescing Civil, Spanish, and World War veterans and their widows, who need the most nutritious food to regain the health they have lost and are seeking in these hospitals and homes.

The foregoing figures on the use and consumption of oleo in Government institutions were taken from a study made by Senator BLAINE, of Wisconsin.

INCONSISTENCY OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

The Federal Government attempts to encourage, promote, and assist agriculture by the expenditure of millions of dollars each year. By laws—Federal, State, and local—the farmer is required to maintain certain standards of sanitation. He is obliged to lay out a large capital investment for properly constructed barns, milk houses, and equipment. Many farmers lose some of their cattle because Government regulations require the eradication of tuberculosis in their herds. These expenditures and exactions are made in the interest of the public health. They assure the public a wholesome dairy product for its consumption.

Since the Government requires the expenditure of these enormous sums in the interest of the production of wholesome dairy products, thus raising the cost of production tremendously, it ought to spend its money for the purchase of wholesome butter for consumption by its wards rather than a manufactured product which is made from imported materials produced under costs of production much below ours and under sanitary conditions frequently known to be filthy. There is no justification for the use of oleomargarine by our governmental institutions. I can not criticize too harshly the policy that allows this product to be used in our hospitals.

The Hoover administration will not do the practical thing in the interest of the farmer or the common folks, but when it comes to serving the great financial and manufacturing interests of the country it responds to the call without delay. This is just another illustration of the failure of the Hoover administration to carry out its 1928 platform pledge to place agriculture on a parity with other industries.

The enactment of this bill will add somewhat to the cost of government, but the benefits to the sick and to the farmers will more than justify it. My bill if enacted into law would require no elaborate machinery for its enforcement. A simple order from each department head would prevent further use of oleo in any Government institution. Its effect on the dairy industry would be felt within a month.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the subcommittee conducting the hearings on this measure and formulating the provisions, I wish to join in the tribute that has been paid to our distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. It has been my pleasure during the past eight or more years to be a member of this subcommittee, of which the gentleman has been a member during all of the same period.

Throughout that service I have been struck with his uniform fairness and his splendid ability. As I have said before, the Committee on Appropriations through these years of which I have any knowledge of its work has been one that has been distinguished by its freedom from political considerations in dealing with the items of appropriation which come before it. [Applause.]

Under the late lamented Martin B. Madden, under Mr. WOOD of Indiana, and now under Mr. BYRNS, of Tennessee, it has been the spirit and purpose of the committee to serve the taxpayers of America. [Applause.] Sometimes the committee finds its work difficult, especially when legislation is ground out like the salt of the sea calling for ever-increasing appropriations.

I agree with the suggestion which has often been made that it is not the purpose of that committee to legislate nor to endeavor to take over the prescribed duties of the legislative committees of the House, nor to restrict the scope and sphere of those committees.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THATCHER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. During the gentleman's long and able service on that committee has he known of any rule or regulation that in any wise circumscribes or limits the rights of a member of the committee to question a bureau head or to exercise his rights and prerogatives as a Representative?

Mr. THATCHER. Certainly not.

Mr. BLANTON. Has he not just as many rights on that committee as he has on any other committees of the House?

Mr. THATCHER. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. And he asks questions whenever he desires to do so?

Mr. THATCHER. Certainly; and I think that right is pretty well exercised by its members.

Now, on the general subject of appropriations. I can not go into that subject at any length, but one or two thoughts occur to me, and I venture to make some observations. One thought is that unless there is cooperation on the part of the legislative committees of the two Houses we of the Appropriations Committee can not at all accomplish the service we ought to accomplish in protecting the taxpayers of the country.

During the past few years, because of the prosperity, or apparent prosperity, of the Nation, it seems that all departments of government—national, State, municipal, and local—have engaged in the pleasant pastime of creating obligations for every type of public improvement. Of course, that is altogether worthy if the governmental treasuries may justify it. But we have been engaged in the great practice of spending money in this Nation—Federal, State, and municipal funds—and this is undoubtedly one of the contributing factors to our condition of depression to-day.

Also the great burden brought about by the World War—$45,000,000,000 of indebtedness—has undoubtedly been another very important factor in this equation. Doubtless there are yet other factors, about which there is more or less disagreement. So it is the province of this particular committee—that on appropriations—to do what it can to protect the Federal taxpayers of the Nation, because you can not make appropriations indefinitely without increasing taxes indefinitely.

In this particular bill, which is the largest supply bill coming before the House, we have the combination of the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department.

The measure carries a total for the year 1933 of $254,311,988 of "regular annual appropriations" as distinguished from "permanent and indefinite appropriations." The estimated permanent and indefinite appropriations for 1933 amount to $1,161,522,917. They are made up in large measure of the amounts necessary to be set apart for the sinking fund, to amortize or pay off our national indebtedness, to pay the interest on the national indebtedness, and to meet various other items which come under that same heading of "permanent and indefinite appropriations."

While we have been able to save on the regular annual appropriations in this bill as compared with those of 1932 the total sum of $7,391,125, yet under the heading of "permanent and indefinite appropriations," which are automatic in character and not subject to our control, we have an increase over 1932 of $118,701,533, or a net increase for 1933 in both classes of appropriations amounting to $49,718,300 for the entire Treasury Department.

As to the Post Office Department, this bill carries, as reported to the House, $805,586,575, as compared with total regular annual appropriations for 1932 for the department the total of $842,883,777.

The Budget estimates for 1933 for the Post Office Department were $813,559,487. The decreases under the appropriations for 1932, as carried in this bill, amount to $37,297,202, or a decrease in this bill under the Budget estimates of $7,972,912.

Then for the Post Office Department there are carried some permanent and indefinite appropriations similar to those I have just mentioned with reference to the Treasury Department. Those for 1932 were $200,000, and the estimate for 1933 is $165,000, making the decrease there $35,000. So the total "regular annual appropriations" for 1933 as carried in this bill are $813,559,487; and this total supplemented by the automatic items falling under the head of "permanent and indefinite" appropriations, yield a grand total for the next fiscal year, 1933, of $813,724,447.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

I herewith include, as a part of my remarks, the following self-explanatory data:

1933 Treasury-Post Office Departments appropriation bill

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Total regular annual appropriations for 1932	$261,703,113
Budget estimates for 1933	269,016,418
Amount carried in this bill (1933)	254,311,988
Decrease under 1932 appropriations	7,391,125
Decrease under 1933 Budget estimates	14,704,430

PERMANENT AND INDEFINITE APPROPRIATIONS

Estimated appropriations for 1932	1,042,821,384
Estimated appropriations for 1933	1,161,522,917
Increase over 1932	118,701,533

PERMANENT AND INDEFINITE APPROPRIATIONS INCLUDE PUBLIC-DEBT REQUIREMENTS

Thus, for 1932, sinking fund	411,771,300
Interest on public debt	605,000,000
Total, 1932	1,016,771,300
For 1933, sinking fund	426,489,600
Interest on public debt	640,000,000
Total, 1933	1,066,489,600
Increase, 1933 over 1932	49,718,300

SUMMARY, TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Total regular annual appropriations, 1932	261,703,113
Permanent and indefinite appropriations, 1932	1,042,821,384
Total for 1932	1,304,524,497
Total regular annual appropriations, 1933	254,311,988
Permanent and indefinite appropriations, 1933	1,161,522,917
Total for 1933	1,415,834,905
1933 increase over 1932 total regular annual appropriations and permanent and indefinite appropriations	111,310,408

Though the decrease of the 1933 regular annual appropriations under those for 1932 is $7,391,125, there is an increase in permanent and indefinite appropriations for 1933 over those for 1932 of $118,701,533; making the net increase of grand total of 1933 appropriations for the Treasury Department over those for 1932 of $111,310,408.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Total regular annual appropriations for 1932	842,883,777

In the preparation of these estimates by the Budget and by the departmental heads it is apparent that they have made an earnest effort to pare the expenses for these two great departments as much as they deemed it to be wise, and the Appropriations Committee and the subcommittee reporting this bill have had the benefit of their work.

Conditions often develop, however, after estimates are submitted by the Budget which, even from the standpoint of the department and the standpoint of the Bureau of the Budget, justify further decreases. In other cases the subcommittee upon its hearings reach the conclusion that reductions may be made.

It is to the credit of the Appropriations Committee that during all the years of its history since the Budget was inaugurated in 1921, in session after session, it has been able to cut below the Budget figures without any serious impairment of governmental functions. The total which has thus been pared from the Budget estimates since the Bureau of the Budget was installed has amounted to several hundred millions of dollars; and in this session of Congress, running true to form, our committee and the Congress are cutting below the Budget estimates.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THATCHER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Our friend from Nevada a moment ago criticized our friend from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS] for the amendments he offered and had passed. I want to ask our friend from Kentucky if it is not a fact that the amendments offered from the floor by our good friend from Arizona were not committee amendments authorized by the committee?

Mr. THATCHER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Backed by that committee of 35 Members of the House?

Mr. THATCHER. They were considered by the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. And our friend from Arizona, who is an active member of the committee, is probably working on committee work now, and that is the reason he was not here to answer our friend from Nevada. They were committee amendments, all of them.

Mr. ARENTZ. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I will say that I spoke to the gentleman from Arizona and gave him fair warning that I was going to make my little talk this afternoon.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I realize that.

Mr. ARENTZ. I was perfectly fair with the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. BLANTON. But what I wanted to call attention to was the fact that those amendments were committee amendments, authorized by the Appropriations Committee of 35 members.

Mr. ARENTZ. All right; we will leave it to the gentleman from Arizona to answer, and when he does I believe that the gentleman will find that he will admit himself that he was wrong. He is a little impetuous sometimes.

Mr. THATCHER. I may say, touching that particular matter, as a member of the committee I had great faith in the ability and knowledge of the gentleman from Arizona who proposed these amendments; and I felt that, as he is a representative of the mining interests of the country, or at least represents sections of the country interested in mining, his judgment was a more mature one than my own, and that the items that were omitted or scaled were items that might reasonably wait for a future time for consideration, and for that reason I was influenced to vote in committee as I did.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman further, if he happened to hear the address over the radio last night of Merle Thorpe, the editor of the Nation's Business?

Mr. THATCHER. I did not hear it.

Mr. BLANTON. It is such a splendid address and it so well upholds the position taken by our friend from Kentucky with regard to the paring of Budget estimates, I thought the gentleman might want to attach some of those remarks to his speech this afternoon.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself seven more minutes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THATCHER. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Surely the committee was not informed by the gentleman from Arizona that in cutting the item of "Economics of mineral industries" from $273,430 down to $225,000, which was the amount left in the bill, "$221,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia," leaving only $4,000 for all the field work throughout the entire United States to furnish the material for $221,000 worth of office work here in Washington. That was not explained to the gentleman, was it?

Mr. THATCHER. The matter was not gone into in detail.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is the fact.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THATCHER. I yield for a short question.

Mr. GOSS. I propounded an inquiry of the gentleman from Arizona with reference to those items when the bill was being read under the 5-minute rule, and the gentleman admitted on the floor of the House that these reductions were purely arbitrary, one of them as much as $50,000.

Mr. THATCHER. My understanding was, and has been, that these were items relating to matters that could reasonably, or properly, wait, because of the financial stress of the country.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THATCHER. Yes; for a brief question.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to ask whether the statement made by the gentleman from Colorado is correct?

Mr. THATCHER. I do not know the details, and, as I have said, the details were not discussed, and they were included in the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill. The representation was made that these were matters that could go over, and that they would represent a legitimate saving under present conditions.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. If the gentleman will yield, I will state that he will find they are correct by looking at page 4469 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 22 last.

Mr. THATCHER. I may say that the gentleman from Arizona, who can usually take care of himself, will doubtless undertake to do so as regards these matters. So far as my own purpose is concerned, I always want to vote for what seems to be reasonable and just with respect to appropriations; and my own judgment was, from the representations that were made by a man who is an experienced engineer and who represents a mining State, that these were legitimate cuts; and under present conditions were fully justified.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. THATCHER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Merle Thorpe, editor of Nation's Business, said last night that Congress could cut these appropriations down if they would and that the business men of the Nation expected Congress to do it, and that they did not want it put off. They wanted the appropriations cut down and the Nation's Budget balanced now.

Mr. KELLER. I wonder if the gentleman will yield?

Mr. THATCHER. For a question; yes.

Mr. KELLER. The question I would like to ask is: Who are the business men that Mr. Thorpe speaks for, and how many of them are there?

Mr. BLANTON. They are the taxpayers of the Nation.

Mr. KELLER. Wait a minute. I asked specifically. That is a very general statement, and I do not want that. I want an exact statement.

Mr. BLANTON. He purported to speak for the taxpayers of the Nation.

Mr. KELLER. Oh, yes; so do I—a darned sight more than he does; but I do not make any pretense about it. I am just asking the question whom he really does speak for.

Mr. THATCHER. I will say to the gentlemen now raising the question, and for whose judgment I also have great respect, that if these items of decrease concerning mining operations are going to work a hardship, I am sorry; but as to that I do not know. The information that came to the committee was to the effect that these operations would not be impaired.

Now, concerning the items for air mail and the ocean-going mail, which call for substantial appropriations for the Post Office Department. The Postmaster General is charged with the duty and responsibility, which Congress gave him, to make the contracts for these operations.

In the limited time which our subcommittee must sit, it had not the opportunity to go into the basic questions of policy. As a member of the subcommittee, I have believed that we should take the opportunity, after this bill is passed, to go into the subject more thoroughly—not only for the protection of the subcommittee, not only for the protection of the Appropriations Committee, but for the protection of the House as well.

The Postmaster General told our subcommittee that he was charged with this responsibility, and that to the best of his experience and capacity he was seeking to discharge that responsibility, both as to the ocean-going mail and the air mail.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise informally.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOWARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9699 and had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—APPLICATION OF NEW ORLEANS & SOUTH AMERICAN STEAMSHIP CO. FOR A MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, the New Orleans & South American Steamship Co. (Inc.) (Nosa Line) operators and pioneers of the only direct steamship service from United States ports of the Gulf of Mexico to the west coast of South America, have requested the certification of a foreign mail route—from New Orleans (via other United States Gulf ports at which contractor's vessels may be required to call to load and/or discharge cargo) to Talcahuano (via ports in Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, and Chile)—distance about 4,872 nautical miles—and suggested that a contract for the carriage of the United States foreign mails on this route be advertised. This action was taken on December 9, 1931, in a communication to Hon. Walter F. Brown, Postmaster General.

The application of the New Orleans & South American Steamship Co. was prompted by the serious situation in which the line found itself, its current losses being so great that unless it can obtain aid authorized for American shipping under the merchant marine act it may be obliged to discontinue operation. In this event the trade flowing from the entire Mississippi Valley through Gulf ports to South America would fall largely to the ships of other nations operating at far lower costs and supported by aggressive Government policies.

The high cost of operating ships under the American flag as compared with foreign competition is such that the diminished cargo and current low freight rates (depressed by competition) permit no escape from severe losses on every voyage. There is no prospect of early substantial improvement in either volume of cargo or freight rate.

That the line provides an essential service is amply demonstrated by the fact that the American exports carried originate at points throughout the entire Mississippi Basin as far west as Denver.

Incorporated under the laws of the State of Louisiana in 1918, the company has been continuously engaged in steamship operations in the Caribbean and to the west coast of South America. It owns six vessels, all, except one, of which were originally purchased from the United States Shipping Board. For three of these vessels the United States Shipping Board received about $200 per dead-weight ton. Under existing conditions the steamship company is able to operate only three, but has to carry the capital investment of all.

It is interesting to note that this is one of the few essential services in the American foreign trade which, in its early stages, was not left dependent for development upon the United States Shipping Board. This steamship company operated Shipping Board vessels in this trade for only one year (1920); since this time it has continuously operated to date in the west coast of South American trade wholly for its own account and risk. It does not operate any foreign-trade tonnage. The pioneering and development of this service has, therefore, cost the United States Government very little, if anything.

The benefit of this route and service to American foreign trade is apparent in the fact that while the line in its early development carried outward a limited number of raw materials and crude manufactures originating from a limited number of shippers, it is now carrying a widely diversified list of higher-class merchandise originating throughout a much wider territory from a heavily multiplied number of shippers. Many manufacturers and merchants formerly strangers to the South American markets have found their way into export trade through this line. The Mississippi Valley region has received its South American products by this route. Their service, coordinated with the railway and barge-line systems, maintains special rates to foster the movement of freight for South America through Gulf ports. This national policy, sanctioned by the Interstate Commerce Commission, would be of little value in the foreign trade without American steamship lines from the Gulf ports to the foreign markets, of which Latin America is the most promising. In fact, this steamship line may be considered an extension of the north and south railroads and the barge system, and is equally deserving of assistance provided by Federal law in the interest of the country's domestic and foreign transportation.

DESCRIPTION OF MAIL ROUTE

The ports of call are as follows:

Ports:	Miles between ports
Cristobal, Canal Zone	1,390
Through canal	44
Buenaventura, Colombia	356
Guayaquil, Ecuador	612
Talara, Peru	186
Callao, Peru	539
Mollendo, Peru	459
Arica, Chile	132
Tocopilla, Chile	222
Antofagasta, Chile	112
Valparaiso, Chile	571
San Antonio, Chile	42
Talcahuano, Chile	207
Total	4,872

Direct calls are also made at minor ports when sufficient cargo is offered.

DESIRABILITY OF MAIL SERVICE

The Nosa Line provides the only direct service with United States flag vessels from the Gulf ports of the United States to the west coast of South America, affording shippers an opportunity of forwarding and receiving their mail by the same vessels carrying their merchandise. The route and service have the full support of the shippers interested in the development of Latin American trade with the United States, as well as the commercial indorsement of the various civic organizations and associations at Gulf ports and located at the great centers of the Mississippi Valley.

REASONS FOR DIRECT SERVICE

It will be noted that the fact is stressed to some extent that the Nosa Line is the only direct service to the countries of the west coast of South America from the Gulf. Goods shipped by other lines operating from the Gulf destined for west coast ports require to be transshipped at the Panama Canal. A large part of these goods originating in the United States are thus handed over to foreign-flag vessels for delivery at destination.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY AND MIDDLE WEST ENTITLED TO DIRECT SERVICE

In my opinion, this point is worthy of consideration. Goods of American manufacturers are produced and sold in competition with those produced abroad, and in order to compete successfully with foreign producers, American manufacturers must keep their costs down to a minimum. This has led manufacturers to look to the costs of packing and crating with the result that in many instances goods are packed in crates of so light a structure that with the additional handling necessitated by transshipment at the canal, the shipments are liable to considerable damage and may arrive at port of destination badly mutilated in contrast to goods shipped from Europe, which are carried direct by foreign lines without transshipment. We believe that American manufacturers are entitled to the same direct service and should have the assurance that a direct service will be maintained so that they will not be subject to the vagaries of foreign lines and the delays which may arise on account of transshipment. Again, when we consider the stupendous amount of American capital invested in the various enterprises in the South American countries—Isaac Marcosson has stated in a recently published article that American capital invested in South American countries amounts to $3,000,000,000—it seems logical that the means of transportation of the goods required in the development and operation of these enterprises, and to a large extent the transportation of their products to the United States should be by means of American vessels.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY NEEDS DIRECT SERVICE FROM GULF

Furthermore the industries of the Middle West and on the areas located in the Mississippi Valley have grown apace in the last few years, and a considerable amount of capital has been invested in improving inland waterways and in providing barge equipment to give an easy and cheap means of transporting their products to New Orleans for export. It would, therefore, seem that the next step should be to provide regular sailings of American vessels to receive these products and transport same direct to the various countries to which they are consigned.

COMPETITION

The Nosa Line encounters severe competition from two regular lines out of New Orleans, the United Fruit Co. and the Standard Fruit Co. These lines operate several vessels from New Orleans to the Panama Canal and solicit freight destined for ports on the west coast of South America, which cargo is transshipped at the canal to other lines. The majority of these connecting-line vessels are of foreign registry.

The United Fruit Co. operates American vessels to the canal. The Standard Fruit Co. operates only foreign-flag ships on this route.

FOREIGN TRANSSHIPMENT COMPETITION

These two companies have various transshipment arrangements with other lines which extend their competition with us for the west coast of South America business.

These companies are as follows: Pacific Steam Navigation Co. (British), Campagnie Generale Transatlantique (French), Roland Line (German), Hamburg-American Line (German), Royal Netherlands Steamship Co. (Dutch), Navigazione Generale Italiana (Italian), North German Lloyd (German).

These companies are some of the strongest European steamship companies, and in addition to the serious competition that we have from them on cargo originating in the United States, we also suffer from their competition on coastal business; furthermore, strong competition is encountered from foreign vessels operating out of east-coast ports of the United States.

FOREIGN COMPETITION FROM UNITED STATES PORTS

It is of interest to note the different nationalities and number of transits made by the vessels operated by the various steamship companies from United States ports to the west coast of South America during this period. These are as follows:

Transits westbound: Cia. Sud. Amer. de Vapores, Chilean 14; Grace Line (Inc.), American 49; Isthmian Steamship Co., American 2, British 1, Greek 1; Dupont de Nemours, British 3, Danish 5; Panama Railroad Steamship Co., American 14; Pacific Steam Navigation Co., British 28; Nosa Line, American 25; William Hansen, Norwegian 2; Chile Steamship Co., American 4; International Freighting Co., British 4; R. W. James & Co., Chilean 2; Moore & McCormack, British 1, Norwegian 1, American 1; Wessel Duval & Co., British 3, Danish 1; others, American 1, British 5, Swedish 1, Norwegian 2.

Summarized, this shows that of 171 transits of vessels originating in ports of the United States, only 96 were American-flag vessels.

EUROPEAN CARGO TO WEST COAST OF SOUTH AMERICA

The competition to which American exporters are subject from European manufacturers: According to the official record of the Panama Canal, the traffic passing through the Canal from Atlantic to Pacific destined for ports on the west coast of South America for the calendar year of 1930 was as follows:

From:	Tons cargo
United States	310,903
Europe	727,640

This competition is bound to increase, inasmuch as European countries are making strenuous efforts to increase their field in the markets of Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, and Bolivia. American steamships are a vital arm of the American exporters, inasmuch as every line—American and foreign—is vitally interested in developing a flow of commerce to and from its home port, at which its voyages must begin and end.

It should be further noted that the average cargo per transit of vessels operated from ports of the United States is 1,915 tons, as against 3,817 tons average per transit on vessels from European ports. This would indicate a surplus of foreign-flag vessels being operated on the United States of America route. On account of their low operating costs they are evidently enabled to operate on a small revenue and thus are in a position to operate where American vessels find it practically impossible.

VALUE IN NATIONAL DEFENSE

The officers and crews of the Nosa Line vessels, by reason of their familiarity with the route, possess exceptional knowledge of the waters of the Gulf and Caribbean Sea, and the west coast of South America. They are obliged to enter and leave the open roadsteads of South America in all kinds of weather and to load and discharge cargo by means of lighters.

The value of this knowledge and training to the national defense must be apparent. The maintenance of a large fleet of fine cargo vessels under the American flag can be considered an asset to the naval forces in times of emergency.

A majority of officers are enrolled in the United States Naval Reserve.

FOREIGN-FLAG TIME-CHARTERED VESSELS

It would be more profitable for them to operate chartered vessels of foreign registry on this route, but this, they consider, would be a backward step in the history of the American merchant marine. Having in mind the amount of pioneering which was done during the past years and the money invested in securing suitable American vessels for the trade, they prefer to carry on. However, this service can not be maintained with American-flag vessels without some form of Government assistance, and such aid can only be extended through the medium of a postal contract.

Table showing Nosa Line expenditures in Gulf ports for years indicated 80 per cent of which money was spent in New Orleans

The company spends many hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in New Orleans and other Gulf ports. It spent in the port of New Orleans and other Gulf ports for wages and supplies in 1929, $713,354; in 1930, $675,457; and in 1931, $542,180. Of this, about 80 per cent was spent in New Orleans and 20 per cent elsewhere around the Gulf. It is subject to the severest kind of competition from foreign steamship lines, which operate on a far lower operating scale. The company, in its application to the Post Office Department, reported that it had not had a profitable voyage since the spring of 1930. If it is forced to suspend, the officials of the company expect that they would be superseded by a foreign line directly from New Orleans to the west coast of South America, which would result in a direct loss to American labor and business incident to ship repairs and ship supplies. The German lines which operate south of the Panama Canal are flooding the country with advertisements and solicitation, asking shippers to route their cargo south of the Canal via the large number of German ships from Europe which call at all the west coast ports south of Panama.

The New Orleans & South American Steamship Co. is not a Shipping Board line. It has been operated for private risk and account and, it would seem, is deserving of the help which the Jones-White Act contemplated for American steamship lines. I understand that the chief difficulty is the lack of appropriation. The amount which the company seeks is, however, not large, as they do not wish a contract at this time for the full 10 years authorized by the Jones-White Act, or even at the maximum rate for ships of the class they operate. The amount of the contract would probably not exceed $100,000 per annum.

I hope that the Appropriations Committee can make provision for this small amount, to keep in existence a line which is not only serving the export trade of the Delta and the entire Mississippi Valley but also by its expenditures gives employment to much labor not only on its ships but in the port of New Orleans. It is the only direct service under the American flag that has ever been operated between the Gulf and the west coast of South America.

The executive assistant to the Postmaster General, under date of February 29, this year, advised me, because of the necessity of keeping down expenses and conserving appropriations, no new mail routes under the merchant marine act are being established at this time. This, of course, without prejudice to the consideration of the company's application when it becomes possible to authorize additional routes.

In view of the foregoing convincing arguments I would reasonably anticipate that the department would advertise for bids which would ultimately prove the sustenance of this line and the elimination of any foreign line from superseding this Louisiana incorporated American steamship line.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9203) entitled "An act to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. SHIPSTEAD and Mr. FLETCHER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the United States Government Printing Office.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 9203. An act to improve the facilities of the Federal reserve system for the service of commerce, industry, and agriculture, to provide means for meeting the needs of member banks in exceptional circumstances, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 315. An act for the relief of Lemuel Simpson.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 4145. An act for the relief of Thomas C. LaForge;

H. R. 4150. An act authorizing issuance of patents in fee to Benjamin Spottedhorse and Horse Spottedhorse for certain lands;

H. R. 6347. An act for the relief of Neal D. Borum;

H. R. 8163. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Pecatonica River at Harrison, in Winnebago County, State of Illinois;

H. R. 8171. An act granting consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Kankakee River at Momence, in Kankakee County, State of Illinois;

H. R. 8238. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a free highway bridge across the Fox River at Algonquin, in McHenry County, State of Illinois;

H. R. 8250. An act granting authority to the Texas State Highway Commission to maintain and operate, as constructed, a free highway bridge across Trinity River between the counties of Navarro and Henderson, in the State of Texas;

H. R. 8324. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Rock River at Byron, in Ogle County, State of Illinois; and

H. R. 8327. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Illinois to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Rock River at Oregon, in Ogle County, State of Illinois.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9699.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HOWARD in the chair.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, resuming my remarks, I want to say that as regards the work of the Post Office Department, these contracts have been delegated to the department by Congress, and Congress can not complain because the responsibility has been exercised. If there is any abuse of the discretion, that is a proper subject for complaint; but unless or until an abuse is shown, no criticism can properly be lodged against the department.

We are spending a great deal of money for these matters. Other nations of the world are spending money for air mail purposes and for their shipping. We see a state of war to-day in the Orient, induced chiefly by economic considerations. We are constantly told in this House and out of it of the great importance of increasing our foreign trade; and that is, indeed, an important feature of our economic welfare. Congress adopted the policy which is embraced in the present merchant marine act and the policy embraced in the air mail acts; and if we are to keep ships on the sea and in the air, we have to meet the competition of subventions at the hands of foreign governments. Yet the payment of subsidies always involves, in my judgment, a dangerous procedure, and it must be attended with the greatest care and scrutiny.

If I were the Postmaster General of this country, I would not want as much responsibility in those matters as obtains with him to-day. I have no doubt that this is his view of the subject, because the activities involved are so great, the expenditures so large, and the likelihood of criticism so sure that I think any man who is thoughtful and considerate would feel that there ought to be a community of responsibility in the inauguration and carrying out of policies of this character. However, we are building up on the seas under these laws a wonderful fleet of ships, which will be second to none in the entire world when the program is completed.

As to the air, this is the day of a million contacts, the age of wonderful adventures. We have to meet the competition of other countries. To-day two great air lines operate from Europe to South America—once from France and one from Germany. Our own Latin American air lines cost this country something like $1.89 per mile for operation. France pays about $3.30 per mile, as I recall, for operation of its air line to and over South America.

The postal receipts that come through the operation of our Latin American air lines flow into our Treasury, and amounted in 1930 to $823,000 and in 1931 to $1,432,000; whereas the receipts which the French concern—the Corporation Aero-Postale of France—through the operation of its lines in South America, go into its own coffers. France, during the past year, I am advised, expended something like $37,000,000 for the expansion of its aviation services and activities; and so we have to meet that competition, and to meet it the expenditure of money is required. We may be going too fast in this program. I am not sure about that; but it is shown by the testimony in these hearings that the receipts being derived by our Government through the operation of our Latin American air lines—the lines extending out of this country to the southward—are constantly increasing; and the testimony is also to the effect that possibly within a few years—some say four or five years—the receipts may be sufficient to pay the basic cost of these Latin American air-line operations. I do not know about that, but the receipts are increasing at a goodly rate. There was established down the west coast at first a line about 6,300 miles in length, once a week each way, operated by the Pan-American Grace Airways—a home concern—seven days out of New York via the Panama Canal, and southward where the lone condor flies, to Chile, thence across the Andes Mountains to Buenos Aires and Montevideo—a 7-day service. That frequency was later increased until we have now a twice-a-week service, back and forth, between these widely separated termini, and these great planes are carrying passengers and mail and making important contacts of trade.

The postal receipts on the west-coast route have quadrupled, as I recall it, by reason of the fact of this twice-a-week frequency. Down the east coast, out of Miami southward to San Juan, thence on to Paramaribo; thence onward to Buenos Aires by Rio de Janeiro, another line, nearly 7,500 miles long—operated by the Pan-American Airways, also an all-American concern—has been established under appropriations made by Congress. This is a once-a-week service each way. The postal receipts on that line are also increasing at an excellent rate; and testimony before our committee was to the effect that if there were a twice-a-week frequency, the receipts might be greatly augmented. But at this time neither the committee nor the Post Office Department has deemed it wise—because of the financial situation—to increase the expense of this operation. Whether or not the charges are too much for the carrying of domestic and foreign mail I do not know. The postal officials insist that they have been handling these matters to the best of their ability, and that they have secured the lowest rates consistent with the conditions of safety involved; and it is a remarkable fact, and a testimony to the scientific genius and capacity of American business men, inventors, mechanics, and pilots that in all these flights to Latin America running over several years of service no single loss of life in the air has occurred. Such has been the condition of safety obtaining in the operation of those lines. The record of safety in our domestic air mail operations is also of the most creditable character. In fact, our own country leads the world in its aviation safety record.

If we are to have Latin American trade we must reach out for it. We must have our contacts there, because trade follows the flag, whether it be our flag or a flag of some other country. For years it has been a reproach to the American people that only about 3 per cent of American commerce was carried in American bottoms. That was the reason that led to the enactment of the present merchant marine act. Reasons of that sort also obtained in respect to our foreign air service. So if this money is expended seasonably and wisely, we will get proper returns for it. I am one of those who believe that in the years to come, in the generations of the future, when this goodly land of ours shall be filled with a teeming population, we will have to go more and more to other lands for trade, for commerce, and possibly for settlement; and, naturally, the regions to which our people will go will be to Central and South America. The Latin American nations have forms of government like our own; they are Republics. They face in the same direction that we face.

These countries have resources, potential and great beyond computation. There in that quarter lies the great Amazon River country; and Brazil, larger than continental United States, the Argentine, Chile, Peru, Venezuela, Columbia, Bolivia, Equador, the great Andean Plateaus, and Central America, with its tropical conditions, and its manifold fruits and products. Those vast and fertile regions, needing population and capital and development, in a proper and friendly sense, will constitute, perhaps in the far future, the safety valve for our own Nation, for our excess population, where our people may go in good spirit, to become part and parcel of those lands, of those peoples. Thinking in terms of generations and centuries, the value of all this to our own land and to the lands to the southward will prove to be of an inestimable character; and the trade and social contacts between the United States of America and these sister republics should be cultivated, for purposes of mutual good and benefit, to the utmost.

Every nation is looking out for trade. War is made for the sake of trade. We prefer peaceful penetration. It is a question as to whether our contacts are wisely made; whether expenditures are reasonable; whether we are proceeding too fast or too slowly. But the purpose is a legitimate one, and every forward-looking nation under the sun to-day is reaching out for trade and commerce, just as we are reaching out; and if we are to have our just share of Latin American trade, we must have these contacts. American shipping and American air mail operations will help us, as the figures will show. Notwithstanding the depression, world-wide as it is and sweeping all through Latin America, our trade and commerce are growing, as far as the percentages are concerned, in those sections of the world.

I here insert certain tables of information concerning our foreign air mail lines.

[2] No air mail revenue.

Concerning domestic air mail, I do not know whether we are paying too much money for that service or not. That is a question that will require great care and study, as far as the duties of Congress may be concerned. The Post Office Department officials insist that they are making the best contracts, the best consistent with the character of the service that should be rendered. I am one of those who believe that the service in the air should be of the very best type and character. Human life is so precious that every safeguard for its safety should be provided. I must commend the officials of the Post Office Department, the Postmaster General, Mr. Brown, the Second Assistant, Mr. Glover, and the air mail staff for the splendid conditions of safety they have insisted on; and, also, I would equally commend the operating companies in both the foreign and domestic air mail service for their great work in providing safety. I do not know whether the Cord Co., or some other company, may be able to carry the mails at one-half the cost to-day or not. Apparently they have submitted no bona fide proposition to that effect; but if they can do it, then, of course, as far as future contracts are concerned, they can get into the picture. If that showing can be made, that fact will influence, and must influence, the Post Office Department in the discretion exercised concerning extended routes in this country.

If the $19,000,000 carried in this bill may be insufficient to maintain our domestic air mail operations as now in effect, I should be glad to see a Budget supplemental estimate for the additional funds required. The question is one of fact, and I am willing for the Bureau of the Budget to determine it. I do not wish the service to be crippled.

I believe that the present set-up of our air mail lines, domestic and foreign, has been wisely made. For this work the department is deserving of our thanks and appreciation. Across our country, east and west, north and south, and over the vast stretches of the two Americas, these great carriers shuttle the air, bearing their precious cargoes of passengers and mail, with the very best pilots in charge and with the best mechanical equipment possible for human ingenuity to create. We are advised that these operating companies have paid no dividends. Some of them may have too many high-priced officials. I do not know about that, and can not know, in the absence of full inquiry.

All of these matters ought to be examined carefully, not in order to tear down but in order constructively to benefit our people and to aid this great industry which means so much to the Nation. We are concerned not only as to commerce but also because of the protective value to our country of a fully developed aviation service. The wars of this age must be largely determined by the air forces of the nations which may be involved. Every pilot that is trained in this service becomes a potential defender of the Nation; and if these routes be wisely planned and operated, not only will our trade and commerce be served thereby but their operation will prove of the greatest protective value to our country and to our flag. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take a few minutes to discuss briefly the splendid record which has been made in this body since it came under Democratic control last December, at which time we elected as Speaker that brilliant Texan plainsman, the Hon. JOHN N. GARNER, who, I predict, will take rank among the first in the long line of distinguished statesmen who have held the high and honorable office he now so capably fills. [Applause.]

I do not believe I can be successfully challenged when I claim for this House a record to date that has not been paralleled by any legislative body in 20 years. It is a record which has won the confidence, the respect, and the praise of the country for the Democratic Party, and is a record which, I believe, will cause the people of the country, almost without respect to party affiliations, to determine to place upon our party, in the election next November, an even broader responsibilty under which we will not only have a larger majority than we now have in this body but will also assume control of the Senate and of the executive branch of the Government. [Applause.]

During the long months which elapsed between the adjournment of the Seventy-first and the convening of the Seventy-second Congress it was freely predicted—and I have no doubt generally expected—that the session of the new Congress would be attended by chaos, and that there would be a continuous struggle between the Democratic House, the Republican Senate, and the Republican President, with the result that little or nothing in a constructive way could or would be accomplished.

The best answer to those who made these predictions and who entertained that opinion is the record of this House, a record to which every Member of this body, indeed every citizen, no matter what his political affiliations may be, may point with pride. In making this record, Democrats have shown that they are willing to cooperate in every possible way for the best interests of the country, that they are patriots before they are partisans, and have given proof that they can and do put mere partisan considerations aside when the interests of the country are at stake, as well as demonstrating that they are willing and have the capacity to legislate in the interest of all of the people.

This policy of cooperation could, and in my opinion would, have continued throughout this session of Congress had the President and some of the leading Republicans not tried to convey the idea to the country that the President and the Republican Party, and they alone, were entitled to all of the credit for every constructive move that has been made during this session of Congress. Many statements have been made, and I think unwisely, by Republican spokesmen who were more interested in the success of their party than they were in the welfare of our country and, in my opinion, for the good of the country should have never been made.

Early in the session I heard Speaker GARNER say, "Any constructive legislation passed by this Congress would have to be almost by unanimous consent," and that is true. In other words, a Democratic House, a Republican Senate, and a Republican President must cooperate in every way possible in order that legislation be passed that could and would relieve the present national chaotic condition that prevails throughout the country brought on by the mismanagement of the party that has been in power for almost 11 years.

The Democratic leaders in the House have proven to the country by their records in this session that they are, at all times, willing to cooperate in every way possible in order that constructive legislation may be passed that will relieve the present national crisis, but they are not going to stand idly by and let the President and his Republican spokesmen claim all the credit for whatever is accomplished during this session, when the President and the country knows that no constructive legislation can be passed during this session without the full cooperation of the Democratic leaders in the House.

Let me, for a moment, direct your attention to some of the outstanding achievements which go to make up this unsurpassed record of wise, constructive, and patriotic legislation.

Under Democratic leadership this House liberalized its rules so that it is no longer possible for a few individuals, as it was in the last Congress, to defeat any opportunity for the House to vote on matters of major importance.

Under Democratic leadership this House passed the bill creating the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, endowed with all the strength of $2,000,000,000, to ease strained circumstances of the banks, railroads, and insurance companies, and to provide new capital for the farm-loan banks with which to afford greatly needed and much desired aid to agriculture.

Under Democratic leadership this House passed the Steagall bill, now known as the Glass-Steagall bill, a measure designed to liberalize credit facilities or expand the credit of the Federal Reserve System, to check deflation by making available $750,000,000 of gold now tied up in the banks and at the same time make available almost $2,000,000,000 of paper securities. This measure, it is believed, will save hundreds of banks from closing and make it possible for a great many business houses to avoid bankruptcy if the Federal Reserve Board will do what they are authorized to do. I am of the opinion that had this legislation been enacted six months or a year ago hundreds of banks and thousands of business institutions that are now closed would have been in business this very day, and that conditions generally would have been very much better than they now are at the present time.

Under Democratic leadership legislation has been enacted whereby a revolving fund of $100,000,000 has been made available out of which the Treasury Department may make advances to Federal land banks with which to increase the borrowing facilities of agriculture and thus avoid the necessity of foreclosing farm mortgages.

Under Democratic leadership this body passed a bill under which the tariff-writing power would be restored exclusively to Congress, where it was intended by the framers of the Constitution it should be; and, furthermore, under this same tariff bill, should it become a law, steps could be taken to bring about a general lowering of the world tariff barriers, which would make possible a freer flow of merchandise and do much toward speeding the return of normal conditions in business and employment.

Under Democratic leadership this House is making a record for economy that, I believe, has not been approached for more than a generation. The work of the Appropriations Committee deserves the praise, not only of every Member of this House, but of every citizen and taxpayer in the country. Confronted with a huge deficit, that by the end of the present fiscal year will be between two and three billions of dollars, the Appropriations Committee set about curtailing expenditures. Notwithstanding the President's order for economy, notwithstanding the paring of requests for appropriations by the Budget Bureau, the Appropriations Committee has, in the four bills which have thus far been reported out—the first deficiency, the Department of Agriculture, the Departments of the Interior, State, Justice, Labor, Commerce, and Treasury and Post Office Department bills—cut the recommendation for appropriations more than $59,509,000 below the estimates of the President and the Budget Bureau. This, ladies and gentlemen, is genuine economy under Democratic leadership, because it is being done, I am certain, without impairing in the slightest the efficiency of a single department or bureau of the Federal Government.

Under the leadership of Democrats the Ways and Means Committee will soon report out a tax bill. I do not know what its provisions will be, but I do know that we are under the imperative necessity of levying not only additional but new taxes. As I have said, the Treasury is faced with a deficit that, by the close of the current fiscal year, will amount to between two and three billions of dollars. It is necessary to balance the Budget, and this can be done only by getting an increased revenue.

The Ways and Means Committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, has been working diligently, faithfully now for many weeks, seeking new revenue and endeavoring to place the additional tax burden where it will rest most equably and lightly, and we hope to be able to report out a tax bill that will be approved as the fairest and the least burdensome to all of the people of any bill it is possible to write. So that, with the Appropriations Committee at one end, paring the appropriations down to the lowest point consistent with Federal efficiency, and the Ways and Means Committee at the other end, devising new taxes and tapping new sources of revenue in an equitable and fair manner, we will before long accomplish that most necessary end, a balancing of the Budget, which is so essential to the preservation, without impairment, of our national credit, and which should revive public confidence and help to bring about a restoration of prosperous conditions among all classes.

In the foregoing I have briefly sketched the major accomplishments of the Democratic House of Representatives during the first part of the first session of the Seventy-second Congress. I repeat, it is a remarkable record, one to challenge the admiration and inspire the confidence of the country. It is an example of what the country may expect when, as I am sure it will do next November, turn over to our party the full responsibility of every branch of government. It is a record in the making of which I, as a Member of the House and as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, am proud to have played a humble part.

I assert again that the record we have made is an enviable record and gleams all the brighter when we compare it with the record of the present administration and of the Congress last preceding. Doubt has given way to determination, and delay to definite action. For two years the Hoover administration and the Republican Congress hesitated between one course and another, with the result that no course was taken, no definite accomplishments were achieved, no constructive program was enacted or even advanced. It was only when the Democratic Party took control of this House that things began to happen. In the very organization of this body we gave evidence of our capacity to work together when, in the election of a Speaker, out of 220 Democratic Members of this body, 219 votes were cast for our candidate, Mr. GARNER, and the two hundred and twentieth vote, his own, could and would have been cast for him had it been necessary. From that day to this we have given proof not only of our capacity to develop a constructive program but of our readiness to cooperate with the opposite party, with the result that confidence is beginning to supplant despair in the business world and we can at least, after more than two long years of gloom and depression, begin to feel that our feet are again planted on the high road that will lead us to a lasting prosperity.

My chief regret is that what we have been able to accomplish in the brief span of less than three months since the Democratic Party took over control of the House of Representatives we were not permitted to do many months ago. During the depressing days of last summer, when the long lines of unemployed extended themselves from the doors of every charitable institution in the land, when banks were failing by the hundreds, when the hum of industry had almost ceased, if the President had called Congress into special session, as he was pleaded with to do, and we had done then what we have done since December under Democratic leadership in this House, it is my firm conviction that the worst would have long been over, that confidence would have been restored, and that business and industry generally would by this time have progressed substantially on the upgrade. Had the President—and he must accept the responsibility for his failure to act—called the Congress together last summer or in the early fall, many a bank that is now closed would have been solvent, many a factory that is now silent would have been running and giving employment to men who need it, and conditions would, in my opinion, have by this time been far—yes, very far—better than they are to-day.

Again, Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen, I repeat the Democrats in the House have proven to the country by their actions in this session of Congress that we are willing, can and will cooperate in order that constructive legislation may be passed that will relieve the present chaotic condition that prevails throughout the country, and let us hope that the President and Republican Members of the House and Senate will show the same spirit we have shown instead of trying to take all the credit to themselves for emergency legislation that can only be passed by the House, the Senate, and the President cooperating with one another, for with conditions the way they are to-day it is no time to play partisan politics. [Applause.]

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON].

(Mr. EATON of Colorado asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks by including a circulation statement of the United States money, a report from the Bureau of Mines, and three sections of the statutes of the United States.)

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, on February 15 I referred to the December 31, 1931, circulation statement of United States money. I now ask that the January 31, 1932, circulation statement be set forth at this place in the RECORD.

[1] Does not include gold bullion or foreign coin other than that held by the Treasury, Federal reserve banks, and Federal reserve agents. Gold held by Federal reserve banks under earmark for foreign account is excluded, and gold held abroad for Federal reserve banks is included.

[2] These amounts are not included in the total since the money held in trust against gold and silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 is included under gold coin and bullion and standard silver dollars, respectively.

[3] The amount of money held in trust against gold and silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 should be deducted from this total before combining it with total money outside of the Treasury to arrive at the stock of money in the United States.

[4] This total includes $55,961,836 gold deposited for the redemption of Federal reserve notes ($692,300 in process of redemption), $27,917,010 lawful money deposited for the redemption of national-bank notes ($16,600,564 in process of redemption, including notes chargeable to the retirement fund), $1,350 lawful money deposited for the retirement of additional circulation (act of May 30, 1908), and $16,162,107 lawful money deposited as a reserve for postal-savings deposits.

[5] Includes money held by the Cuban agency of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta.

[6] The money in circulation includes any paper currency held outside the continental limits of the United States.

[7] Revised figures.

NOTE.—Gold certificates are secured dollar for dollar by gold held in the Treasury for their redemption; silver certificates are secured dollar for dollar by standard silver dollars held in the Treasury for their redemption; United States notes are secured by a gold reserve of $156,039,088 held in the Treasury. This reserve fund may also be used for the redemption of Treasury notes of 1890, which are also secured dollar for dollar by standard silver dollars held in the Treasury; these notes are being canceled and retired on receipt. Federal-reserve notes are obligations of the United States and a first lien on all the assets of the issuing Federal-reserve bank. Federal-reserve notes are secured by the deposit with Federal-reserve agents of a like amount of gold or of gold and such discounted or purchased paper as is eligible under the terms of the Federal reserve act. Federal-reserve banks must maintain a gold reserve of at least 40 per cent, including the gold-redemption fund which must be deposited with the United States Treasurer, against Federal-reserve notes in actual circulation. Lawful money has been deposited with the Treasurer of the United States for retirement of all outstanding Federal-reserve-bank notes. National-bank notes are secured by United States bonds, except where lawful money has been deposited with the Treasurer of the United States for their retirement. A 5 per cent fund is also maintained in lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States for the redemption of national-bank notes secured by Government bonds.

Questions having been asked in debate of the silver stocks of the world, I asked Hon. Scott Turner, Director of the Bureau of Mines, in regard thereto, and he sent me under date of February 11, 1932, a memorandum of Charles W. Merrill, of his bureau, which I set forth here for your information.

DATA ON SILVER STOCK

(For use of Mr. Hedges in connection with request for information by Representative EATON.)

FEBRUARY 11, 1932.

Complete records of gold and silver stocks are not available, but it is possible to estimate their size with a fair degree of accuracy.

The production for the period 1493–1927 of gold and silver has been compiled in Economic Papers 6 and 8, respectively. Precious-metal production prior to the discovery of the Americas, although of great importance to the ancients, would appear relatively insignificant compared to present-day outputs. It can, therefore, be said without fear of serious error that the total possible stocks of gold and silver could not greatly exceed the production since 1492. This production is as follows:

	Gold (fine ounces)	Silver (fine ounces)
1493–1927	1,003,563,329	14,356,724,911
1928	19,700,049	257,925,154
1929	19,500,152	260,970,029
1930	20,160,355	248,139,133
1931 (estimate)	21,000,000	196,100,000
Total	1,083,923,885	15,319,859,227

The Bureau of the Mint makes the following estimates of gold and silver monetary stocks for the end of the calendar year 1930:

Gold:
Authenticated stocks	$11,008,564,000
Unauthenticated stocks	514,015,000
Total monetary gold stocks	11,522,579,000
Fine ounces total monetary gold stocks	557,404,749
Silver: Total monetary silver stocks	4,781,741,000

The figure here given for silver can not be translated to fine ounces, because it represents the face value of coins combined with value of bullion. One item, for instance, is the $851,665,000 monetary silver stock of the United States, which is the face value of coins containing 643,093,000 fine ounces of silver. In other words, this silver is thus priced at $1.324 a fine ounce.

In order to compute the total stocks it would be necessary to add to the monetary stocks figures the quantities of gold and silver held as jewelry, bullion, and in other forms by individuals and by organizations that do not report their holdings as monetary stocks. Precise data on these nonmonetary stocks are lacking. There have been some estimates made by silver students which, although admittedly conjectural, are probably reasonably close to the true figures. The following quotations from a paper by H. N. Lawrie, "The Silver Situation," delivered before the Washington Section of the American Institute of Metallurgical and Mining Engineers, December 18, 1930, present estimates of the stocks of silver in India and China:

The total number of rupees coined in India from 1835 to 1922 was 6,475,000,000, which, at 165 grains of fine silver per rupee, amounts to about 2,226,000,000 fine ounces. There has been practically no silver coined since 1922. Prior to 1835 large quantities of silver coins were put into circulation and the above figures also exclude a large coinage of half-rupee coins. Taking these coinages into account and the net silver imports into India for private account, it is conservatively estimated that the silver reserves in India amount to no less than 5,000,000,000 ounces, representing more than one-third of the world's output since the discovery of America. About one-half of the total reserve was minted into coins, of which 1,200,000,000 1-rupee coins, or about 16 per cent, are now held in government reserves, the remaining 84 per cent being in circulation or hoarding. The 2,500,000,000 ounces which can not be accounted for by minting are in the form of hoarded jewelry or bars.

The silver reserves of China are estimated at 3,000,000,000 ounces, of which over 1,000,000,000 ounces was the net import of silver for the 30 years 1901–1930, and the remainder was brought into the country during the 300 preceding years. An authority on Chinese currency, E. Kann, estimated that the mintage of silver dollars and subsidiary coins since 1891 has a face value of about $2,200,000,000, which, at the rate of 374 grains of fine silver to the dollar, would amount to about 1,700,000,000 fine ounces. The same authority estimates a visible supply of silver in sycee of about 200,000,000 ounces. Foreign silver coins, which formerly had a large circulation in China, such as the Mexican, British, and Saigen dollars, are now being rapidly eliminated, so that 100,000,000 ounces would probably be a close estimate of their silver content. This makes a total of 2,000,000,000 ounces accounted for and 1,000,000,000 ounces still hoarded in the form of jewelry or bullion.

"Estimates regarding the amount of commercial gold in India available for export vary widely, but it is generally agreed that the sum total is large enough to have a most important bearing on Great Britain's monetary position so long as factors now favoring Indian gold sales continue. The 'shroffs,' or private bankers, whose agents are scouring the country for metal and who have been engaged in the gold trade for generations, estimate the amount at £1,500,000,000. Official returns show that the net import of metal since 1900 amounts to £365,000,000, calculating the rupee at 1s. 6d."

From the above data and estimates it appears that over one-half of the gold produced since the discovery of the New World is known to be held as monetary stocks; added to this there is a substantial stock of nonmonetary gold held in various forms in both the Occident and the Orient. The situation in connection with silver can not be defined so precisely. Nevertheless, it appears that well over one-half of the 15,000,000 ounces of silver mined since Columbus discovered America is available but is held largely in the mysterious precious-metal hoards of the Orient.

CHARLES W. MERRILL.

May I also direct the attention of the House to sections 311, 312, 313 of the United States Code of 1926 and ask just how far do the statutes commit the United States to bimetallism? They include full authority to the President to appoint commissioners to an international conference. They are as follows:

SEC. 311. Policy of United States as to bimetallism: It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to continue the use of both gold and silver as standard money, and to coin both gold and silver into money of equal intrinsic and exchangeable value, such equality to be secured through international agreement, or by such safeguards of legislation as will insure the maintenance of the parity in value of the coins of the two metals, and the equal power of every dollar at all times in the markets and in the payment of debts. And it is hereby further declared that the efforts of the Government should be steadily directed to the establishment of such a safe system of bimetallism as will maintain at all times the equal power of every dollar coined or issued by the United States, in the markets and in the payment of debts. (November 1, 1893, ch. 8, 28 Stat. 4.)

SEC. 312. International monetary conference commissioners: Whenever the President of the United States shall determine that the United States should be represented at any international conference called by the United States, or any other country, with a view to securing by international agreement a fixity of relative value between gold and silver as money by means of a common ratio between the metals, with free mintage at such ratio, he may appoint five or more commissioners to such international conference; and for compensation of said commissioners, and for all reasonable expenses connected therewith, to be approved by the Secretary of State, including the proportion to be paid by the United States of the joint expenses of any such conference, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated. (March 3, 1897, ch. 376, 1, 29 Stat. 624.)

SEC. 313. International bimetallism: The provisions of sections 146, 313, 314, 320, 406, 408, 411, 429, 455, and 751 of this title and sections 51, 101, and 178 of title 12, "Banks and banking," are not intended to preclude the accomplishment of international bimetallism whenever conditions shall make it expedient and practicable to secure the same by concurrent action of the leading commercial nations of the world and at a ratio which shall insure permanence of relative value between gold and silver. (Mar. 14, 1900, ch. 41, 14, 31 Stat. 49.)

(Sections 311, 312, and 313 of the Code of the United States, 1926.)

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the House, during the present week, has by resolution provided for an Economy Committee that is to begin the serious business of reducing the expenses of government here in the Capital and elsewhere. Of late years we have had too much Government in business and not enough business in Government. The changes we are bringing about will be helpful to the people and a saving in their taxes. I congratulate the Congress, and the country, on having a real patriot, a real economist, and a man of the people at the head of the Committee on Appropriations. I am glad to pay to my distinguished colleague from Tennessee this deserved tribute. He has served faithfully and well the interests of the people of Tennessee and the Nation for more than a quarter of a century. We are justly proud of Representative J. W. BYRNS, from the Hermitage district of the Volunteer State.

I am glad that in this bill now under consideration we find that many millions of dollars have been saved to the taxpayers through reductions in appropriations over former years. This is the result of his labors and that of his associates on this all-important committee. I hope that this will continue to be the action of the Members of the House on legislation throughout the remainder of this session.

In undertaking to enact laws for the people of the Nation the Congress should continually keep in mind the wisdom and necessity of reducing the cost of government.

This must be stressed from day to day and practiced at all times. Economy and reduction of expense is absolutely essential. We are confronted with a crisis. It must be met and overcome. We are told that there was a deficit in the Treasury for the year 1931 of over $900,000,000, a deficit for 1932 of over $2,100,000,000, and for 1933 an estimated deficit of $1,250,000,000.

With these figures before us we know there must be a change. No nation, no individual can continue to live beyond his income from year to year without financial ruin, distress, and disaster.

We should seek to reduce cost not only of the National Government, but likewise the cost of State, county, and municipal government in our respective districts. The people, as well as Congress, should become aroused to the needs of the hour. There are too many needless offices and too many officers. We are suffering with too much government. It has been wisely said that "a people are best governed who are least governed."

The Capital of the Nation is a fitting place for the right example to be set for the States and counties, along the lines of economy and reduction in expense. Unfortunately, we do not find this here. Instead, millions of dollars are being spent in condemning and destroying entire city blocks of valuable business houses, tearing them down, committing criminal waste in the midst of the greatest panic this country has ever known, and preparations are under way and new buildings are going up, block after block of them, where when completed, thousands of clerks and employees will be placed on the Government pay roll. This, too, must all be paid by the people in taxes. They are already burdened with local, State, and county taxes beyond their ability to pay. More than 600,000 employees are on the Government pay roll to be supported by an already tax-ridden and oppressed people, and this, too, continues in the midst of this most disastrous panic, which has wrought such serious consequences in the broken fortunes of thousands of our people.

Where is the end, and when will we reach it?

MORATORIUM

President Hoover and Congress made a great mistake in extending to the European countries another 12 months' time in which to pay the debts due our people in June last. Germany and the allied governments should have been forced to pay, and to promptly pay, the money they had borrowed of us. I do not believe our own people should be required to raise this extra $100,000,000 in taxes just because the President, through a practice which has now become a fixed habit with him, and a bad one at that, continues to favor Europe at the expense of his own people and country.

I am glad I could register the protest of my people and vote against this proposition, which I did. It is a wise and homely saying that "charity begins at home." How full of wisdom is this saying and how apparent it is to us when we hear the cry for help coming from our own people in the cities and congested centers where there is no employment.

Why not have the $100,000,000 in our Treasury to enable us to minister to the needy and suffering at home. He who fails to provide for his own has already denied the faith.

Republican leadership under President Hoover has reached the stage of political insolvency and clearly is entitled to be adjudged a bankrupt. Its affairs and effects will be wound up in the court of last resort in November, when the jury of sovereign voters of 48 States pass upon the case. There will be no appeal from the verdict. We will again have a Democratic President, who will be first interested in our own people and administer the affairs of America for Americans and not for an ungrateful and selfish people in Europe.

For years the Republican leaders have boasted that only they were capable of running the affairs of this Government, that only under their control could prosperity come and the full dinner pail exist.

How often have we heard of the managers of so-called big business, before elections, telling their employees that their wages and their jobs depended upon the success of the Republican ticket at the polls.

President Hoover, when a candidate, said:

A continuation of the policies of the Republican Party is fundamentally necessary to the further advancement of progress and to the further building up of prosperity.

He even went so far as to predict that poverty would be abolished from the land under Republican rule.

What a false prophet. In less than one year after his election what took place? Bank failures occurred throughout the length and breadth of our Nation. Bankruptcy proceedings on every hand; mortgages foreclosed; securities, stocks, and bonds of all kinds became worthless; industry and business were paralyzed; and to-day 8,000,000 of our people are out of employment and bread lines exist all too often in our cities. In many places State and local charity can not cope longer with the situation. The communities themselves are debt ridden and tax burdened. Revenues have decreased. Mills, mines, factories, and farms are all practically shut down.

Surely this is not the boasted party of prosperity and the full dinner pail. If so, lo, how the mighty hath fallen!

REDUCTION OF EXPENSE

We need to reduce the number on the pay roll in both State and Federal Governments. This is especially true in my own State, where reckless expenditure of the taxpayers' money has been carried on for years. Waste and extravagance is on every hand and should be stopped. Every dollar of taxpayers' earnings should bring honest return from those in control or they should be driven from power.

Duplication, waste, and extravagance is grinding the people to financial slavery and rapidly over the hill to the poorhouse. God forbid that it continue. Honesty should prevail in government, in politics, and in public life. Money spent to win elections should vanish from the earth. None but honest, conscientious men should be placed in charge of the destiny of a great and free people.

Corruption at the ballot box is at the very taproot of our trouble.

BANKERS

Big interests, big bankers, and financiers have done more to bring on the present panic than everything else combined. The bankers of the country forced the moratorium which prevented our collecting $100,000,000 and with this the sacrifice has only begun, and we may, if bankers continue to have their way, assume the burden for ourselves and our children and grandchildren after us, the war debts of the 15 European nations. How long will it take an outraged people to rise up and drive the money changers from the temple—drive them from power—drive them to the same judgment that was pronounced against Judas Iscariot, Benedict Arnold, and all other traitors of the earth?

What a pitiful spectacle at this time, when we look around about us and see what the bankers, who were the advisors for their customers, the keeper of their earnings and savings through life, those whom we trusted, to see now how miserably and cowardly they have failed us in this hour of distress and need. Twenty billion dollars of worthless foreign bonds and stocks and securities have been sold by the bankers here in America and the money sent out of the country. All of it is now lost, while hunger, suffering, and want and suicide from failures and wrecked homes face a suffering and tolerant people.

INTERNATIONAL BANKERS

Our great moneyed interests have been the cause of much of our present trouble. They were the instigators of the President's great mistake made June last when he announced a 12-month delay in the collection of debts due us by foreign nations. The international bankers have been so in love with Europe and other nations and countries that they have lifted the burden of $18,000,000,000 in debts off the people in Europe and fastened it on their own people and customers here in America. They have betrayed their own people. They sold their own customers out to foreigners and lined their pockets with gold from the commissions on the sales of worthless foreign securities to the people of this Nation. On December 31, 1931, America held foreign investments abroad to the amount of $17,968,206,000.

Instead of international bankers we might well call them international betrayers.

We have loaned in past years from our Treasury billions of dollars to Europe. This money was used for Europe's benefit, for national purposes there, and not for international purposes. Some of it was used to equip her armies and build up her navies; some to strengthen her industries.

Now, when we seek to collect a just debt, which is due and unpaid, and for value received in real money, we are denominated as selfish and told we are seeking to destroy, when we need so badly to collect. Legitimate and honest money loaned makes no difference to them—they borrow but do not pay back. Why? Because Europe would have to tax her own people to get and repay the money. And if the money is not had from those who borrowed and used it, where is it to come from?

From the pockets of our people. We sacrifice America for Europe and call this internationalism and a world vision.

Would France, England, or Germany do this for us if conditions were reversed? Not in a million years. We have had enough, and too much of this propaganda fostered in the White House by the President through his boards, bureaus, and bankers.

Let us not longer sacrifice America and Americans. Let us stay within our own borders and develop here a great people and build great institutions of, for, and by Americans. When children in Belgium were hungry we fed them, when children in France were hungry we fed them, when children in Germany were starving we fed them, when Russian children were without food we furnished it—out of the American Treasury. But now when our own people are suffering where are the tears for them?

We must have a new vision; we must have new leadership; we must have another Andrew Jackson to smite our betrayers and drive our bankers from power and restore simplicity of government and honesty of government, and bring it back and lodge it with the people, whence comes all power.

FARM RELIEF

There are 27,000,000 people engaged in farming and agriculture in this country. They produce the wealth of the country; they feed the world; they represent in a very large measure the Nation's purchasing power. Unless agriculture is prosperous, the rest of the Nation soon feels the shock. The farmers are not organized into big companies, with capital behind them. They have no opportunities to raise millions of dollars by floating bonds or selling stock to the public, as do the corporations. Farming is the business of the individual. To-day we have a farm-loan system and a Federal Farm Board; these include certain credit corporations, land banks, intermediate credit banks, and other agencies of credit, on short-term loan basis as a rule, and usually there is so much red tape involved and expense required on the part of the farmer before he can comply with the regulations governing the loans in these institutions that when he seeks relief through these channels he is ofttimes wound up in a foreclosure suit either before he can get the loan or before he is able to repay it.

Surely the farmer is entitled to greater consideration at our hands, and certainly he is entitled to an equal show with industry. The so-called farm relief measures have all too often in the recent past had the effect of relieving the farmer of his farm.

One thing is apparent, that it is necessary under present conditions for the farmers to organize more extensively and to trade cooperatively as much as possible to keep step with industry and other corporations. These organizations must follow as rapidly as possible.

The farmers should organize that he may buy more cheaply and should organize that he may sell his produce at the highest possible price. He should be organized to aggressively fight for his rights before State legislative bodies, and before the Congress.

There should be State and National associations for the protection of the farmers' market and the price he has to pay. The price of farm machinery is out of all proportion to the price of farm products. Machinery that he is required to use and to buy is criminally high. This should be remedied, and if necessary, farmers' cooperative organizations should enter the field and begin the manufacture of such farm machinery as it is possible for them to manufacture, and if need be, the convicts in our State institutions should manufacture certain kinds of farm implements and machinery to be sold to the farmer at cost to the State.

A reduction of the present high-tariff walls and a rigid enforcement of the antitrust laws would help to bring relief in prices and would cheapen machinery. I hope these tariff regulations will soon have the attention of the Congress. Let us negotiate reciprocal tariff agreements and adjustments with other nations and get the wheels of trade in motion and restore friendly feeling once again with the outside world. This will promote the cause of peace.

What the farmer needs is a market for his products. He needs to sell at a fair profit. He must sell at a price in excess of the cost of production. The farmer should be able to sell his corn from 75 cents to $1 per bushel; wheat from $1 to $1.25; cotton at 20 cents per pound, and wool at 30 cents per pound. If these prices prevailed now, the farmer would sell his surplus, take his money and pay off the mortgage, or pay the merchant, and then the merchant could pay the banker, and money would once again circulate. The price of all real estate, all farms, and all the homes would increase in value. The price paid to labor, both on the farm and off it, would increase overnight. Poverty would vanish and no longer would the bread line exist. Agriculture affords $58,000,000,000 of our national wealth. It affords the security for all other kinds of industry. It feeds and clothes the world. It can not and must not longer suffer.

The farmer must be saved any further or greater losses. An industry which produces $10,000,000,000 of wealth per year should have the interest and protection to the fullest extent that this body can give it. For farming is really the only one big industry that this country has. Without the farmer, without the happy farm home, there can be no national security, there can be no permanent peace. He is the sheet anchor of our safety and the keystone in our arch of progress.

The relief projects put into effect here by Congress in the present session have been those largely favoring banks, railroads, and other interests of the capitalistic kind, and not for the relief of the common man. What the farmer needs is not to have more loans but a market to enable him to pay his present loans. He needs to sell his crops and livestock at a reasonable profit, and then he can take care of himself without Government interference. What he wants most is to pay now and not to borrow more money. The trouble is that the farmer's income has been cut 75 per cent as a result of decreased prices on what he produces and sells. There is no equality of opportunity in so far as the farmer is concerned, because of the difference between the inflated value of money and the deflated or lessened value of commodities.

The farmer is compelled to sell in a low market and forced to buy in a high market. He can not pay an inflated debt, or inflated taxes, with a deflated price on commodities. His mortgages fall due and he can not sell enough from his farm at present prices to pay the taxes and interest, to say nothing of the principal of the debt. When his farm is sold it is sacrificed in price, and all is lost to the former owner of his years of toil and effort.

Instead of granting extension of time to the foreign nations, as was done in granting the extension of European debts, it should have been collected, every dollar of it, and our own people saved this extra amount in taxes we must now raise. I favor a moratorium for our own people first. Why not delay for 12 months the debts due by the farmers to the Federal land banks until conditions are improved? This would be a much greater public service and one rendered to our own people. I am glad that I did not vote for an extension of time to these European powers while distress is abroad in our own land and among our own people, who need time in which to pay their obligations. I hope that the committee having in charge the bill introduced by me, being H. R. 8015, for the extension of time for the farmers to pay the Federal land banks their seed, feed, and fertilizer loans, for a period of 12 months, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, will pass this Congress, or a bill of similar import. The farmers need this time in which to pay these debts.

Money is too high. Its value is now excessive. It must be cheapened, and I hope some of the measures that we have heretofore passed may have this effect. The paying and buying power of our people will be restored when money is cheapened and restored to circulation in greater quantity. This would end the need for delay or cancellation of debts at home and abroad.

A great many farmers have lost their farms, thousands of others are about to do so, and a general collapse in agriculture is certain unless we have more money and its value reduced. It is a crime within the law to rob the people of their homes. It has made already many suicides; it has wrecked many happy homes, and through no fault of those who suffer most. A citizen thus deprived of all his property becomes humiliated and depressed, he can no longer have the same high regard for the law and the institutions of his country as before. He does not respect the law which does not afford him protection and equal opportunity with others. So we must stabilize money at a lower value, and then debts can be paid, and automatically an increase in the price of farm commodities would follow.

Let us see what has happened to our people, to our farmers, in the past 10 years, and then we can better understand their difficulties.

Let us take the high prices of 1919 to 1921 on our farm products and the prices that prevail now. Look at the comparison.

	Then	Now
Wheat, per bushel	$3.30	$0.47
Corn, per bushel	1.60	.30
Oats, per bushel	1.00	.20
Eggs, per dozen	.60	.08
Hogs, per pound	.22	.04
Cattle, per pound	.10	.04
Total for commodities	6.82	1.13

A reduction and a loss to the farmer of 80 per cent or better. His purchasing power is now only one-fifth what it was 10 years ago. So, when he pays 8 per cent interest on debts made in 1921, he now really pays five times 8 per cent, or 40 per cent, as interest. And when he made his note 10 years ago for $5,000, and if he is still carrying that same note, he actually owes $25,000 measured in his capacity to pay it from off the farm. For he is compelled to sell five times as much of his farm crops and livestock to meet the debt as when it was made. It is impossible to continue this. We can not pay $5 in return for $1, or even $2 for $1. Something must be done to bring relief. Since 1929 almost two-thirds of the people maintain their prices artificially and prospered at the expense of the other one-third—agriculture. When the reserve of the farmers was used up and their buying power destroyed, and so-called big business had drained the country of the money, then came the stock-market crash. Unfortunately our money supply was gone before our debts were paid. The only honest and just plan now is to enable the people to pay their debts with money as near the same value as when the debts were originally made. This, and this only, is fair to the farmer.

WHAT IS THE REMEDY FOR OUR PRESENT PLIGHT?

Let us reduce the present high-tariff walls, let us reduce the expense of government, let us increase and levy additional income taxes against the wealth of the country, let us begin to live within our incomes, let us deprive ourselves of some of the needless luxuries that we have enjoyed and begin to practice some of the homely virtues advocated by Benjamin Franklin. Let us practice thrift and economy in every branch and in every department of government and in our own business and private affairs. Let us get rid of any favoritism, let us legislate for the masses and not for the classes.

Let American enterprise and energy again assert itself in the world markets. Let the law of supply and demand take its rightful place in our economic structure. Give industry and human enterprise an opportunity. Let us give equal and exact justice to all and special favors to none.

Let us have once again an honest day's work with an honest day's wage. The rich asked for high tariff walls. They got them. We made it difficult for other nations to trade with us. Many American factories moved away and located abroad. Our market was destroyed and labor was discharged.

Relief now is needed by both the farmer and the manufacturer. The tariff law has failed. Confidence is destroyed in present leadership. The happiness and prosperity of a million homes lie buried in the wreckage and the ruin. Suicides, too numerous to mention and too sad to contemplate, have been the harvest. The results have been unfair to the living and unjust to the dead.

AMERICA FIRST

Let us begin to legislate for the common people of America. Let us give our own people and our own institutions our best efforts at public service. In short, we need to get back home and stay at home, within our own borders and attend to our own affairs and business for a season.

Let us forget internationalism. Let Americans stand for America. Europe does not appreciate the sacrifice we have made for her, and we should learn anew the law of self-defense for our own necessary preservation. Let us have friendship for all, entangling alliances with none. Let us have peace, commerce, and honest dealings with all nations and people. Let us have freedom of speech and the press. Let us have religious liberty and personal freedom within the law.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT

Let our States be and remain sovereign. Let our counties be and remain sovereign. Let us again have local self-government and let us have self-supporting communities. The people should control their local affairs. We do not need boards or commissions to tell us what is best for us. This we already know from our own experience in the affairs of men.

We do not need centralization of power here in Washington.

We do not need to burden the public with taxation to support bureaus to carry out centralized functions.

There is danger to a people and a nation when 125,000,000 population, with an abundant supply of the necessities of life, finds itself faced with a deficit in government and almost universal poverty and want, bankruptcy, and ruin on every hand.

In the midst of seeming plenty we starve. The people and the Nation are entitled to a change in party government. A favored few have amassed fortunes under the present régime, while those who have toiled and struggled to produce the wealth of the country have not been permitted to enjoy the fruits of their labor.

The expenditure of a billion dollars a year in excess of receipts is enough to create distrust and misgivings in the minds of the many. Let us remove the Government from Washington back to the people, who are the source from whence comes all its power. Nothing is paid out here which does not come from them in hard-earned taxes.

SOLDIERS' BONUS

I do not favor bond issues ordinarily, but we are not faced by an ordinary situation. The crisis is acute, the demands are great, the homes of our people, the farms, the firesides are at stake. Let us issue bonds whenever necessary to save the lives of our people. To save little children and to give them an equal chance in life. Work and employment must be made available to every man who is honest and willing to work. If he is not able to work, he must be fed. None should go hungry in our midst.

I favor the full and complete payment in cash of the adjusted-compensation certificates of all ex-service men, or the so-called bonus due the soldiers, without any deductions for interest charges against them. This I provided for in House bill No. 8016, which was introduced by me several weeks ago and is now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means. I hope it may become the law of the land and hope that it will meet with the favor of the present Congress. I know it is meritorious and just, for the Government recognizes that it owes to the soldiers these debts. I favor pensions for widows and orphans of all ex-service men regardless of service connections. Why not pay them now, when the money could go into circulation, help relieve poverty and distress in every section of our common country? It would help to clothe the needy and feed the hungry. By paying this debt we would say to the defenders of our Nation that their services were as necessary and as much appreciated as were the services of the railroads, the shipbuilders, and the war profiteers. But we are told that the Legion, in their national convention, did not favor this. I deny that their action was a true expression of the will and wish of a majority of the veterans in this country. Certainly not at the present time. I believe that I can truthfully say that practically every post in the district I have the honor to represent has expressed in resolutions and through individual members a desire for full and immediate cash payment. I know the Members of this House realize this is true over the United States generally.

To illustrate what will take place throughout the country in the event the soldiers' bonus is immediately paid in cash I quote below the records from the Veterans' Bureau in my own congressional district opposite the name of each county, the amount of money that would be available to the soldiers in that county upon the settlement of their certificates, viz:

In my congressional district the following amounts are due the soldiers in the counties therein:

Bedford	$290,862.60
Cannon	123,303.00
Clay	132,162.60
Coffee	231,853.80
Cumberland	157,872.00
De Kalb	196,139.40
Fentress	152,296.80
Franklin	300,784.80
Jackson	187,528.20
Lincoln	350,823.60
Macon	191,433.60
Marshall	214,921.20
Moore	55,710.60
Morgan	187,721.40
Overton	249,490.20

Pickett	$77,487.00
Putnam	327,874.20
Rhea	191,319.80
Rutherford	445,546.80
Smith	213,577.40
Sumner	394,983.60
Trousdale	77,680.20
Wilson	330,220.20

PEACE AND PREPAREDNESS

I deny that the members of the American Legion and its auxiliary are militarists. That charge is unfounded and untrue. The men who have faced machine guns, who have suffered the hardships of war, who have fought in the trenches of Flanders field Crateau Thierry, and the Argonne Forest do not desire another war. They abhor the thought of conflict, death, and destruction. They want peace and stand for peace above all others. They think of war as heartless and cruel. They know of its bloodshed and sacrifice. The memories of their experience are too recent. They know that it frequently fails to settle the very question over which they fought, bled, and saw so many comrades die. The mothers are all against war. The wives are against war. The sisters are against war. Millions of children cry out against war. But the veterans are not sentimentalists. They know the surest way to keep peace in America is for us to be reasonably well prepared for war. It is foolish for America to disarm or to reduce materially the Army, Navy, or aircraft while Europeans arm to the limit. It would be national suicide for us to disarm at this time and under conditions existing in the Far East.

Let the present Congress notify the Nation and the war profiteers now and make it plain that before our young men are again called upon to serve in Army ranks against a foreign foe that all the wealth and materials necessary for the war will be furnished without profit to anyone. That the wealth of this country shall be placed under military control and shall defray the expense of the conflict. Our wealth is not so dear as the most humble life, but it will go far in the future to keep peace. Those who most often promote wars are the ones who stay at home and do not fight, but seek to profit by the sacrifice of the lives of their fellow men. If the wealth of the country is made to bear the expense in the beginning, and it is taken over by the Government, and this is known to be our policy in future wars, then that will mean more to the safety and security of our people than great armies, navies, or aircraft. Machine guns, death-dealing gas, and huge cannon balls and explosives or big battleships will not prevent war half so much as will the announced program, made the law of the land, that in future conflicts the wealth and resources will be brought under Government requisition and title vested in the Nation, as well as the services of its soldiers requisitioned.

This will mean a permanent and lasting peace if all the nations of the earth will adopt and enact laws to put this into effect. World peace will then be assured.

This is much more practical and more effective than all the peace conferences we can call at Geneva or elsewhere. This would be less expensive to the people than our present delegation from America to the so-called peace conference now in session in Europe, who will spend three or four hundred thousand dollars in wining and dining the delegates of foreign nations, who are at heart all unfriendly to us and who would be glad to have the United States involved in every trouble that arises in the Old World. We will have peace in the future when profit is taken out of war. When the profiteer is killed in advance, the war will not materialize. Our property is not certainly as valuable as our lives. Then let it be known that in the event of future war we will conscript every available resource of the wealth of the country; then we will have permanent peace without future conferences, without the League of Nations, without the international court, or without the aid of a visionary and impractical panacea known as world disarmament. When the profits of war are made impossible, then is peace enthroned permanently among the nations and peoples of the earth.

It is an inspiring thought that the party of the common man is again in sight of victory, and when it comes let the Democratic Party administer the Government upon the principle of equal and exact justice to all men and special privileges to none, which is but the recognition of the universal brotherhood of man. That principle, if applied throughout the earth, would usher in the Kingdom. It means the doctrine of the golden rule among men. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LOZIER].

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, it is regrettable that there are those in the United States, largely identified with commercial and big-business groups, who ardently insist that we retain the Philippines permanently, or for an indefinite or prolonged period, professedly on the alleged ground that the islands are not sufficiently prepared for self-government, but in truth and fact they want to retain them for all time, primarily for the purposes of exploitation. Seemingly these persons give no consideration to the ethical side of this proposal. They look with indifference on the fulfillment of our promises to grant the Philippines complete independence. Obviously the obligation to keep our national covenants rests very lightly on their consciences. It has probably never occurred to them that in denying self-government to the Philippines we are violating the vital principles that called our own Nation into being and which furnish the only enduring foundation for our governmental structure.

While I do not challenge the good faith and absolute sincerity of my colleagues who oppose or would unreasonably delay Philippine independence, I do question the soundness of their arguments and the existence of many alleged facts on which such opposition is based. The financial, commercial, and big-business groups are the head and front of the opposition to our withdrawal from the Philippines and that their opposition is based on purely selfish reasons is not only conclusively demonstrated but frankly admitted by certain business groups who testified at the hearings. They want us to keep the Philippines because of their rich natural resources, which they hope to appropriate and exploit under the protection of a bureaucratic government, very largely controlled by Uncle Sam. Their plans, though skillfully concealed and artfully disguised, are nevertheless plainly apparent. Measuring my words, I assert the plan to permanently or indefinitely hold the Philippines is as weak as it is wicked, and I will forego no opportunity to speak my sentiments in condemnation of this unholy, inexpedient, unjust, unwise, and unethical proposal.

It may not be inconsistent for monarchies to rule subject people on the other side of the globe, hold in subjection alien races, and deny their subjects to the birthright of self-government, but those policies are absolutely repugnant to the genius and spirit of our institutions. We must not allow this cynical and baneful doctrine to swerve us from the old paths and landmarks or permit it to override the sober judgment, destroy the high ideals, dull the conscience, repress the better impulses, or smother the overwhelming sentiment of the American people.

I think the Filipinos should be commended for their patience, poise, and fortitude while waiting for our Government to make good its promise to liberate them. The Good Book tells us that "hope deferred maketh the heart sick; yet while weeping may endure for a night, joy cometh in the morning." Intrusted with a large measure of responsibility in the management of their own domestic affairs, the Filipinos have joyously, efficiently, and honestly performed their allotted tasks, thereby furnishing convincing evidence of their capacity for self-government. The ease with which the Filipinos have met the governmental responsibilities placed on them has been apparent from the day they were first entrusted with the management of their local affairs. In the history of the world no race has made more rapid progress in mastering the science of self-government than the Filipinos in the last 30 years.

Is our promise to give self-government to the Philippines to remain forever unredeemed, or be delayed 15 or 20 years, as is now proposed by some Members of the Congress? Does it mean no more to us than a promise written in the air, or on shifting desert sands, or on the ripple of a swiftly flowing stream? I do not believe the conscience of the American people is dead, or that we have become so greedy for power, wealth, and influence that our obligations weigh lightly upon us, or that we may with impunity ignore them. I rejoice that I do not belong to that small yet nevertheless too large group of Americans who have a cynical disregard for any and all national ideals that can not be coined into dollars and cents. I want for my country no territorial expansion, no national aggrandizement, no world markets, no new wealth and influence that are not supported by moral considerations that appeal mightily to the minds and consciences of men.

We now have the affection of the Filipinos. They have trusted and still trust us. They look upon us, not as ruthless conquerors but as big brothers who rescued them from three centuries of Spanish misrule. They have confidence in us, and God grant that this confidence may not be abused. We have assured them that we will grant them independence just as soon as they shall have established a stable government. This they have done.

In the past 30 years they have administered their domestic affairs in an able and efficient manner, have conclusively demonstrated their genius for statecraft, and their ability to establish and maintain a stable and benevolent government patterned after that under which we live. Under these circumstances, right and reason suggest that we no longer veto their independence, or hold them in leash 15 or 20 years longer.

The magic fingers of destiny have touched and tempered the heartstrings of the Filipino race and inspired them with a patience, courage, faith, and fortitude that will lead them on to an early and full realization of their age-long aspirations for freedom.

The proposal to delay for 15 or 20 years, or indefinitely postpone a settlement of the Philippine problem, lurks behind a mask of insincerity, wears the livery of insidiousness, and is so disingenuous that even the most unsophisticated Filipino will readily comprehend its sinister aspect. This policy will alienate and provoke, rather than soothe and satisfy, the Filipino. If those who oppose Philippine independence are now strong enough to postpone such action for 15 or 20 years, it is almost certain that before the expiration of that period they will be strong enough to force another postponement of 15, 20, or 50 years. I warn the friends of Philippine independence that a delay of 15 or 20 years is the first step in a well-formed plan to enforce further delays and ultimately defeat Philippine independence.

It is the proud boast of Americans that as long as our Republic survives liberty will never be without an asylum. A proper appreciation of our own liberties would move us to give to the 13,000,000 Filipinos the same brand and degree of self-rule that we enjoy. The passion for liberty is the same no matter from what brain it springs or what race or region gave it birth.

Throughout our national history the fundamental principle that no race or people has a right to hold another race or people in subjection has stood out like a beacon on a waste or a rock above the restless and raging ocean.

We do not attempt to monopolize our religion, and why should we withhold from the Filipino the blessings of civil liberty that are so precious to us? While enjoying the unpurchasable benefits of free government, how can we deny to the Filipino the same privileges that we count more valuable than life itself? George Washington gave expression to the principle I am trying to emphasize when he said:

> Let us impart all the blessings we possess or ask for ourselves to the whole family of mankind.

And again:

> The propitious smiles of heaven can never be expected on a nation that disregards the eternal rules of order and right which heaven itself has ordained.

Of a truth, all men are mystically united. The Filipinos are small in stature but tenacious in their purposes. Their skins are as brown as walnut, but who will say their hearts are not white? They are as human as we and feel the restless urge of all men for freedom. The Philippine Islands are their native land. There they and their sires and sons were born. There they have been placed by the God of all the earth. There an overruling Providence will keep them. They have overrun no nations and have made no conquests. They have tendered no unrighteous or unreasonable demands. They merely ask the boon of personal and political freedom. They ask us to grant them the same inherent, God-given privilege of self-government that we took from Great Britain at the point of a bayonet. They ask only the poor privilege of living in the land of their birth and building for themselves free institutions patterned after ours. Their lungs are opening to receive the same air of freedom that we breathe and which animates our national life. Shall we deny their reasonable request? I think not.

When the Roman emperors set about to subvert the liberties of the people they cunningly reasoned that by giving the people food and amusement they could be kept contented while being despoiled of their birthright of freedom. "Bread and circuses" was the slogan of Nero.

We woefully misjudge the Filipinos if we imagine they will sacrifice their national aspirations for a mess of financial pottage, preferential tariff relations, or a profitable commerce.

Those who oppose immediate or early Filipino independence are placing property rights above human rights, sacrificing principle and patriotism on the sharp edge of expediency, and measuring the aspirations of 13,000,000 people by a dollar-and-cents yardstick. They are industriously seeking to intimidate the Filipinos by appealing to mercenary motives and holding over them the loss of certain trade advantages with the United States which they now have under our flag. The honorable Secretary of War and those who accept his selfish and sordid political and economic philosophy most miserably misunderstand the psychology of the Filipinos, who, like any other self-respecting race, will refuse to surrender their age-long aspirations for self-government in exchange for a more satisfactory balance of trade.

The proposal that we retain the Philippines 15 or 20 years longer is not sound in principle or wholesome in practice. Let us not pay our obligations to the Filipinos with counterfeit promises, which have no more substance than echoes from a ruined castle. As certain as the trembling needle points to the magnetic pole; as certain as the mills of the gods alternately grind grists of fortune and penury; as certain as the adamantine spindle separates and winds up the tangled threads of destiny—just as certainly will the Filipinos win their struggle for independence, and just as certainly justice, wisdom, and expediency dictate that we retire from the Philippines without waiting 15 or 20 years. I favor the withdrawal of our flag from the Philippines in five years.

I am not willing to destroy the laudable ambition of the Filipinos for self-government in order that a few American traders may retain this fruitful field for exploitation. I am not convinced by the philosophy of those, who, in order to keep a credit balance on the ledgers of a few men engaged in trade in, or commerce with the Philippines, are seemingly willing to ignore our promises to grant Philippine independence. However sincere their motives, they are nevertheless sanctioning a policy fundamentally un-American, and in every essential detail violative of the principles on which our free institutions were builded.

After the American people here climbed the ladder of self-government to the temple of liberty, it is unthinkable that they will draw up the ladder and prevent the Filipinos and other less-favored races from mounting the rungs by which we ascended. The benefits of self-government and our supply of blessings therefrom are not dissipated by dividing them with the 13,000,000 Filipinos on the other side of the world. Like love, happiness, virtue, and the Nibelungs' hoard, the stock of the unpurchasable blessings of free government increases the more it is drawn upon, and

> Were all the world bought from it, and all the price outpaid,
> Not one the less would the jewels seem nor the gold heaps lower laid.

In seeking a solution of the Philippine problem we should be as just as Aristides and as inflexible as Cato. While the economic interests of the American people will be promoted by our withdrawal from the Philippines, and our strategic position as a world power tremendously strengthened by such action, I would nevertheless base our relinquishment of sovereignty over the Philippines primarily on moral, ethical, and altruistic grounds, and because such action is imperative if we are to keep our national covenants.

A German philosopher has said:

I know but two lovely things in the universe—the starry skies above our heads and the sense of duty within our hearts.

It is not only our inescapable duty but an exalted privilege to hand back the Philippine Islands to their rightful owners, the native inhabitants. Expediency, reason, and righteousness are harmoniously blended in such action. Let us weigh the Philippines in an honest balance that all nations and the God of all the earth may know our national integrity. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I read on the floor of the House an editorial from the St. Louis Star, a large responsible metropolitan daily newspaper of St. Louis, in which there was some criticism of the War Department and the Interior Department for sending out propaganda in opposition to a reduction in Government expenditures. At the same time I called attention to the fact that the Department of Agriculture, through its Secretary and others, was doing likewise. Their appearance was before the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

The Secretary of War states in a public interview that his department did not send out the propaganda which was referred to in this editorial. I have here the letter which was received by this newspaper, printed on War Department stationery, paid for by the Government, containing the name, in one corner, of the civilian aide to the Secretary of War for the Seventh Corps Area, Omaha, Nebr., and in the other corner the name of the civilian aide to the Secretary of War for the State of Missouri. The Adjutant General told me this morning this stationery is printed at the expense of the War Department and given to the organization known as the Military Training Camps Association of the United States, Seventh Corps Area, a part of the War Department.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place this letter in the RECORD. I also have the release of the Department of the Interior on February 11, which was referred to in the editorial. I ask unanimous consent to place that in the RECORD also.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The letter and release follow:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
MILITARY TRAINING CAMPS ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
SEVENTH CORPS AREA,
St. Louis, Mo., February 10, 1932.

EDITOR ST. LOUIS STAR,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR SIR: For your information, beg to submit the attached extracts of editorial comment made by various newspapers on citizens' military training camps, which have so effectively contributed to the stabilization of young American patriotism through the training these camps give each summer to boys between the ages of 17 and 21.

You are, of course, aware of the fact that for a number of years we have had the citizens' military training camp at Jefferson Barracks here in St. Louis. Thousands of young men from all parts of the State have had a fine influence exerted upon them through this instrumentality. Healthful outdoor exercise, substantial food, proper discipline, and delightful entertainment have been a part of the curriculum, and I venture to say that as a result the influence for good has been far-reaching in its effect.

It seems to me that particularly at this time, with conditions prevailing, the undercurrent of unrest and the need for a proper influence to be exerted, it will be a serious mistake to discontinue the functioning of an organization that has been in the building and has now reached an almost perfect state of development, with but little cost, comparatively speaking, to our Federal Government. The facilities are already available; the man power for the training of these young men is ready and prepared to continue its functioning; the good will has been established. All of this would be thrown into the discard for lack of funds were they denied at this time.

While the fundamentals of military tactics are emphasized, the citizens' military training camps have no ulterior motive beyond the direct benefits accruing to the young men attending the camps, morally and physically speaking.

Perhaps, under the circumstances, you would be willing to make editorial comment favoring a continuance of these camps, sending a marked copy to Mr. Charles B. Pike, Chief Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, Chicago.

Yours very truly,

CARL F. G. MEYER,
Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War for the State of Missouri.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
February 11, 1932.

Memorandum for the press, immediate release.

A study of the record at the Department of the Interior shows that the proposed appropriation for the survey of the public domain, one of the Government's hundred-million-dollar engineering jobs, will cut that agency's working fund below any figure provided for it in more than a third of a century.

The sum made available is $500,000, while appropriations have run around $1,000,000 a year for the past two decades and have not run so low as that proposed since the period following the depression of 1893.

Secretary Wilbur has protested against this cut, arguing that these fundamental tasks of government should be continued without interruption, particularly since the bulk of the money is spent in wages.

The issue raised calls attention to one of the large tasks of the Government which has been prosecuted so quietly through the decades that the average citizen hardly knows of its existence. Few taxpayers realize that this hundred-million-dollar undertaking has been under way constantly throughout their lives and that their tax money goes into it every year.

The General Land Office holds that no task of government since George Washington has left so strong an imprint on the physical aspect of the Nation. This survey has laid the ground plan for the greater part of the Nation, has determined the subdivisions, has located the roads through every western countryside, has been the basis for streets in towns and cities, has provided the foundation for determining property ownership. They believe it is the most important surveying job ever executed by man.

The task began in 1785, when the new Government took over the public domain and began its survey at Pittsburgh that it might be equitably distributed to settlers. Never before had such an area been made available for distribution. The young Government mapped out its system of dividing its domain into townships and sections, based on lines of latitude and longitude, in such a way that any tract could be simply described and would be the only piece of land in the world answering that description. This has turned out to be the most perfect scheme of land identification ever devised.

The engineering task begun at Pittsburgh in 1785 has contemplated placing a marker at the corners of each quarter section of land between that point and the Pacific Ocean. There were 2,000,000,000 acres to be surveyed. After 157 years of work without cessation there remains 135,000,000, a mere 7 per cent, to be surveyed.

Frank M. Johnson is supervisor of surveys for the Government and has had charge of this huge undertaking for 25 years. His headquarters are in Denver, from which point he sends out about a hundred parties every summer, with six to eight men in each party. The work is largely in the wild country, where the chuck wagon and the pack mule still survive. He is in Washington at present, arranging the work for the coming season.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I criticized the Secretary of War for declining to appear before the committee of which I am chairman to give his views in reference to bills to consolidate the construction activities of the Government. I might say that seven-tenths of the bills have the approval of the President of the United States. He wants an administrator of public works.

The Secretary of War is credited by the Associated Press this morning in saying he did not interpret my letter as a direct and personal invitation to give the committee his views on the two measures.

I have great respect for the dignity of the office over which he presides, and in order that he may understand that I mean no offense to him I will say I have great respect for him also. I seek no controversy with him. I desire to place in the RECORD my letter to the Secretary of War inviting him to appear before the committee. I admit it was not a demand. It was a request, a proper request, to send to a Cabinet officer. Had I sent him a letter demanding his appearance I do not know what he might have said to me in reply. He would have been justified in attacking me. I do not issue demands to Cabinet officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to place in the RECORD his letter to the Secretary of War. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter follows:

FEBRUARY 20, 1932.

Hon. PATRICK J. HURLEY,
Secretary of War.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: The committee this morning voted to commence hearings on the bills providing for the creation of an administration of public works (H. R. 6665 and H. R. 6670) at 10 o'clock a. m. on Thursday, February 25. It was also agreed to set aside this day for the War Department, and the chairman was directed to invite the Secretary of War to be present and make a statement, or to designate the representatives of the department whom he wishes to be heard.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

JOHN J. COCHRAN, Chairman.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of War also says that the communication he sent to me was not a refusal to appear before the committee. In justice to him, I ask unanimous consent that his letter be printed in the RECORD. I call special attention to the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the request that the letter addressed to him by the Secretary of War be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(The letter follows:)

FEBRUARY 24, 1932.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. COCHRAN: Referring to your letter of January 7, 1932, containing a request for reports on the two bills providing for the creation of an administration of public works, H. R. 6665 and H. R. 6670, and to your further letter of February 20, 1932, advising of the date set for the hearings on the same, permit me to inform you that while the War Department favors the creation of such an administration in accordance with the suggestions contained in the message of the President on this subject, there are serious objections to the enactment of the proposed legislation in the form represented by these bills.

From a military standpoint the transfer of Army construction to another Government agency is considered entirely impracticable. The construction, maintenance, repair, and operation of War Department structures are so intimately related to the military control and administration of the Army that the responsibility for the proper execution of such work must be delegated through the established chain of command. The introduction of a civilian agency into this work would result in a divided responsibility that could never be successful in an effective military organization. Aside from this fundamental defect of the proposal there is the further objection that the removal of such construction from War Department control would render it impossible for the Secretary of War to prepare officers to discharge the extensive construction duties which would devolve upon them in time of war. In view of the foregoing the War Department does not favor the enactment of either of these bills in their present forms.

After a thorough study of the features of the proposed legislation it is believed that the recommendations for the reorganization of the executive departments contained in the President's message of February 17, 1932 (H. Doc. No. 254), are far superior to the proposals contained in the two bills under consideration, and would, if enacted into law, accomplish the desired end much more effectively.

It is, therefore, believed unnecessary to submit any further statement in the matter as requested in your letter of February 20, 1932, or to present any witnesses to represent the War Department before the committee. However, if the committee in the course of its hearings should desire the presence of anyone specifically, the Secretary of War will be pleased to send such witness at such time as the committee may designate.

Sincerely yours,

PATRICK J. HURLEY,
Secretary of War.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, to-day I received a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury. It is in reply to a letter I wrote him, or his predecessor 20 days before the President delivered his message to Congress February 17. For the committee I had asked the Secretary for his view on the bill I offered to abolish the Bureau of Efficiency. He tells me the President transmitted a message to Congress dealing with the subject of a more effective organization of the executive branch of the Government. He quotes that part of the President's message in which he asked for authority, under proper safeguards, to be lodged in the President to effect transfers, and so forth. The Secretary then tells me the department joins in the view of the President, and in view of the President having submitted to Congress the recommendations for carrying into effect any reorganization, the enactment of my bill would appear to be unnecessary.

Mr. Chairman, I crave cooperation from the members of the President's Cabinet. I submit the record speaks for itself. It shows what cooperation I am receiving in my efforts to carry out the demand for consolidations and the abolition of useless Government bureaus.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOWARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9699) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. EATON of New Jersey, indefinitely, on account of illness.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, on behalf of my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN], that he be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD on one of his own bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, in the Sixty-fifth Congress, and I think in every Congress since, I introduced a proposed amendment to the Constitution requiring all constitutional amendments to be submitted to a direct vote of the people.

In the present Congress it was introduced on December 8, 1931, House Joint Resolution 49, which reads as follows:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified by the people of three-fourths of the several States, the electors of which shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures: Provided, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

Article V of the Constitution now provides that amendments to the Constitution may be submitted to and ratified either by the legislatures or by conventions in the respective States.

All of the amendments up to date have been submitted to the. State legislatures. The reasons are quite obvious One reason is that the legislatures meet annually or biennially and that method of submission has therefore seemed to offer the most convenient and quickest means of securing action.

But the most potent reason, perhaps, for resort to the legislative tribunals is to avoid thrusting on the backs of the taxpayers of the respective States the heavy expenditures which would necessarily be entailed in the nomination and election of delegates to State constitutional conventions, besides the expenses of the conventions themselves; namely: Pay and mileage of the delegates, clerks and doorkeepers, reporters, stationery and printing—all practically a duplication of the cost of legislative sessions.

There was therefore much practical wisdom in the preference for legislative action as against the convention method.

It is difficult now to understand the recent revival of a demand for the convention method. Both methods are equally objectionable.

EVILS OF LEGISLATIVE METHOD

It took a long time to comprehend the evils of the legislative method of ratification. In practice the proposed amendment was frequently submitted to the legislatures of the States before the people of the States had the opportunity to instruct their representatives specifically on the proposal. This meant that legislatures voted on the question without a specific mandate from their constituencies. The worst evil was that the legislatures of the respective States became the targets of propaganda and their members were often menaced by threats of influential and loud-mouthed, heavily financed minorities.

Perhaps the strongest argument ever made against submission of constitutional amendments to State legislatures was presented to this House on January 21, 1925, by the Hon. Finis Garrett, then minority leader, in a speech memorable for its historical retrospect. He said, quoting from page 2332 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 21, 1925:

As the situation now stands fewer than 4,000 individuals in this Nation of 110,000,000 people can, if they choose, alter every sentence and paragraph of the Constitution of the United States, except the clause as to equal suffrage in the Senate, and with just a few hundred added they could change even that. Two-thirds of a majority of the House and Senate and a majority of a quorum of 48 legislatures can completely revolutionize our dual forms of government within the space of a few fleeting months, and upon any efforts so to do there rest no legal restraints, either State or Federal. So far as law is concerned, either organic or statutory, the people have no means of prevention nor any method of recourse or review.

I have here a tabulation by States of the number of members composing the two houses of their respective legislatures.

I think it is true that in all save two States a majority constitute a quorum. In Tennessee, I am certain, and in Indiana, I think, the constitutions require two-thirds.

It would be a rather tedious task to figure out the exact minimum number that could change the Constitution, and I have not attempted it, but it is accurate to say that it can be accomplished by fewer than 4,000 individuals.

But abandoning the legislative method does not mean that we are obliged to accept the convention method.

EVILS OF CONVENTION METHOD

In addition to heavy expenditures involved in the convention method, to which I have referred, it is a method which is absolutely wasteful of time and utterly unnecessary.

If, as is constantly preached, we are trying to get close to the people and want to get a direct mandate from them on constitutional as well as on other questions, why not put the proposals up to them directly, promptly, and economically by letting them vote on the proposed amendments directly, without the stupid intervention of utterly unnecessary spokesmen?

Why go through the rigmarole of primaries to elect delegates; then a general election; then a convention—under great additional expense—only to have them meet and vote "aye" and "nay" as they happen to be instructed? Why not let the people vote on policies instead of on men?

NO EXCUSE FOR CONVENTION METHOD

There is no excuse whatever for a resort to the convention idea in these modern days, except to keep open the devious ways of intrigue and put a brake on the will of the people. How? Quite simple: The nominees for the convention would, in the first place, be selected by party bosses. Then their candidacy would be molested and threatened, if not influenced, by the same loud-mouthed and sinister minorities that so often thwart, direct, or influence legislative action.

Then in the campaign for election of delegates the asperities and rivalries of the contest are likely to cause the voters to lose sight of the real issue of the constitutional proposal. In other words, delegates will be elected not because of what they think on the paramount issue but because they make a better personal appeal or have the strongest social or political backing.

THE NEW YORK CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF 1915

If I may be pardoned for mentioning a personal experience, I will say that I was a member of the New York State constitutional convention of 1915. The campaign for delegates was marked by keen personal rivalries. Outside of that, it was purely a party contest. Not once do I recall that the real problems that necessitated the calling of the convention were discussed or put before the people.

Consequently, it was a helter-skelter election and a helter-skelter convention. Its work was repudiated and overwhelmingly beaten at the election in which its proposed amendments were submitted to the people for ratification. A few of the amendments of real merit that had come out of the convention mill, notwithstanding its partisan character, were subsequently adopted by popular votes as the propositions were in subsequent years submitted to them.

In closing, I hope I may be pardoned in repeating my remarks on another occasion:

THE PEOPLE RESENT THE RESTRAINTS OF INDIRECT GOVERNMENT

I am satisfied that the people of this Nation want more liberty and a greater emancipation and resent the restraints of indirect government. They should not be treated as children. They want to, and should be permitted to, vote on fundamental changes in their organic laws. They do it now in the States on constitutional amendments, and it is unblushing arrogance to assert that they are incompetent to pass on constitutional amendments affecting the entire Nation. They tired of the corruption and disorder incident to the election of United States Senators by State legislatures. They are prepared now to take the final step which will give the voters of the land an opportunity to express their will as to how and under what laws they shall be governed. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 19, 1925.)

DEBATE ON TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further debate upon the bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments be limited to 80 minutes, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD] and one-half by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THATCHER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—POSTAL WAGE STANDARDS

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend remarks on the postal appropriation bill, I desire to submit a very informative statement on the general question of postal wage standards by Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks.

Mr. Flaherty is known to many Members of Congress as one who has given much thought and attention to postal employment questions, and his views are deserving of the careful consideration of House Members.

The United States Treasury needs more than $2,000,000,000 to balance the National Budget this year, according to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. The deficit is due to failure of revenues in the face of continuing expenditures—revenues which have fallen off because industry, commerce, and the taxable incomes of individual citizens are reduced to a level which fails to yield the former tax returns. Should postal salaries be cut in order to reduce this deficit?

Clearly the constructive need is a revival of industry and commerce. But this can only come about by reestablishing markets, and markets depend upon the buying power of the potential consumers of goods. Markets are wanting now, first of all, because the people's buying power is low. The Federal Trade Commission reported in 1926, a "prosperous" year, that 77 per cent of the people in sample areas of the United States possessed only 5 per cent of the wealth. Among that 77 per cent were more than 40,000,000 wage earners, who, with their dependents, were buying the products of industry so far as they had the money. Now a fifth of these wage earners, or more, are out of work entirely, and therefore without wages. Other millions are on part time or a reduced wage scale or both, and these have had to stop buying anything beyond what will barely keep them alive.

In order to break this vicious circle vast expenditures for public works have been undertaken by the Federal Government, and more are being proposed. To provide them with employment will restore the buying power of the unemployed millions. To sustain the buying power of the people who still have work the President of the United States, all the labor leaders, and some distinguished corporation heads have urged upon all the captains of industry that they refrain from the old and mistaken practice of wage cutting in a depression. What labor has contended for 60 years is widely accepted now; namely, that to assure consumption by the masses of the people is the only means of providing sufficient markets for what producers have to sell.

This sound and logical program has been thus far the Government program as applied to its own employees. But shortsighted chambers of commerce and some politicians are calling for a reversal of policy. They demand a reduction in the buying power of another million people, in addition to those already reduced. They would cut the salaries of the more than a million men and women who constitute the civil and military establishments of the United States, as a "saving" to offset the Federal deficit.

The proposal should be examined from several points of view: What good would it do? And then it should be asked, What harm would it do? Is it fair to break a contract under which people are working on stated terms? And finally, Is it safe to set a wage-cutting example to private industry?

WHAT GOOD WOULD IT DO?

The first question to ask would seem to be this: How much money would be "saved" if the Treasury paid out 10 per cent less in salaries to a million people who earn it and must immediately spend it for goods that farmers and builders and manufacturers produce for profit, that merchants sell for profit, that railroads and trucking companies transport from place to place as a means of revenue, and the whole country gains by using? The total number of Government employees, including the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, is 1,023,373. Civilian employees number 732,460, or nearly three-fourths of the million.

The Budget Bureau reports that all the Government services combined receive $1,315,690,467 in salaries, the civilian personnel receiving $1,055,970,636. A flat reduction of 10 per cent of all salaries of the civilian personnel, as has been proposed by one Member of Congress, would yield $105,597,063. Another proposal is a 10 per cent reduction for all civilian employees receiving more than $2,000, none to fall below $2,000 after reduction. This would yield, from the civilian personnel, $55,382,465, according to Budget Bureau figures. Applied to civilian salaries of $2,300 and over, a 10 per cent reduction would yield $40,192,394.

The Treasury deficit for 1933, which is estimated now at $2,100,000,000, would stand at $1,994,462,939 after a flat 10 per cent reduction of the Government's civilian pay roll, and would remain well above $2,000,000,000 with either of the other proposed reductions. In other words, the reduction of Government workers' salaries would "help" to the extent of about 2.6 per cent of the total deficit, or at most a fraction over 5 per cent.

Not that much really, of course. From the total "savings" must be subtracted the income tax the Treasury now receives which would no longer be yielded by the reduced salaries of married civilian employees now receiving more than $3,500 a year, and the single workers now receiving more than $1,500.

So much for the "good" a Federal salary cut would do. Let us turn the question around:

WHAT HARM WOULD IT DO?

To the business interests of the country, which depend upon the consuming power of the people, a 10 per cent cut in the salaries of three-quarters of a million Federal workers would mean withdrawal of $105,587,063, or $55,382,465, or $40,192,394, as the case might be, from the channels of trade. Government employees would be able to purchase just that many less millions of dollars' worth of meat, breadstuffs, vegetables, fruits, and foods of whatever kind, clothing, household goods, house rent, gas and electric light, automobiles, radios, or what you will. By that many millions of dollars the earnings of farmers, cotton growers, manufacturers, producers, and dealers of all kinds would be reduced. The reduction of Federal salaries would do that much harm to the Nation's business.

For the Government employees themselves the effect would be a lowered standard of living. The largest group of civilian employees (124,678) receive less than $1,000 a year. The next largest group (116,759) receive $2,100 to $2,200. More than three-fourths (558,034) receive less than $2,300. Nearly 65,000 (64,693) post-office clerks receive $1,700 to $2,300, and of these, 48,011 receive $2,100. A 10 per cent reduction on a $2,300 salary would reduce it to $2,070. How far would $2,070 go in a typical family of five, with the modest living standards of the typical post-office clerk?

It happens that some figures on this point are at hand from California, where investigations begun by the California Civil Service Commission some years ago and brought down to date by the Heller Committee for Research in the Social Sciences have presented a typical budget for a clerk's family of five. At San Francisco prices of November, 1931, that budget is as follows:

Annual quantity and cost estimates, budget for clerk, family of five

(Prices for San Francisco, November, 1931. From cost-of-living studies compiled under the Heller Committee for Research in the Social Sciences, Jessica B. Peixotto, chairman)

	Cost
Food	$677.64
Meals at home	572.64
Husband's lunches	105.00
Clothing	339.97
Man	95.32
Wife	111.36
Boy, 11 years	54.21
Girl, 5 years	43.19
Boy, 2 years	35.89
Housing	$396.00
House operation	252.69
Light, heat, and fuel	90.86
Replacements	79.21
Other items	92.62
Miscellaneous	498.89
Life insurance	130.00
Medical care	75.00
Recreation	126.54
Car fare	60.00
Other	107.35
Total	2,175.19

At this modest scale of living the $2,300 clerk reduced to $2,070 would run short by $105. The $2,100 clerk would be $175 in the hole. Even the $2,400 clerk would not get by in San Francisco, while in Baltimore, Boston, New York, and Chicago the greater housing costs alone would run the year's expenditures up by several hundred dollars.

It has been found, in fact, that 90 to 98 per cent of the families of Government workers in five cities where costs of living for the year 1928 were studied by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics were unable to keep their expenses within the husband's salary of $2,500 or less, and his earnings had to be supplemented by extra work on his part or by the earnings of his wife or children. Even then the family income fell short. The average expenses of the 506 families from whom costs of living were obtained in the five cities of Baltimore, Boston, New York, Chicago, and New Orleans were as follows:

	Average expenses
Baltimore	$2,435
Boston	2,498
New York	2,598
Chicago	2,928
New Orleans	2,270

The average size of the families represented in this table was a little less than five (4.7) persons. The average Government salaries and the total income, as increased by extra earnings, were as follows:

	Government salary	Income with extra earnings
Baltimore	$1,797	$2,336
Boston	1,809	2,411
New York	1,812	2,483
Chicago	1,879	2,745
New Orleans	1,704	2,193

The Government salaries in these families fell short of the family expenditures by an average of $449 in New Orleans, $519 in Baltimore, $556 in Boston, $655 in New York, and $851 in Chicago. What will these families do if a 10 per cent cut is applied to them? What will the families of postal clerks do? Their salary schedules run like this:

Number of clerks	Salary grade
9,211	$2,300
645	2,200
48,001	2,100
3,138	2,000
2,084	1,900
1,156	1,800
448	1,700

Applying the cut of 10 per cent all down the line of these postal salaries the yield to the Federal Treasury from salaries of post-office clerks would be $13,650,540, or 0.6½ of 1 per cent of the Treasury deficit, most of which would come from the 48,011 clerks in the $2,100 grade.

IS IT FAIR?

To consider the proposed Federal salary cut only in terms of its money value is, of course, to omit certain other very important considerations. Federal salaries are a matter of law, a contract entered into between the Government and the employees with a definite mutual obligation which is both material and moral. They set a standard of far-reaching social importance.

Postal salaries represent not competitive wage rates—for there is no similar employment in outside industry—but an ethical principle in wage policy. The gradual increase that postal employees have fought for all these years, and have in part achieved, is based upon the theory that the Government, as an employer, should set a standard in advance of the purely competitive wage-fixing policy of private industry. This is good business as well as good ethics. The postal system is indispensable as a channel of commerce, and it is one of the great arteries of governmental and social service. When it breaks down disaster follows—disaster to business and the public welfare. Its personnel, therefore, should be drawn from the cream of the working population, and they should be given an incentive which will insure high-grade applicants. This, however, is only another way of saying that the postal personnel should be adequately paid for their work. Like all other wage earners, they are entitled not only to a living wage but to a wage proportional to their productivity and importance. What has thus far happened, in reality, is this:

(1) While postal wage rates have almost doubled since 1913, their purchasing power declined steadily from 1913 to 1918, and has risen but irregularly since that time, only just now coming back to a little more than the purchasing power of postal salaries before the war.

(2) While the working day of the postal clerk has been shortened and the postal force has expanded in numbers to meet the constantly greater pressure for speed and volume of service, the individual postal clerk has become 100 per cent more productive than the individual clerk of 1913; that is to say, he produces twice as much postal revenue.

The postal salary scale of to-day, therefore, in terms of purchasing power, is a little better than the pre-war scale, in return for twice the output. In other words, the postal salary classification enacted by Congress in 1925 reaffirmed the principle upon which previous postal wage increases were predicated, but went only part way toward the goal of justice. To reduce postal salaries now would be to nullify and to stultify that position.

IS IT SAFE?

If postal salaries were reduced now, what ends would be satisfied?

To answer this question is to point to the great industrial menace of this country and the world—the determination of great industrialists to deny to labor its due share of the products of labor. Specifically, in the case of postal salaries, this menace appears in a recent pronouncement of the United States Chamber of Commerce. The postal service committee of the chamber in a recent report recommends "that further increase in postal salaries, such as are occurring now under the system of automatic increases, should be discontinued for the time being and that adjustment of postal salaries be so handled as to put them on a differential scale rather than on a flat nation-wide basis." The reason for the committee's recommendation is frankly stated, in the familiar language of competitive industry: "There has been no suggestion of inability to secure sufficient qualified employees."

This, of course, is the hard-boiled business philosophy which says in effect: "Never raise wages unless you must do it to hold your men. Whenever you can get them standing in line at the gates, reduce the pay."

That is precisely the wage philosophy that makes or deepens all depressions, the blind futility that hopes to profit by killing the goose that lays the golden egg. In the case of certain local chambers of commerce and the Postal Service the blindness is peculiarly dense. No other public service is so wholly indispensable to business men as the Postal Service. No other service deserves more at their hands. Yet some of them would reduce postal pay to the local cost-of-living basis, computed, doubtless, by their standards for their own employees who are now out of work, or working on half time and at a reduced wage rate. No chamber of commerce can consistently seek markets for its members' goods and at the same time agitate for a reduction of the buying power of 370,000 workers and their families.

Results of the low-wage policy on private industry are evident now in silent machinery and closed plants. Has not this country had enough of that?

The salary scale of postal clerks ranges from $1,700 to $2,100 a year, by act of Congress. There are two higher grades for special clerks at $2,200 and $2,300. The rates are not the ideal, but they do represent principles and standards in Government wage policy which should not be abandoned but rather advanced. On the other hand, for many thousands of clerks with families, this salary scale does not actually meet the cost of living. To reduce it by 10 per cent would lower standards of living but would make a very slight impression on the Treasury deficit. The postal pay roll does, however, the sum all told, put millions of dollars into the channels of trade—preventing to that extent a deeper slump into business depression. Why reduce these consumers' buying power now?

The National Federation of Post Office Clerks for the reasons above outlined is requesting the Seventy-second Congress not to enact legislation lowering existing wage standards in the Postal Service.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 27, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

2950. By Mr. SHOTT: Petition adopted by the State executive committee of the West Virginia Woman's Christian Temperance Union, setting forth that West Virginia adopted constitutional prohibition in 1914 with only three dissenting votes in the legislature and accepted full responsibility for concurrent power in enforcement, and in the State school laws enacted provisions for the teaching of the evil effects of alcohol which the State superintendent of schools, Hon. W. C. Cook, is carrying out through the cooperation of the good people of the State, and therefore attention of Congress is called to these facts as proof that West Virginia is moving forward to perfect the principle of prohibition of the liquor traffic in her political life and shows no disposition to welcome a vote on resubmission; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

2951. By Mr. SHREVE: Resolutions of 100 people of the United Church of Springboro; 1,031 people of the Erie County Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Erie; 58 people of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of North East; and 20 people of the Anna Gordon Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Erie, all of the State of Pennsylvania, opposing the resubmission of the eighteenth amendment to be ratified by State conventions or by State legislatures; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WYANT: Petition of Trafford Ministerial Association, adopted at a mass meeting of five churches, representing about 1,300 people, in Trafford, Westmoreland County, Pa., opposing resubmission of eighteenth amendment to be ratified by State conventions or by State legislatures, and urging Congressmen and Senators to vote against such resolutions, and to vote for adequate appropriations for law enforcement and for education in law observance; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord God omnipotent reigneth and in His holy hands all things rest. Surely we are encompassed by Thy mercy and no good thing dost Thou withhold from us. Let us feel this day the impulse and the restraint of Thy presence. May our opportunities for public service be held as sacred trusts for Thy glory and for the peace and contentment of our whole country; impress us with a solemn sense of our responsibility. In every way may we be worthy of the very best traditions of the Republic. Enable us above all things to maintain the sanctity of Thy precepts, follow the way of Thy revealed truth, and to love Him who first loved us. Our Father, we pray Thee to hear those whose dumb entreaties are written on their hearts and whose language can not be told. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW

Mr. PARTRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, to-day is the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the birth of the poet Henry W. Longfellow. Although born in the city of Portland, Me., he belongs to the Nation. I therefore deem it fitting that this body give some recognition of the day, and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD two brief proclamations issued by the city council of that beautiful city by the sea. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

The proclamations are as follows:

PORTLAND'S TERCENTENARY AND CENTENNIAL, 1932

Proclamation

Whereas the year 1932 is the three hundredth anniversary of the first settlement of Portland by George Cleeves and Richard Tucker; and

Whereas on March 26, 1832, after 200 years of development, Portland was chartered as a city: Now, therefore,

It is urged that 1932 be made memorable by a fitting celebration of this most remarkable coincidence of centennial and tercentenary; and it is now

Resolved, That the citizens of Portland extend not only a general invitation to cities and towns but to organizations, individuals, and native sons and daughters the world over to join with the city of Portland, Me., in recognition and observance on any or all of the 366 days of 1932.

ARTHUR W. JORDAN,
Chairman Portland City Council, 1931.

PORTLAND, BIRTHPLACE OF LONGFELLOW, THE WORLD'S BEST-LOVED POET

Proclamation

Whereas Portland, Me., is the native city of Henry W. Longfellow, the world's best-loved poet, as well as one of the greatest names in all literature, whose beautiful life and work is a never-ending source of inspiration for young and old as one of the most perfect examples of noble living, of loving and helpful service in all human history: Now, therefore,

The people of Portland and all lovers of Longfellow everywhere are hereby urged to observe each succeeding anniversary of Longfellow's birth, February 27, as Longfellow Day, with flags and decorations, musical and other programs, in such ways and by such means as may suit their inclination and convenience.

RALPH D. BROOKS,
Chairman Portland City Council, 1930.

"AND THE MULE THAT WAS UNDER HIM WENT AWAY"

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech by my colleague Hon. FRANK L. BOWMAN, of West Virginia, before the United Republican Club, Clarksburg, W. Va., on the one hundred and twenty-third anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech delivered by Hon. FRANK L. BOWMAN before the United Republican Club, Clarksburg, W. Va., on the one hundred and twenty-third anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, February 12, 1932, on the subject, "* * * And the Mule That Was Under Him Went Away." II Samuel xviii, 9.

This is the one hundred and twenty-third anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. A great Nation pays tribute to his immortal name; but no section of the United States is endowed with greater significance of honor and homage than this city—the birthplace of Stonewall Jackson. Abraham Lincoln and Stonewall Jackson represented two contending forces in the field of political thought. The one advocated the preservation of the Union; the other defended the rights of separate States to secede from the Union. The one was endowed with the noble virtues of human sympathy and kindly patience and quiet forbearance inherited from a loving mother, whose first inspirations of life came from the wooded dells and mountain sides of West Augusta. The other was characterized by those noble qualities of a fearless bravery and a rugged courage and a divine consciousness possessed by the pioneer men of the hills. In national life both demonstrated unswerving fidelity and devotion to their honest convictions; and each traveled the lonely and uncertain pathway to a martyr's grave. When Stonewall Jackson fell on the field of battle the Confederate States lost their most courageous defender in the times of war; when Lincoln fell by the hand of an assassin the South lost its greatest friend in the reconstruction days of peace. It is not for us to reason why. We can not interpret the motives of fate, but we do know that the lives of these two national characters exemplified and personified those rare and essential qualities of a patriotic citizenship found in the State of West Virginia—the sympathetic soul of a great statesman and the courageous heart of a brave soldier.

In 1860 Abraham Lincoln was elected president of the United States, and this date marks the birth of a great political party whose platform proclaimed to a demoralized and decadent Nation two great doctrines or principles of national moment: (1) The maintenance of the integrity of the Union and the paramount authority of the Constitution and the laws of the United States. (2) The sound economic policy of a protective tariff in order to encourage and stimulate the development of industry, to secure for American labor a high standard of wage, and to bring to this Nation commercial prosperity and economic independence. The successful termination of the Civil War preserved the integrity of the Union and restored the authority of the Constitution and the laws of the United States; and the phenomenal rise of the United States to the commercial and industrial supremacy of the world is conclusive evidence of the wisdom of a national economic policy sustained and supported by a protective tariff.

Nations can grow and develop commercially and industrially only under favorable economic conditions. Without them, nations perish and decay. Favorable economic conditions are to a nation what the fertility of the soil and proper climatic conditions are to plant life. Both the life of a nation and the life of a plant must be sustained, cultivated, stimulated, and nurtured under conditions favorable to growth and development. In national life these conditions are designated as national policies, and under our democratic form of government national policies of our Government are determined by the application of the policies and principles of the party in power. It is evident, therefore, that the rapid growth and development of the United States must be attributed to national policies conducive and favorable to the growth and development of commerce and industry, and under our 2-party system these national policies must find their sources in the declared doctrines and principles of some great political party.

The Socialist Party can not lay claim to this distinction, because it has not been in power. Since 1860 the Democratic Party has been in power only 16 years in the 72-year period, and its efforts to apply its policies and principles in national life, except during the stimulus of the World War, reversed the economic order of our Nation and ended finally in the political maelstroms of economic depressions.

On the other hand, the Republican Party has been in power in the United States for 56 years, which have witnessed, in the main, the most marvelous period of our country's prosperity and growth. The political application, therefore, in the life of the Nation, of its declared economic policies and principles must necessarily have created most favorable conditions for the growth and development of commerce and industry. There can be no other conclusion. Thus, in defending the tenets of the Republican Party and its contribution to the economic life of the Nation, we honor that brave defender of the Union, who, having preserved the Union, placed its economic destiny in the hands of the Republican Party—Abraham Lincoln.

The proof of our conclusions challenges us to a comparative study or analysis of our political history. The protagonists of Christian conduct go to the Bible for authority and parallel, and the students of political science study the lives of Washington, Jefferson, and Lincoln for example and precedent; but on this occasion I do not want to appear sacrilegious, neither do I want to be charged with political heresy, if I should find a political parallel from the sacred literature of ancient times. I have chosen a Biblical text for my political address, and it is found in a portion of the ninth verse of the eighteenth chapter of II Samuel in these words: "* * * and the mule that was under him went away."

David was King of Israel. It is recorded that the people were hungry and weary and thirsty in the wilderness. Absalom, the son of King David, stood by the way of the gate and kissed the hands of those who sought King David, and reviled and rebuked and condemned and criticized the King, and openly declared that if he were King justice would be done in the kingdom. Absalom was a politician. He had no reforms for Israel. He wanted to rule and reign. The day came when Absalom rebelled against King David, and in his flight before the mighty host of Israel's army through the woods of Ephraim, Absalom's head caught in the thick boughs of a mighty oak and "* * * he was taken up between the heaven and the earth; and the mule that was under him went away."

This was the tragic ending of the political career of a young man whose political philosophy was founded upon the fallacies of condemnation and abuse, and whose consuming ambition to rule and reign was inspired only by the purely selfish motives of political expediency.

This historical incident symbolizes the cruel and tragic fates of others in more recent years, who, having censured and severely condemned Republican administrations and having lifted high their unfurled banners, scrolled with empty issues of political expediency, have rebelled against the Republican Party in a desperate effort to ride the mule into political power of the Nation. Like the erring Absalom, they have been unable to ride under the strong economic boughs of Republicanism and they have been lifted up between the heaven and the earth and the mule that was under them went away.

The Democratic Party has been a party of paramount issues. Every four years bring a new paramount issue or a complete renunciation of a former paramount issue. This political vacillation has been due to the lack of a definite national program and has also accounted for its reliance upon political suitability and partisan subterfuge to attain its end or purpose.

In 1896, the Democratic Party declared that the paramount issue was the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1; and that courageous young Lochinvar of the West, William Jennings Bryan, was nominated for President. William McKinley, the Republican nominee for President, maintained that the return of the Nation to the protective policies of the Republican Party would reopen the doors of the closed factories, would stimulate trade and commerce, and would give to labor its heritage of a high wage. William McKinley was right, and his administration proved the fallacies of the free-silver plank. Like the story of old, William Jennings Bryan was lifted up between the heaven and the earth, and the mule that was under him went away.

Twice again, 1900 and 1908, William Jennings Bryan rode this Democratic mule in a futile attempt to rebel against the national doctrines and principles of the Republican Party. In 1900, the Democratic Party forsook its paramount issue of free and unlimited coinage of silver and declared that the paramount issue was "imperialism." In 1908 it was necessary for the Democratic Party to secure another paramount issue, and the platform declared that "'Shall the people rule?' is the overwhelming issue which manifests itself in all questions now under discussion." The Democratic Party was a party of opportunism. The people would not follow.

We can visualize Miss Democracy with the mantle of David's grief for his son, Absalom, upon her shoulders, crying out, "Would to God I had died for thee, O William, my son, my son!" when she learned that twice again her eloquent son had encountered the boughs of confidence and faith in Republican principles, and the mule that was under him had gone away.

In 1904 the Democratic Party was convinced that a resurrection of the free-silver plank and the imperialism plank would not bring success at the polls, and a new plank against trusts was discovered as a paramount issue. In this convention we have a political fiasco of a great political party repudiating its platform of eight years ago. The convention had nominated Alton B. Parker and was awaiting his wire of acceptance. His acceptance was predicated on the adoption of a gold plank, and to satisfy its nominee for President it repudiated its free-silver plank of 1896. Here is a practical lesson in political expediency and political suitability—a great national convention changing its declarations on national policies to meet the mere whims and ideas of a single individual. If free silver was right in 1896, it should have been right in 1904. The feeble attempt of Mr. Parker to rally the broken ranks of a great party left no sting of regret when the mule that was under him went away.

The bitter factional controversies in the Republican Party in 1912 permitted Woodrow Wilson, the standard bearer of the Democratic Party, to ride unmolested between the hostile and contending ranks of the Republican Party to success and victory. During this administration the smouldering embers of European hatred and intrigue burst forth into a raging conflagration of war. International treaties and rights were violated. American lives were ruthlessly destroyed upon the high seas. War was inevitable; neutrality was feigned. This insincere neutrality continued throughout the campaign of 1916, when Woodrow Wilson was again nominated for President by the Democratic Party on the issue, "He kept us out of war." Already President Wilson and his close political advisers had agreed secretly that war was inevitable; but political expediency dictated the withholding of actual facts until after the election and inauguration. It is most significant that Woodrow Wilson was inaugurated March 4, 1917, and on April 6, 1917, the United States declared war against Germany.

We remember the spectacular campaign of 1920 in which the Democratic Party endeavored to commit the United States to membership in the League of Nations. The people of the United States repudiated that effort by an overwhelming vote. Twelve years later, in 1932, we find the leading candidate for the Presidency of the Democratic Party backtracking on a definite, declared policy of his party, which he, as the Democratic nominee for Vice President, advocated with great zeal and earnestness in 1920. Franklin Roosevelt now says: "* * * that he would not advocate our entrance into the league, as the league is not now what it was when he advocated our entrance." In the light of the conflict between Japan and China over the protest of the League of Nations, which claims the membership of both warring nations, it is therefore the part of political wisdom and expedience to declare that the league is not what it should be and therefore we should not enter; but, my friends, that league is to-day just what the Republican Party in 1920 predicted it would be. Who was right? The Republican Party was right in 1920 and it does not have to change its political creed or dogma to be right on this issue in 1932.

Like Absalom, the fearless rider of the mule in 1920 found himself lifted up between the heaven and the earth by the sturdy boughs of national independence from entangling alliances with European powers, and the mule that was under him went away.

The political hysteria of the Democratic Party in choosing and changing paramount issues has been excelled only by dangerous symptoms of political amnesia concerning its declarations on the tariff. The Democratic Party was originally a free-trade party. To its everlasting credit, the party digressed from this dangerous pathway only to wander aimlessly in the fields of economic thought. It has been on all sides of the tariff question. The proof of my assertions is founded on the declarations of the various Democratic platforms.

In 1876 the Democratic platform denounced a protective tariff as a masterpiece of injustice, inequality, and robbery, as "fostering smuggling and enriching dishonest officials." The tariff plank closed with the following: "We demand that all customhouse taxation shall be for revenue only."

In 1888, at the close of Grover Cleveland's first administration and the Democratic Party's first experience in attempting to enact a tariff law consistent with its declarations and professions, the Democratic Party faced about and demanded a tariff written "with due allowance for the difference between the wages of American and foreign labor, which should promote and encourage every branch of industry and enterprise by giving them assurance of an expanded market and steady, continuous operations."

In 1904 it denounced protection as "a robbery of the many to enrich the few." In 1908 it qualified and modified its position so as to demand free trade on all articles when entered into competition with articles made in the United States by trusts, without defining a trust.

In 1912 history records a great political phenomenon. The Democratic Party completely abandoned its decided trend toward the protective features of a tariff and began its platform with the following declaration:

"We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government under the Constitution has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue."

In other words, it had taken the Democratic Party from 1860 to 1912, a period of 52 years, to discover that under our Constitution there legally can not be a protective tariff, and it embraced that theory and declared it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party; but four years later, when the country was in the throes of an approaching economic depression under a Democratic tariff, which depression was stayed only by the bloody hands of the World War, the Democratic Party discovered that America could have a protective tariff, and declared: "We recognize that tariff rates are necessarily subject to change to meet changing conditions in the world's progress and trade."

Four years ago in the Democratic convention at Houston, Tex., amid the noisy acclaim and enthusiasm of Tammany, Alfred E. Smith, a favorite son of that renowned organization, was nominated for President. Into his care was intrusted that faithful mule, which despite its age still retains the fractious qualities and disposition of all mules; and into his hands were placed the standards of a great party, which he deliberately cast to the ground and substituted his own standard, thereby repudiating his own party platform and the paramount authority of the Constitution and the integrity of the laws of the United States. A few days before the election, John J. Raskob, a pseudo-Republican who had become chairman of the Democratic National Committee, saw the unmistakable signs of defeat and immediately endeavored to have each Democratic candidate for election to the House of Representatives declare himself for a competitive tariff, camouflaged as a protective tariff. History will probably never complete the interesting story of the number or the personnel of those who actually committed themselves. It was too late, however, to save Mr. Smith by any ruse of political expediency. On that fateful day in November, 1928, Alfred E. Smith, like many eminent predecessors, was lifted up between the heaven and the earth and the mule that was under him went away.

This brief, but accurate record of the Democratic tariff declarations and professions may have been uninteresting; but, my friends, upon that record hangs the economic fate of this great Nation. The enemies of the Republican Party have repeatedly declared that the protective principles of our present tariff are responsible for the present national depression. The friends of a protective tariff have asked these enemies to name the rates and schedules that are too high and should be reduced; but no voice has been raised in reply.

In this connection, I want to call your attention to the flexible provisions of the much-maligned Hawley-Smoot tariff bill. Upon petition, the United States Tariff Commission is authorized to investigate any and all of the rates and schedules of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill and recommended either an increase or decrease in rates in accordance with petitions filed. The approval of the recommendations of the said commission by the President of the United States establishes new tariff rates. No tariff law is without its inconsistencies and irregularities, and the Congress of the United States delegated its power of correcting and adjusting rates to the Tariff Commission. It may be interesting to note that those who have endeavored to transform our economic tariff walls into "wailing walls" of dissatisfaction and distrust have not availed themselves of the flexible provisions of our tariff laws; but on the other hand the records before the Tariff Commission show that a majority of the petitions filed for reduction in tariff rates are filed by foreign manufacturers and importers of foreign goods. Every protest against our present tariff rates, without attempting to take advantage of the flexible provisions of our law, is political hypocrisy and demagoguery; and is also an eloquent plea in defense of the petitions filed by representatives of foreign interests seeking the markets of America.

The Democratic Party has given recent utterance to a new tariff policy. It has spoken by a legislative enactment which is a faint and feeble echo of the many vehement charges against our present tariff law. The House of Representatives in the United States Congress is Democratic. That party has absolute control of every committee and every office of authority. If it believes the statements and assertions of its spokesmen that the present tariff law was responsible for our depressed economic conditions, it was the patriotic duty and privilege of that party to correct the present economic conditions and restore the country to prosperity. This plan, however, was not adopted; and the legislative action of the Democratic Party placed the seal of insincerity upon each statement of its friends in denouncing and condemning our present tariff policies. Without attempting to reduce the rates and schedules of a single article, the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives declared a new economic policy, which is found in H. R. 6662. This bill destroys the elasticity of the flexible provisions of our present tariff and commits this Nation to a permanent international economic conference. The Republican Party stands squarely against any policy of submitting our domestic problems to any international court, and certainly this great Nation should forever reserve the right of fostering our agriculture, developing our industries, and protecting our labor without the advice and consent of a single foreign country. In truth, the Democratic Party has spoken and the economic fate of a Nation hangs in a balance.

There is, however, a concerted movement on the part of many Democrats to rewrite our present tariff law. This effort will naturally result in the reduction of our present tariff rates and in the complete abandonment of our markets to foreign competition. History may repeat. During the economic depression of 1896 and 1920 the Nation was suffering from the effects of the low revenue rates and schedules of Democratic tariffs. Under these laws the Nation passed quickly from prosperity to depression, and the immediate application of the protective policies of the Republican Party completely restored prosperity to the Nation. In these campaigns the Republican Party was correct in its diagnosis and prescriptions; but to-day in this period of world-wide depression the Democratic Party pleads for and demands a tariff similar to those which produced depressions. I maintain that that which destroyed industry and robbed labor in the days of prosperity can not revive industry and restore labor in the days of adversity. That which destroys life can not resurrect the dead. It is strange, indeed, that our Democratic friends advocate identically the same remedy for the cure of the present depression that destroyed industry and labor in the days of prosperity.

In view of this record, if all the paramount issues and all the inconsistent tariff planks declared in the various Democratic platforms since 1860 were compiled and written into one platform, it would be a meaningless compendium of a political abracadabra. It would add nothing to the political life of the Nation.

On the other hand, from the platform planks of the Republican Party since 1860 you can trace the progress and the growth and the development of the greatest nation of the world. Nowhere do we find an abandonment of a single issue until it had been vitalized and incorporated into the social, political, and economic life of this country. In the services of the Republican Party to the country there has been no deviation from its policies and no deflection from its economic course. It has never sacrificed national principles for party success. It has been the friend of the Nation in the days of prosperity, and it remains the true friend of the Nation in this day of adversity.

This is the day of national adversity. The economic shores of America have been lashed by a tidal wave of the most destructive world-wide catastrophe of all ages, and America has felt the force and effect of a violent repercussion of the unstable economic conditions of foreign nations. There is stagnation of business, there is unemployment, and there is much suffering and distress throughout the Nation. We can not close our eyes to these appalling conditions, and to correct and remedy them the united efforts of all individuals and parties are absolutely essential and necessary. Already the United States has been saved and relieved from the more acute affliction and the more intense suffering, misery, and distress of other countries. A comparative analysis of conditions affecting the nations of the world will substantiate this assertion, and the truth of this condition is also verified by the numerous statements of foreign representatives who are amazed at the manner in which America is meeting this world-wide crisis.

It is most pleasing and gratifying to know that America has been saved from the depths of the more disastrous and the more deplorable fate of other nations; but this favorable situation does not relieve us from the patriotic responsibility of reconstructing the economic forces of the Nation. In this effort to discharge our responsibilities there is no place for bitter denunciations, and it does not contemplate the capitalization of human misery and human suffering for mere political advantage and political expediency.

In the Capital City of your Nation there is a man who has been maligned, condemned, and criticized as no other man since the days of the immortal Abraham Lincoln; and, like Abraham Lincoln, with patience and forbearance and with a sympathetic understanding he silently endeavors to solve the great problems "with malice toward none and charity for all." The vicious, unwarranted attacks of his political enemies have not stayed his guiding hands, neither have they dimmed his clear vision of his charted course for national economic recovery. With a resolute heart he stands undismayed and unafraid at the helm of the ship of state. He has submitted to the country the most comprehensive program of reconstruction ever submitted to this or any other nation. By this act he has confounded and confused his political enemies and has compelled admiration and praise from his friends. The issues of a restored economic life, which will lead us beyond the lowering clouds of gloom and despondency into the early dawn of a new day of confidence and hope, flow from the sympathetic and patriotic heart of the President of the United States, Herbert Hoover.

At the very beginning of our economic depression President Hoover called together a conference of leaders in industry and labor, at which conference verbal agreements were entered into which stabilized the wages of labor and saved this country from the repetition of more than 2,500 strikes and lockouts during the closing days of President Wilson's administration. He also inaugurated a program of public construction, including improvements of navigable rivers and harbors, and immediate construction of public roads and public buildings. In order that the stricken farmers, afflicted by the drought in 21 States, might rehabilitate themselves, a system of loans was provided. The credit of the country having been undermined, the President directed the mobilization of the banks of the country in a huge credit association, with a capital stock of $500,000,000. This act inspired confidence in our financial institutions and the withdrawal of deposits from the banks of the country was checked, and the normal flow of credit was reestablished.

In January, 1932, in a special message to the Congress of the United States, President Hoover's recommendation embodied a proposal to strengthen the Federal land bank system by extending additional credit of $125,000,000. This proposal has been translated into a law and its operation has prevented wholesale foreclosures on farm lands and has increased the facilities of the farm banks for additional farm loans to farmers throughout the country. In order to inspire and maintain confidence in agriculture, industry, and labor he recommended the creation of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with a capital credit of $2,000,000,000. This corporation has been duly created by the Congress of the United States, and this act of the administration gives to the Nation every assurance that credit channels will be opened and will provide financing facilities for our financial institutions, agriculture, commerce, and industry.

The President has also recommended the immediate passage of a law creating a system of home loan discount banks similar in character to the Federal land banks. This law would encourage home ownership, and would relieve the present home owners from financial embarrassment by providing facilities of renewing mortgages and deeds of trust on homes, and would relieve the heavy financial burdens of country banks, savings banks, and building and loan associations, and would undoubtedly stimulate home ownership and home building throughout the entire country.

Other recommendations of the President which are now occupying the attention of Congress are—

1. An enlargement of the discount privileges of the Federal reserve system in cases of emergency;
2. Development of a plan guaranteeing an early distribution of dividends to depositors of closed banks;
3. A revision of our transportation laws so as to restore confidence in the bonds of our railroads, a majority of which bonds are held by savings banks and insurance companies throughout the country; and
4. The revision of our national bank laws in order to safeguard the depositors of our banks and create confidence in the banking institutions of our country.

The significance of the reconstruction program of the President of the United States is based on an effort to unshackle the forces of economic recovery by releasing the credit of the Nation and directing its flow into the channels of commerce and industry, which will check the further degeneration of prices and will fortify us against continued shocks of world instability. This program of President Hoover is the only program of relief from our present economic conditions before the Nation. No other individual nor party has offered a solution or a remedy.

The Democratic press is responsible for the widespread propaganda of praise for legislative efforts of the Democratic Party to remedy our present depressed economic conditions in Congress. This is false propaganda. There is no program for relief except the program of President Hoover. The Democratic Party is without a definite program; but it endeavoring to take credit for the constructive ideas of the President. As I have already stated, the House of Representatives of the United States Congress is under the complete control and domination of the Democratic Party. Every legislative committee of the House is also controlled by the Democrats. Bills introduced in Congress are referred by a Democratic speaker to a Democratic committee. No objections can be found to this general practice of our 2-party system. When the Republican Party is in political control the organization and the procedure is the same.

At the beginning of the present session of Congress President Hoover designated several Republican friends of the administration to introduce bills carrying out his constructive recommendations to Congress. These bills were promptly referred to appropriate committees; but, these committees being Democratic in complexion, no consideration was given these bills until some Democratic member of the committee in which the bill was pending introduced the same bill without a single alteration and amendment. Then the Hoover bill introduced and sponsored by a Democrat was ready for a hearing, consideration, and favorable report. These political maneuvers are without precedent and are responsible for this false propaganda in the Democratic press. This procedure is conclusive proof that, despite vicious condemnation of the Republican Party, the Democratic Party is without chart and compass in this maelstrom of an economic depression.

Verily, the old Democratic mule can not prepare and condition himself for the coming campaign on the scant and stubble pasture of the wide and uncertain range of the Democratic Party; but must necessarily wander beyond his own political fold, in perfect step with his own raucous brays, to the more luxuriant pastures and meadows in the fertile grazing lands of the Republican issues and policies.

Early in the coming month of November the electorate of the United States will have an opportunity to determine the national economic policies of this Government for the next four years. If the Democratic Party is successful, what paramount issues declared by that party will be translated into national policies of our Government? No man knows. Not even the three unterrified "musketeers" of that party, at a Jackson Day banquet held recently in the city of Washington, while bandying and flourishing the time-worn political weapons of calumny, abuse, and defamation, were able to suggest or declare a single fundamental issue. If the broad and constructive program of the Republican Party is destroyed or abandoned, what economic principles will be substituted? Are you willing that the present economic structure of the Nation shall be razed and demolished without definite plans and specifications for the rebuilding of a new structure? My countrymen, this is not the day for the application of vague and indefinite dogma of political expediency. This day of national emergency is not the time for political experiments.

In the light of political history, I have every confidence in the American people that they will not abandon the fundamental principles and doctrines of the Republican Party, which have met the needs of a great people in every emergency. The noble spirit of Abraham Lincoln, on this occasion of the anniversary of his birth, warns the Nation in this day of national emergency, as he warned it in the darkest days of the Civil War, "that we must not swap horses in the middle of the stream." To heed this wise counsel will lead us into the paths of economic recovery, and history will again record the tragic story of an ambitious leader who, in his flight from the militant hosts of Republicanism, caught his head in the sturdy boughs of confidence and faith in the party of Abraham Lincoln and Herbert Hoover; and, like Absalom of old, "was taken up between the heaven and the earth, and the mule that was under him went away."

ROCHESTER (N. Y.) EMERGENCY EMPLOYMENT PLAN

Mr. WHITLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by setting forth the Rochester, N. Y., plan for aiding the unemployed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following emergency employment plan:

The Rochester (N. Y.) emergency employment plan recently put into operation is designed (1) to provide additional employment, (2) to stimulate business and trade, and (3) to encourage public confidence in the country's situation by putting idle, or hoarded, dollars back into their wonted channels of circulation. The encouragement of public confidence is a natural by-product, or result, of purposes (1) and (2). The plan does not contemplate foolish or extravagant spending, or buying of things or making of improvements that are not needed or that the purchaser can not afford. In brief, under the plan the citizens of Rochester and Monroe County have signed pledges to spend a specified amount of money within three months from date of the pledge in improving their property by making needed repairs or alterations or purchasing desirable equipment, or by making other needed purchases for self, family, or friends, all of which expenditures might otherwise be deferred.

As a result of a 10-day intensive campaign to put the plan into operation, almost 11,000 individuals and firms of Rochester and Monroe County signed pledges for expenditures aggregating more than $6,000,000. While the pledges do not specify what the expenditures will be for, those actively in charge of the campaign estimate that about 75 or 80 per cent of the expenditures will be for repairs and improvements to homes, commercial, industrial, and other property. Almost immediately following the campaign merchants, materials dealers, and others connected with the building industry reported a considerable improvement in business, sales, and demand for services, and a marked increase in employment was noted. Many projects covered by the pledges are under way and are furnishing employment to many men who otherwise might be idle and on the relief rolls of the community. Business men of Rochester state that the campaign also has brought about an attitude of increased confidence in the general situation on the part of residents of the city.

One of the most important features of the plan is the pledge and the "performance" or fulfillment-of-pledge report. The one says "I will" and the other says "I have." Blank forms for these are presented here as follows:

(Date) _____ _____.

Believing that a dollar invested in employing labor does more good than a dollar given as charity, and desiring to help to increase employment, I hereby pledge that I will, during the next three months (or before _____ _____, 1932), expend at least $_____ in improving my home, factory, store, buildings, or grounds by purchasing desirable equipment or by making needed additions, repairs, or alterations; and/or by making personal purchases for myself, family, or friends, which otherwise might be deferred.

The plan was originated by Libanus M. Todd, a retired manufacturer and public-spirited citizen of Rochester. He first presented the idea to some of his friends and associates and to leaders in the chamber of commerce and civic committee on unemployment. This group indorsed the plan, and it was decided that before the plan was given any publicity in the press it should be tested out among a representative cross section of the residents of Rochester and Monroe County, to provide an organization committee of sponsors for the plan. Mr. Todd and a few friends conducted an informal canvass and procured 486 sponsors for the emergency employment plan. The sponsors not only indorsed the plan, but each individually signed a pledge to spend a total of $701,644 for real-estate improvements and other purchases. Among the committee of sponsors were the members of the board of county supervisors, members of the city council, of the city and county judiciary, educational institutions and public schools, and individuals connected with the community's business, industrial, professional, labor, and occupational pursuits. Virtually all classes and income groups in the community were represented in the committee of sponsors.

The campaign to put the plan into operation was conducted under the auspices of the Rochester Civic Committee on Unemployment, with Mr. Todd as general chairman. A campaign manager organized a force of canvassers to present the plan to every potential participant in Rochester and Monroe County. Campaign headquarters were established at the chamber of commerce.

The organization and drive were similar to the war-time Liberty bond drives, or a present-day community chest drive. The city and county were divided into seven divisions, comprising certain wards or townships, with two chairmen for each division. These division chairmen themselves selected a ward chairman for each ward or township, and the ward chairmen selected their own block captains, who in turn picked their own block workers or solicitors. The organization personnel comprised 14 division chairmen, 24 ward chairmen, 19 township chairmen, 100 block captains, and 994 block workers, a total of 1,151 active workers for the campaign. There also was a publicity committee.

The campaign began on Friday, December 4, and ended on Monday, December 14. A campaign fund of $11,000 was contributed by public-spirited citizens, firms, and corporations. The campaign started with an organization dinner December 4 and closed with a final-report dinner on December 14. Between those dates five noon-day luncheons were held for the workers, when reports were made public as to the amount of pledges secured each day. Stories were carried in the newspapers each day giving the total number of pledges secured and total amount pledged up to date. The expense of luncheons and dinners for the workers, and expense of printing, mailing, stenographic work, and similar services were paid for from the campaign fund. The campaign manager and canvassers received no pay for their work but contributed their time and services on a strictly volunteer basis. About $5,100 was spent for dinners and luncheons for the workers, approximately $1,200 for stenographers and clerk hire, etc., and the balance for printed matter, blanks, pledges, canvassers' manual, identification buttons for canvassers, and other material connected with the campaign. Each of the three daily newspapers donated five pages of display advertising space for the campaign, or a total of 15 pages. In addition each newspaper assigned reporters to assist in giving publicity to the plan and campaign and to help promote it.

About three weeks were required to organize the campaign and secure the workers needed. Both men and women were numbered among the volunteer workers. Before the canvassers were sent out each was given careful instructions as to the purposes of the campaign, methods of making solicitations, etc., and all were given special printed information which would enable them to answer questions put to them by residents concerning the campaign and its objects. Each canvasser also was furnished with a badge on which was printed "Emergency Employment Plan, Official Worker," for identification purposes, and each canvasser was supplied with pledge blanks and cards containing information to the householder as to how to procure workers from the Public Employment Center of Rochester. A large envelope containing the canvassers' manual and other printed material, all of which was called the "worker's kit," was furnished each canvasser. On the envelope was printed the schedule of dinner and luncheon meetings.

On a 4-page folder there was printed the citizen's pledge, the "performance" or fulfillment of pledge report, a page of information to the citizen as to how he could help relieve the unemployment situation, and a page containing a check list of improvements that might be made to real estate. The pledge and performance report were printed on one page, separated by a perforation and numbered in duplicate. The pledge when signed was torn off and turned in by the canvasser to the campaign headquarters and the citizen retained the performance report and the check list of improvements and information concerning how he could help in relieving unemployment under the plan.

No definite goal as to the amount of pledges to be secured was set at the outset of the campaign. Sponsors of the plan, however, hoped that $3,000,000 in pledges could be secured in the 10-day drive. This figure was almost reached at the end of the sixth day. At the final report dinner-meeting it was found that a total of 10,771 individuals and firms of Rochester city and Monroe County had signed pledges to spend $6,026,351.96 during the ensuing three months for repairs, improvements, or equipment for real-estate properties—homes, stores, plants, factories, etc.—and in buying articles which they needed, but which otherwise they would not have purchased during the next three months. In this total there are included expenditures by a large public utility amounting to about $600,000 for extensions and improvements which it originally had planned to make over a period of three years, but which, as a result of the campaign the company advanced to the present.

Up to December 21, the campaign organization had received reports of fulfillment of pledges from 25 individuals and firms. These 25 pledges promised expenditures aggregating $21,000, but the reports showed that a total of $25,000 had been expended, or $4,000 more than called for in the pledges. The campaign organization intends to check up on the pledges obtained and "performance" reports received at the end of the three months' period from the time the campaign ended, and those who have not sent in reports of fulfillment of pledges will be interviewed by the canvassers who made the original solicitation to ascertain why the performance reports have not been made.

One prominent citizen of Rochester who already had made repairs and improvements to his property and who wished to participate in this campaign decided to install a garbage-disposal plant at his home. Another citizen arranged with the public employment center of Rochester to send him a competent carpenter, whom he would give three days' work each week around his home or store for the next three months. Mr. Todd, originator of the plan, arranged to expend $7,000 in improving the grounds about his home. In order to make these improvements it was necessary to obtain a carload of brick from a brick manufacturer in Virginia, two carloads of shrubs and plants, etc., from Ohio and Pennsylvania, and a carload of fertilizer from Buffalo, N. Y. Thus the Rochester local unemployment plan helped out the railroads to the extent of transporting four carloads of materials, a brick manufacturer, and several workers in Virginia were furnished some business and employment, nurserymen and their employees in Ohio and Pennsylvania were given some business and work, and the brick dealer and nurserymen and their employees in Rochester were given business and work by this project. In addition, Mr. Todd has employed 15 workers full time for six weeks making improvements at his home; the force of workmen was reduced to 9 for an additional week and 4 or 5 workers will be given an extra two weeks' work on this one job. In the spring he will have some more work for several men finishing up the job.

The daily newspapers assigned their own reporters to handle the news stories relating to the campaign and "played up" the developments daily in a way to attract the attention of the Monroe County reading public to the employment plan and the campaign. The publicity committee, comprising expert advertising men of Rochester, prepared the advertisements for the campaign, using such headlines as, "Sign the pledge for prosperity to stimulate business and relieve unemployment"; "Daddy's got a job, mamma! Daddy's got a job!"; "Take a 'guest-eye' inventory to-day; be ready when the agent of prosperity knocks at your door"; "What can I do to stimulate business and relieve unemployment?"; "You personally can do a lot to cure unemployment"; "Jobs, wages, prosperity—you hold the key"; "Have you signed the pledge for prosperity?" Each advertisement was attractively designed and some were aptly illustrated, and each carried a copy of the pledge and a facsimile of the official workers' button. Several of the advertisements also carried the check list of suggested repairs or improvements that could be made to property.

The names of persons or firms signing pledges were not made public. It will be noted that the pledges do not state what the expenditures will be made for, this being left entirely to the judgment of the signer. Every effort was made to eliminate all forms of commercialism from the canvass and from the campaign so that the residents would not be subjected to annoyance from solicitation by trade groups. Many of the business interests of the community, however, did take legitimate advantage of the opportunity to tie in with the campaign in their advertising and merchandising methods. Many merchants and other business groups gave support to the unemployment campaign by reference to it in their advertising. All interests in the community cooperated in every way possible to promote the plan and the campaign in its behalf.

In the publicity and in the canvassers' solicitations emphasis was given to the fact that the Rochester emergency employment plan was not a fund-raising campaign to provide relief but a movement to provide employment and stimulate business in expenditures for things needed and which the resident could afford to buy. The sponsors of the plan and the organization specifically declined to recommend any contractors or dealers to persons desiring to have certain work done, but the canvassers and members of the committee furnished inquiring residents with cards containing information as to how to procure a worker by telephoning or calling upon the Public Employment Center of Rochester. Also when the canvassers interviewed residents who were in need of relief they were furnished the names and addresses of the relief agencies to whom they should apply for assistance.

The information for residents as to what they can do under the plan to assist in providing additional employment and stimulating business, and which is printed on the 4-page folder containing the pledge and performance report, reads as follows:

"PROGRAM UNDER THE AUSPICES OF CIVIC COMMITTEE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

"The independent effort of an individual may be but a feeble gesture, but when he joins in mass formation with his neighbors the same effort becomes an irresistible and mighty force."

HOW YOU CAN HELP

There are two things you can do—

1. Improve and repair your home, factory, store, buildings, or grounds.

2. Exercise your normal purchasing power and buy the articles you need and want.

As you do one or both of these things jobs are provided and unemployment is relieved. Whether your real-estate improvements and your purchases be large or small, you are making a real contribution toward supplying jobs, and your efforts, joined with the efforts of thousands of others, will have an immense effect.

Many suggestions for property improvement, probably unthought of, the carrying out of which means the direct employment of labor, are listed on the next page.

While the sponsors of this plan do not urge any foolish spending, they do nevertheless believe that if every individual who is in a position to exercise even his normal purchasing power would do so instead of feeling that it is essential to cut expenditures to the minimum, there would be immediate relief from the present stagnation in building, manufacturing, and distribution.

The idle dollar benefits no one. On the other hand, every dollar which is put into circulation at the present time keeps on working for the benefit of the entire community.

For this reason this program should appeal to you to do your personal share in relieving the present situation by spending money for the direct employment of labor, as suggested, and by the indirect employment of labor in the consumption of products already made or produced.

Concretely, this means that the individual who is accustomed to buying one suit of clothes should not try to make the old one do; that the individual who usually purchases two suits should not now provide himself with merely one; and that the purchase of all other appareling should be considered in the same way; that if new furnishings or equipment for the home are contemplated, they should be purchased immediately rather than deferred; that if you want a new radio, buy it now; that if a new automobile is being considered, contact a dealer at once; that so-called luxuries should not be considered as nonessentials; that the Christmas list should be extended rather than curtailed.

The purchase of all of these things suggested and hundreds not enumerated means employment. This means jobs and wages.

The Rochester committee in charge of the emergency employment campaign is having printed a complete detailed description of the Rochester plan, form of organization, and methods employed in promoting the campaign to put the plan into operation. This material will be furnished to other communities upon request. Also, individuals familiar with the Rochester plan and procedure in organizing and carrying out the campaign probably can be procured to go to other cities and assist in putting the plan into operation if such assistance is deemed necessary by the local committee in charge of unemployment relief.

The results achieved in Rochester under the plan here described have attracted marked interest and attention from cities all over the United States, and several communities already have written to the Rochester committee for information on this subject, with the idea of putting the plan into operation in their own communities.

EMERGENCY HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution, House Resolution 163.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 163

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 9642, a bill to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment.

That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Roads, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and any amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BLANTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes. Mr. Chairman, I shall not discuss the great value of a national highway system, nor shall I elaborate on how necessary one is for the happiness and progress of the American people.

I feel, on the other hand, that if I can furnish any information on this measure, the committee had rather hear that.

This is an emergency measure submitted primarily to help unemployment; and, secondly, to help the several States of the Union, who are now unable to match their Federal-aid allotments.

In connection with the unemployment feature, let me remind the committee that by to-night it will be the first measure that will have passed either branch of Congress that seeks to give a job to a single human being in this country. [Applause.]

We had a similar measure last year for $80,000,000. This bill seeks to appropriate $120,000,000 to be apportioned according to existing methods among the several States, and also there is an appropriation of twelve and a half million dollars for roads in national parks, national forests, Indian reservations, and so forth. Now, the committee has been most desirous of preserving the integrity of the Federal road law.

For that reason, and following the precedent set last year, this appropriation is in the form of a temporary loan to the States, which shall be deducted out of future authorizations in 10 annual installments, beginning in the fiscal year of 1938. If the committee will recall, the appropriation that passed last year for $80,000,000 provided for deductions in five annual payments, and $16,000,000 of that sum has already been deducted.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in my remarks a table showing the amount that each State will receive of the $120,000,000 authorization, and a table showing the current status of Federal-aid construction, together with the unexpended balance to the credit of each State as of January 1, 1932, and the monthly average employment table on Federal and State highway work in 1931.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to insert the matter indicated at this point. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[1] The term "stage construction" refers to additional work done on projects previously improved with Federal aid. In general, such additional work consists of the construction of a surface of higher type than was provided in the initial improvement.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, section 3 of this bill is new legislation. It has the hearty approval of the Bureau of Roads. At the proper time an amendment will be offered by the committee to insert after the word "employment," on page 3, line 24, the words "of local labor." In connection with labor, let me say that this table which I have inserted in the RECORD shows that approximately 300,000 men received employment from the $80,000,000 fund per month last year; but twice that many will be employed in transportation and preparation of materials for construction, and it is estimated by the Bureau of Roads that this measure will directly and indirectly give employment to 1,000,000 American citizens.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Would it not be a good idea to have a provision in section 3 that the labor employed should be American citizens. It happens in my State, and I am sure in a number of other States, that foreigners are employed and do the principal part of the work, and if we are going to help local labor, would it not be well to have the bill provide that American citizens should be employed?

Mr. WARREN. I shall reserve my opinion on that and think about it during the discussion of the bill. I can tell the gentleman that in the expenditure of the $80,000,000 emergency fund last year not a single convict in America was employed on the work.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. It is not a question of convicts, it is a question of foreign citizens. For instance, Mexicans and others are employed. If the gentleman or some member of the committee does not offer that amendment, I propose to offer such an amendment myself.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I have been interested in the same subject, and I have drafted an amendment that no part of the fund should be used to pay any contractor or subcontractor who employs alien labor on any of these projects. I ask the gentleman to have that in mind. I believe the work on these projects should be limited to citizens of the United States.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I suggest that situations of that kind can be largely covered by the laws of the several States, which are really to be considered in these public contracts.

Mr. WARREN. I understood that is true from Mr. MacDonald, the Chief of the Bureau of Roads.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. In the gentleman's opening statement he said that this is an emergency measure. I wish the gentleman would address himself more to this feature of the bill, explaining why, when the Committee on Ways and Means is laboring to bring out a tax bill, and while the people generally are protesting against being increasingly taxed, this measure, calling for $132,500,000, as a new project, not provided for in the Budget, not recommended, should now be authorized and appropriated for.

Mr. WARREN. Here is why it is an emergency. The gentleman knows that there are over 8,000,000 people walking the streets of this Nation to-day unemployed. It has been demonstrated by all of the evidence before the committee, and given to us by the Bureau of Roads, that this will give employment directly and indirectly to 1,000,000 people.

There is also an additional reason. The several States of the Union will have in the Treasury to their credit $109,000,000 of Federal-aid funds that three-fourths of them are unable to match. That money will lapse and be turned back into the Treasury within a period of two years. To show that we have made this measure an emergency it has been provided that this money must be under contract and expended prior to June, 1933.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Then the real effect of this measure is to make available to States the $109,000,000 they are not able to make available themselves?

Mr. WARREN. It means an immediate expenditure, which the Bureau of Roads has informed the committee it can at once get to work on of approximately $250,000,000 throughout this Nation. [Applause.] It has also been conclusively shown to the committee and approved by the Bureau of Roads and the State highway commissions in, I believe, every State in the Union that 90 per cent of the road dollar after eight successive steps goes to labor. To bear that out I ask unanimous consent to insert here a table and also a statement released to-day by the Bureau of Roads in that connection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Distribution of $1,000 paid for concrete highway, showing the approximate total amount which reaches labor in each of eight successive steps

The contractor's distribution of this $1,000:
Labor	$141.00
Aggregates	324.00
Cement	324.00
Steel	27.00
Equipment	100.00
Plant installation	27.00
Bonding, etc	22.00
Gross profit	35.00
	1,000.00

After distribution of mill and quarry items:
Salaries and wages	302.70
Freight	406.70
Materials and supplies	17.15
Fuel	35.50
Interest	14.10
Taxes	24.10
Department and repairs	131.15
Depletion	10.50
Profits	46.10
Miscellaneous	10.00
	1,000.00

After distribution of freight charges:
Salaries and wages	$477.70
Materials and supplies	57.55
Fuel	57.20
Interest	61.70
Taxes	49.70
Depreciation and repairs	184.65
Profit	91.00
Depletion	10.50
Redistribution	10.00
	1,000.00
After distribution of fuel costs:
Salaries and wages	516.60
Materials and supplies	64.20
Interest and rents	63.75
Taxes	51.40
Repairs and depreciation	188.75
Profit	91.00
Depletion	14.90
Redistribution	10.00
	1,000.00
After distribution of repairs and depreciation:
Salaries and wages	572.60
Materials and supplies	170.80
Interest, rents, etc	65.65
Taxes	56.10
Depletion	14.90
Profit	109.85
Redistribution	10.00

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1932.

LABOR GETS GREAT SHARE OF HIGHWAY EXPENDITURE

At least 85 per cent and possibly more than 90 per cent of the money expended for a concrete pavement is ultimately paid out as wages and salaries, according to the Bureau of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture.

This conclusion is reached as a result of studies of typical concrete construction jobs, and it is believed to be approximately true for other high-type pavements. Expenditures were traced back through various channels until the money went into personal use.

About 15 per cent of the cost of concrete pavements is paid to men employed directly on the construction jobs. About 12 per cent is paid to men employed in quarries, sand pits, mills, and factories where the materials are produced, and about 14 per cent is paid to men employed by the transportation companies (principally the railroads) for hauling these materials to the jobs. Part of the cost is paid to the men who build the machinery and equipment used in constructing highways. Even more is paid to the men who build the machinery and equipment used in the sand pits, the quarries, the cement mills, and the steel mills where road materials are produced and to those who build the equipment of companies that deliver these materials. Some is paid to the miners, the men who work in the refineries, and those who work on the pipe lines and in the oil fields—the industries which provide the fuel that produces the power used in producing materials, in transporting them, and in working them into finished pavements.

A part of the cost of high-type roads goes to those industries which furnish the supplies used all along the line. Some goes to the men who make blasting powder, some to those who make hand tools; and even the very minor items, such as cotton waste and the sheet of emery paper with which the mechanic smooths a joint on a machine he is repairing, absorb a bit of the cost at which pavements are built.

About 75 per cent of the cost of a high-type pavement filters back through the transportation companies and through industry to men who work for salaries and wages at points distant from where these highways are built. Most of these men are city workers employed by the transportation companies or in the mills and factories—men who may never see more than a few of the highways their efforts help to build but who, taken altogether, receive several times as much in salaries and wages as is paid to the men who are directly employed in building them.

The bureau's studies further show that out of every $100 paid to the contractors who build concrete pavements—and much the same thing is true of high-type highway construction generally—more than $40 passes through the hands of the transportation companies (principally railroads) and assists these companies in maintaining a profitable volume of business. Approximately $13 is paid to the producers of aggregate (sand, gravel, broken stone, and slag); about $24 goes to the cement mills. At least $16 ultimately goes to the manufacturers of machinery and equipment, including trucks, railroad cars, locomotives, etc. Some is paid to the manufacturers of explosives; some to the producers of coal; some to the gasoline refineries; and much to manufacturers who contribute in lesser degree by supplying materials used by those who produce the materials used in highway construction and those who transport them or who build the equipment used at some point in the long series of processes out of which highways result.

From these facts it is apparent that the construction of highways, particularly those of the higher types, not only provides work for those employed on the job, but it provides a great deal more work for men employed in industry and in transportation; and that, in addition to this, it supplies a large volume of business to those industries through which the materials that must be used are collected, worked, and reworked before they become a part of a finished pavement.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does that statement contain the ratio to each State in the Union?

Mr. WARREN. It does.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. I have listened to what the gentleman has had to say with very much interest concerning the method of distribution. As I understood him, he offers this proposition primarily as an emergency matter to meet the unemployment situation.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. If that be true, has the gentleman given any consideration to the method of distribution that would consider population as the basis, rather than consider roads as the basis, upon the theory that there is the greatest amount of need not where there is the greatest amount of roads but where there is the greatest amount of people?

Mr. WARREN. I think it is the purpose and desire of the House to maintain the integrity of the Federal-aid loan system as now existing.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. COLTON. That is one of the primary elements taken into consideration in the distribution of all road appropriations.

Mr. KETCHAM. I am familiar with that; but I intend to offer an amendment and some discussion a little later on, so I wanted the gentleman's reaction to the matter at this time. My amendment will be to propose distribution according to population, disregarding the road mileage and area limits that are now in the present form of distribution.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman tell the committee in what way this will help unemployment in the large centers of population, particularly the cities?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the gentleman that indirectly it helps them a great deal. I do not have time to enter into the statement that I just put into the RECORD, issued by the Bureau of Roads this morning, and appearing in practically all the newspapers this morning, but the gentleman will see that indirectly it covers all of the country.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. In answering that question, if the gentleman will go down to the place where they line up for jobs in the city of Washington, he will see that is where they go to get men to build roads.

Mr. WARREN. Absolutely.

Now, section 4 is new legislation as an amendment to the Federal highway act, and that should be particularly appealing to States like Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Ohio, Maryland, North Carolina, Florida, and perhaps a few others. Section 4 permits those States which have completed 90 per cent of their 7 per cent system to add 1 per cent additional mileage. I understand that in the case of Ohio there might have been some doubt if Ohio could have used all of the appropriation authorized by this bill, but under section 4, if they have completed 90 per cent of their system, they are allowed 1 per cent additional mileage.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLANTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9642 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I intend to make a unanimous-consent request, but before doing so I would like to make an explanation.

I should have conferred with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules, as to the discussion of the rule. I had assumed that there was no opposition to the rule.

When the Speaker put the question to the House as to whether or not the rule should be adopted without debate, perhaps I should have intervened and inquired of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] whether he desired debate on that side. I did not do so, and I accept whatever criticism I should shoulder for my failure in that respect.

I have been informed by my friend the gentleman from Indiana that there were requests for time on his side.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate on the resolution be increased to two and one-half hours, in order that the one-half hour additional may take care of such requests as the gentleman from Indiana may have for time, and that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] may control the additional 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Will the House indulge the Chair to make a statement? The Chair will state that he should assume the major portion of responsibility of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. The Chair sometimes puts questions rather quickly, for the purpose of transaction of business, when he thinks there is no opposition. I think the Chair is more to blame than the gentleman from North Carolina, because the Chair put the question rather quickly and it was agreed to before any Member had an opportunity to object.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. PURNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and, of course, I shall not object, I merely make the reservation in order to say that the statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] is entirely unnecessary. The gentleman is so thoroughly incapable of doing anybody an injustice at any time in any way that it is needless to say his apology is unnecessary. [Applause.]

I wish to say in justification of my own position that I was not entirely asleep. Gentlemen were conferring with me who had requested time, and before I realized it the Speaker's gavel fell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8642).

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry. The rule provides that the time shall be controlled one-half by the chairman of the Committee on Roads and one-half by the ranking minority member. I do not see in the Chamber to-day the ranking minority member; in fact, the two other ranking members of the committee. I would like to inquire who will control the time on this side?

The SPEAKER. It is the Chair's interpretation that the next gentleman on the committee who is present would control the time.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8642, with Mr. BLANTON in the chair.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, a few days ago the Speaker of the House appointed a select committee and charged it with the duty of seeing if it were possible to reduce public expenditures. That committee is now working under that appointment.

The chairman of the Appropriations Committee has repeatedly informed the House as to the efforts being made by the various subcommittees under his jurisdiction to bring about a reduction in public expenditures. He has told you time and time again, acting under the suggestion and advice of the President of the United States, that we are not following the recommendations made by the Budget but are cutting the estimates to the core, yet to my utter amazement a legislative committee of this House has reported a bill which carries an appropriation of $132,500,000, to be made immediately available.

How inconsistent that is. What a travesty it is for the Appropriations Committee and this select committee to be trying to save a few thousand dollars here and a few thousand dollars there and then with one swoop take from the Treasury $132,500,000.

I wish to say in passing that if the Agricultural Department is recommending this thing, as the gentleman who preceded me says they have done, it should be condemned by every taxpayer in the land.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman did not understand me. I did not say that the Department of Agriculture recommended the passage of this bill, but I said they approved the form of it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Of course, that makes quite a difference. However, there have already been too many attempts made by the heads of bureaus and even by Cabinet members to undermine what the President of the United States is trying to do in saving money to the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.]

Now, gentlemen, look at the predicament we are in. You are asking here for an appropriation of $132,500,000. How is that amount to be secured except by adding to the burdens of the taxpayers of this country? What good is it going to do? It will be just simply like placing a thin coat of salve over the country, so far as giving employment is concerned, but you are increasing our deficit in the amount of $132,500,000 and making it necessary to raise that much more by additional taxation.

We are told that in order to restore confidence in this country we must balance the Budget. Are we going to balance the Budget by adding to the deficit? Are we going to balance the Budget by adding more and more to the burdens of the taxpayers?

The Ways and Means Committee has been laboring long and earnestly in an effort to devise ways and means of raising additional revenue for the purpose of helping to balance this Budget.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Did not the gentleman from North Carolina state that there is already $109,000,000 of this money appropriated?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know what he stated, but we have the testimony of the head of the Bureau of Roads that he can not spend more than $90,000,000 in carrying out the proposals under the existing program. Of course, they can make a new program in order to carry out the program provided for in this bill. But why should we do that when we are looking for every possible means of raising revenue to balance the Budget, and why should we do anything which will add to the present deficit?

I say to you gentlemen that we are not only piling up a debt against the United States, but by this action we will pile up a debt against every State. In every State of the Union to-day citizens are complaining and crying out against the burdens of taxation. They are holding indignation meetings in Indiana. They are holding them in Illinois. They are holding them in almost every State in the Union, and protesting against additional taxation and demanding that taxes be reduced.

Now, then, this $132,500,000, if appropriated by the Congress, must be met by $132,500,000 on the part of the States which receive it. I note there is a provision in the bill to the effect that they will have 10 years of time in which to repay it. However, that is a curse to them. You pass this bill and many States which can ill afford to burden their taxpayers with this additional amount of taxation will say, "Well, we have 10 years' time in which to repay it, so we will take advantage of it." Credit of this character is one of the worst things that can ever befall a man, and it is the worst thing that can befall a State or nation.

Gentlemen, if we are in earnest; if we mean what we have been saying, that we are going to balance the Budget in order to secure the confidence of the people and make the economic situation of this country normal, so that the credit of the country will not be impaired, this bill ought to be defeated.

I hope if it passes, thus proving that this Congress is unmindful of its duty to the Treasury of the United States and to the taxpayers of the United States, the President will not have it on his desk five minutes before he vetoes it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee reporting this bill to the House, I wish to say that I am heartily in favor of its passage. Indeed, the action of the committee was unanimous. There was not a voice in opposition. The first draft of the bill contained some substantial changes in the existing law. These proposed changes had considerable merit, but it was thought that they might provoke opposition either in the House or in the Senate. And so, after discussion, our chairman was instructed to introduce a bill leaving out all controversial matters except a few minor provisions intended to extend the scope of the bill, so as to achieve more efficiently its beneficent purpose.

I appeared with our chairman and others before the Rules Committee; the urgent situation and the immediate benefits to be derived were presented; and, as a result, by unanimous vote, a rule brings this matter before the House at this time.

The Almon bill carries an appropriation of $120,000,000 to the States for emergency construction on the Federal highway system, with the main view of increasing employment. It will give the most widespread employment and achieve the widest possible distribution of the Federal funds, while the taxpayer will get what he needs. It has been estimated that if this appropriation passes, 1,000,000 men will almost immediately be put to work; and that 90 per cent of the money expended will go for labor. Under the bill local labor on the projects is given preference. In addition to the man who works directly on the road there are those who would obtain work in providing materials and producing all sorts of goods for those who directly or indirectly obtain employment thereunder; there are those who haul the sand and gravel, burn the cement, work in the manufacturing plants, are employed by the transportation companies that carry the construction materials; and there are the engineers, contractors, and manufacturers who are benefited. A leaflet issued by the National Unemployment League last April states that the direct employment of 1,000,000 men on public roads would employ indirectly at least 3,000,000 more workers in making, preparing, and transporting material.

Under this bill, States which are to-day unable to match the 50-50 per cent requirement of our present Federal aid highway act may use these emergency funds, provided they are expended by June 30, 1933, and may reimburse the Federal Government over a period of 10 years, commencing with the fiscal year 1938.

We are now in the third year of this depression. Community and local aid are nearing exhaustion. Some of the large cities are practically bankrupt. States are even in a precarious financial condition. The ranks of the unemployed are steadily increasing, and will continue to increase during the months of seasonal unemployment. With these conditions before us it is apparent that some form of Federal aid is imperative. It is now but a question of what form this relief shall take which, besides bringing immediate help, will least encourage reliance on Federal aid and will, on the other hand, stimulate local and individual contributions in conjunction with the Federal aid. It has been established that road construction is of such nature that work can be put under way in a comparatively short time and in immense volume. Speed and volume are obviously at this time necessary and vital considerations.

The American Road Builders' Association has pointed out:

1. Highways are not overproduced; the necessity for them is unquestioned; the need is nation-wide.
2. Highway departments are trained and plans are ready.
3. Highways built now are lasting and prices at the present time low.
4. Highway construction will absorb persons previously employed in varied activities without previous training in highway construction, in which they can be assigned tasks that will not impose drudgery upon them.
5. Every dollar spent for highway improvement lessens the amount communities must raise for direct relief.

No one can question the necessity of Congress doing everything in its power in this emergency. We can not ignore, forget, or deny the real conditions that exist in the country. I hold in my hand the RECORD of February 2, in which is found the speech of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. His argument was addressed to the proposition, "We are confronted by the most serious economic crisis of our history." He summed up admirably and succinctly the statistical evidence. I quote:

Industrial production in the United States has declined from the peak of 1929 approximately 45 per cent.

Freight-car loadings have declined 38.40 per cent.

Prices, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, have declined 30 per cent.

Stock prices, according to the Standard Statistical Index, are at 58.

Manufacturing employment is at 69.4, a decline of practically one-third since the beginning of the depression.

The building industry is down approximately 50 per cent.

Residential building in the United States has declined approximately 80 per cent.

The net income of 550 of the largest industrial corporations in the United States in 1929 was $3,500,000,000; their net income for 1931 was approximately $1,100,000,000.

Defaults on all bonds, both foreign and domestic, ordinarily in normal times average about $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 per year. In 1930 there was a default of $360,000,000 of bonds and in 1931 approximately $2,000,000,000 of bonds were in default. The paper loss on these listed bonds since 1928 amounts, roughly, to $3,000,000,000.

In 1928 we had 491 bank failures; in 1929 we had 642 bank failures; in 1930 we had 1,345 bank failures; up to November 30, 1931, there were 1,932 bank failures.

The Senator concludes his masterly address by asserting:

As a consequence there has been terrific increase in the extent of the total unemployment in the United States.

The Senator supported his statement by inserting in the RECORD of February 2 replies to his questionnaire, Exhibit B, pages 3204–3367. The evidence of detailed and universal want and suffering is simply overwhelming, conclusive to any unprejudiced mind.

Mr. Chairman, this is but one of many bills enacted by the Congress to meet the present deplorable condition that is existing among our people. And it is not the intent of the proponents of this measure in any way to sidetrack any other proper and remedial legislation.

The most important problem before the statesmanship and the citizenship of our country to-day is the right solution of the present economic depression. We seem to find ourselves in a long, dark, financial tunnel. The keys with which again to open the doors to prosperity seem to be hopelessly lost. Let us not helplessly ask, What can we do? Some economic, political, moral, or spiritual adjustment must be made. The question with us is, Are we doing all we can? Are we doing the right thing in a wise way? To get our true bearing, let us examine the situation outwardly and inwardly, to see, if we can, what we have done to bring upon us this calamity.

Out of the mass of material that has come to me through the radio and the mail, from the speeches heard in Congress, and from sermons preached from the pulpits, and innumerable publications on the present situation, I have in my own mind a composite picture of this economic or moral evil.

Pope Pius XI terms it "a new plague." He describes the affliction that has come upon us as "the financial crisis, which has descended upon every people and with steady and frightening progress is bringing unemployment to every land." As we analyze our situation, we learn from the Pope's encyclical letter and from other international authorities that these distressing times are not with us alone, but that they are world-wide in their scope. All countries, it is true, have their own peculiar problems, but all are inextricably interdependent upon one another in the common struggle to win through this present financial crisis. That we, the richest country in the world, have not escaped we know only too well.

We note first that this depression has the usual elements of an ordinary panic—lowered prices, lowered wages, unemployment, and misery—that usually attend them all.

But the present affliction is out of the ordinary. It is marked with some very strange characteristics. We find that there is want in the midst of plenty; overproduction on the one side and underconsumption on the other. We see a world bursting with goods, with limitless capacity to produce more goods, yet want, even approaching the pinch of starvation, has appeared "like a ghost at a feast."

Comment is made on every hand of the fact that many once rich are becoming poor and the poor are becoming poorer; and this is true notwithstanding that we live in what some one has called a "thing age." We are buried under the multitude of our possessions. This machine age has hurled men out of employment; and there is a tendency to return to the primitive state of barter in the exchange of goods.

Some unjust and oppressive conditions have come about. The farmers contracted billions of debts when prices were high and they are now called upon to repay them when prices are low, thus more than doubling the debt with interest. This makes payment almost impossible. Business likewise is in a contracted condition—the worst this country has ever seen. In the days of prosperity American industries built or renewed themselves on price levels about 30 per cent higher than those that now exist. This means that all fixed expenses—bond interest, rents, depreciation—have been increased by approximately one-third. And the imposition of a problem like this upon industry means either small profits, no profits, or worse than no profits—insolvency. For this reason other nations, like England; indeed, all of the nations but two—France and the United States—have been driven off the gold standard, so that trade itself creates the value of the money. Business men and farmers alike are insisting that this situation must be met by a process of inflation. They see no other way to meet it. The demand is that we decrease the value of the dollar as England lowered that of the pound sterling. We have made a partial move in that direction in the Glass-Steagall legislation.

It is found now that the worst spots are the big financial centers; the shrinkage of values of the stocks of big business has been unparalleled in history. Millionaires have suddenly found themselves almost paupers. And while the little fellow has suffered greatly, it has come to be the day of the small business man, for he is fairly secure.

When comparisons are made with other distressing times, it is a general observation that this is more enduring than them all; it has been on us several years, and the end is not yet. Indeed, things seem to be growing worse. Skilled observers assert that the present situation is "not at all comparable" to former depressions; "is the most difficult to control" and "the most incorrectable."

Students of history see in it a striking resemblance to periods like the fall of the Roman Empire, the Rennaissance, the Reformation, and the beginning of the political and social revolutions in England and in France in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. There are even those who suggest that we are "participants in the decline and possible shipwreck of a civilization." Predictions are made by students of prophecy that these times are warning signals of "the end of time."

Certainly it is abundantly evident that the wisest of statesmen in the country are perplexed. They do not know exactly what is coming, and the citizenship, great and small, is possessed with a powerful feeling of discontent and vague fear. It is a sort of mass failure of confidence. We seem to be passing over to some other condition of economic life.

This critical era is also marked by strange contrasts; while everybody sees and admits that no nation lives for itself alone, and statesmen appeal to one another for cooperation, there is everywhere noticed a stiffening of national sentiment, a veritable mania of economic nationalism. Nations are raising tariff walls against each other and increasing armaments. Nations are competing with one another for national self-sufficiency and isolation, while the whole world groans for international friendliness and cooperation for the world good.

Finally, Congress is confused by a multitude of counsel; and as the elections are coming on, the spirit of politics is throwing over all efforts a "preelection paralysis." There is little or no effort by statesmen to ascertain or eliminate the underlying causes. Both political parties are but temporarily treating the symptoms.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this depression is an economic, composite effect of gigantic proportions. It did not come by chance. Nothing really happens by chance. We are under the government of law; where there is an effect there also must be a commensurate composite cause or causes. As I have sifted the material that has come to me, I would select these as the primary causes of our present calamity: First in importance, the World War; next, dishonest stock manipulation and practices; third, inordinate extravagance on the part of the American people.

Taking these up in the reverse order, I need but call attention to the fact that we have been indulging in an orgy of extravagance under high-pressure salesmanship and on the installment plan. We have enjoyed everything from chewing gum to the radio without stint. I will not take the time to give you a statistical report in billions of dollars of our investment as a people in luxuries and sports. Suffice it to point out that when we indulge our appetites for these luxuries and sports, we do not practice the necessary thrift that will enable us to meet hard times and depressions without want or suffering.

We have also indulged in an orgy of stock manipulation on a most dishonest basis. I have not time now to point out the manipulation of stocks in a wide scope but wish especially to call attention to the debauch in stock gambling which we have just passed through. Figures show that investors lost through short selling seventeen billions on 25 of the leading industries, and more than $57,000,000,000 in all the stock of our industrials. Altogether too much. No wonder there is a lack of confidence in bonds and stocks of big business. No wonder they almost go begging upon the market to-day. And no wonder that there is business depression on the part of Americans who so unwisely sought to enrich themselves by taking a flyer on Wall Street.

But the primary cause, according to the President of the United States, and authorities too numerous to mention, we are suffering from the effects of our "war spree." The first result of our adventure in the World War was tremendous inflation. Immediately at the end of the war came the first deflation. This especially fell with unbearable weight upon the farms of the country.

On account of the loaning by the Government itself of more than ten billions to the warring nations of Europe after the war, most of which we may never get back even though we have compromised with these countries on the fairest possible terms, and loaning more than ten billions to countries of Europe through the agencies of private bankers who floated loans among our people and which have depreciated in value enormously, we succeeded in building up a very profitable trade with these nations of Europe. This stimulus, together with this orgy of stock gambling, made it appear that we were enjoying prosperity unparalleled. But when the bubble burst there came the second deflation of prices, in the midst of which we are now.

It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the remedies resorted to by Congress under the leadership of President Hoover. I simply wish to express my opinion that we are dealing only with symptoms. We have to do something under these conditions. But dealing with symptoms will not restore prosperity. We must remove the causes and we must prevent their recurrence. Otherwise this will be a mere warning of worse things to come. As I have already stated, much of what we have done to date is merely dealing with symptoms. This, I admit, was necessary as a temporary palliative, but the cure requires a removal of the roots of the trouble. I did not vote for the $2,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I did not vote for it because I could see in it little more than a form of relief for the bankers who are responsible for the financial muddle our country now is in. I agreed with those who refused to create a $2,000,000,000 fund to "liquidate bankers' mistakes." Those who are the direct beneficiaries of this fund are the same agencies who brought on the financial debacle.

I admit, too, that what we are doing in this emergency highway construction bill is not a panacea for unemployment, which is too far-reaching for that, still in so far as this relief goes it is sound. I urge its passage. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire to use.

Mr. Chairman, I have been a member of the Committee on Roads for the past 17 years. I was a member of the committee and aided in the preparation of the national aid road law of 1916, when Judge Shackleford, of Missouri, was chairman of our committee.

During all these years no politics has ever been heard or considered in the committee. It is strictly a nonpartisan committee.

This bill was considered carefully, and extensive hearings were held, and when it came to the time to vote, every member of the committee, both Democrats and Republicans, voted for it, and nearly all the members were there. I know there were four or five members of the minority party present, led by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

The Committee on Roads has reported out my bill, H. R. 9642, which has for a special purpose the authorization of supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction with the view of increasing employment.

It is not necessary for me to take any time to demonstrate to the House the seriousness of the employment situation. There are various estimates given as to the total number of unemployed people now in the country. The American Federation of Labor estimates that there are at present 8,300,000 people out of employment. This figure may be larger than some other estimates, but it is evident to all that the unemployed number is sufficiently high to merit our immediate consideration in the hope that we may do something in a legislative way to help the situation.

The last Congress, with the unanimous approval of everyone who has any authority in the legislative matters, provided $80,000,000 of funds to be added to the authorization already made, to be advanced to the States for the building of roads, and also provided that this fund must all be expended by September 1, 1931. This limited the real time of this extra amount to less than nine months.

The Committee on Roads, in the hearings presented to it by those who have authority in handling this work, obtained the information that the emergency program alone aided in the construction of 13,161 more miles of roads than would have otherwise been completed, and these jobs or projects were scattered throughout the country, for they were carried on in 1,227 counties out of the 3,075 counties of the United States. The emergency advance of $80,000,000 permitted the States to use this fund in conjunction with their Federal-aid allotments as well as State funds, thus making a road program of $256,250,000.

In this connection it should also be noted that the Federal Government does not make expenditures for maintenance of Federal-aid highways. The funds are limited to construction only, and therefore we should understand that in this amount of construction the State highway departments also did an additional amount of work, including maintenance, the payment of principal on bonds and interest, together with the entire maintenance of their highway department, that made the total expenditure for the calendar year of 1931 of $1,100,000,000. [Applause.]

In connection with the matter of unemployment throughout the country the Committee on Roads had information presented to it by the Bureau of Public Roads giving very definite figures as to the amount of employment during the year 1931 taken from the actual count of men on the job. With the permission of the House I will include a table showing employment on Federal and State highway work by the month. This statement shows that the direct employment on the roads by both Federal and State authorities at the peak month of the year was 389,949. The average for the whole 12 months of the year was 288,359. It is unanimously agreed by all persons making investigation along this line that for every man working on the job there are two other men employed furnishing the materials and transporting the materials to the jobs and other incidental work. Therefore, the indirect employment would show for the peak month a total of 780,000 and the average for the entire year about 600,000. The average grand total employment was approximately 900,000 men, and at the peak month, which was August, the employed were 1,170,000 men. [Applause.]

There has been so much interest shown as to the number of people employed by the States in road building that the State Highway Officials Association has prepared a table to show the number of people employed on July 1 in the several States and showing the ratio of the employment to the total population of each State concerned.

In comparing this tabulation no consideration whatsoever is given to the number of prisoners used by the States in road construction or maintenance.

This table shows a report from 46 of the 48 States and gives the number of people employed directly by the State highway departments as 130,429, those employed by contractors as 188,507, making a grand total of 318,936.

Comparing the number of people employed to the population of the 46 States reporting, it shows that there was one person employed for every 369 persons in those States. Taking it by States, the largest number of people employed is 1 person for each 70 population in the State of Maine.

It ought not to be necessary to state that these people are employed exclusively on the State highway system or in the State highway department, and this has nothing to do with persons employed in road work by counties, townships, or cities, neither does it have anything to do with persons who are employed exclusively in preparing materials to be used in road-construction work.

Likewise this has no reference to people employed by the Federal Government in road work, whether departmental, in forests, Indian reservations, public domain, or national parks.

I am asking permission to include this table showing persons employed on State Highway systems July 1, 1931, and ratio of employment to total population.

The thousands of unemployed people who make up the class physically able to work on the roads or prepare materials for the roads, and yet have nothing to do, is very strikingly reflected in the great reduction in road costs. A very careful estimate by the engineers handling the State work shows that during the past year roads have been built at a saving of 26 per cent over the prosperous times of 1929. This is additional evidence why the Federal Government should at this time increase its payments toward roads construction, since a much larger mileage of roads can be improved and thereby make more effective and economical our rural transportation, so essential for the agricultural districts.

It is obvious to everyone that road improvements have greatly facilitated the use of personal transportation upon the highways. We are informed that in 1931 more than 26,000,000 motor vehicles were used in this country. Of these, 22,450,000 are passenger cars and 3,490,000 are trucks. The farmers of the country own 26 per cent of the trucks and 18 per cent of the cars. Fifty-seven per cent of all of the cars are on farms and in towns under 10,000 population. These figures show what a tremendous demand it is upon us to give the people the most economic use of the highways possible, as the money involved in the maintenance of these motor vehicles requires that roads should be constructed in a way to conserve this investment. Therefore, while the road costs are lower, it is without a question good business to build the largest mileage of roads that can be produced, and in that manner extend the service to these millions of automobile users.

In the bill before you the committee has authorized an appropriation of $120,000,000 to carry on the same character of work and under the same plans as in the case of the $80,000,000 authorized by the last Congress. In view of the fact that the employment situation at the present time is fully as serious, if not more than it was a year ago, and also in view of the fact that in the advance of the $80,000,000 provision was made for collection of this from future authorizations beginning with the coming fiscal year, thus reducing the actual Federal aid for the period, deductions this year from authorization are $16,000,000. Likewise, unusual efforts were made to absorb all of the funds from whatsoever source in order to greatly enlarge employment. Such being the case, the State highway department, as well as the Federal Government, faced the situation at the beginning of this January of having a greater reduced amount of funds available for this year's program. Authorization of $120,000,000 would be necessary to make possible approximately the same Federal expenditure for the calendar year 1932 as obtained during the calendar year 1931.

In this connection I am also asking permission to incorporate in my remarks a table furnished me by the Bureau of Public Roads covering the unobligated balance of Federal-aid funds available for new projects as of January 31, 1932, less than 30 days from this time. It should be noted in this connection that exclusive of the Federal-aid funds normally due for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next, that there is only about $15,000,000 not under contract in the entire United States. Of the $109,000,000 for the fiscal year 1933 over $10,000,000 has already been obligated. There are a very few States which have not caught up with obligating their Federal funds, but that is due to a serious financial situation in those States, and this authorization will serve a double purpose in their case, as without this advance they would not have the funds to match the Federal funds as required by law.

This bill also provides that the repayment shall be made to the Federal Government of this $120,000,000 by deductions from the future Federal authorizations to the States covering a period of 10 years, beginning with the year 1938. This is the date when the deductions for the $80,000,000 authorization last year will have been completed. For the information of the House I am asking permission to include in my remarks a table showing the approximate amount of funds each State will receive of the $120,000,000 advanced provided in this bill. The purpose of this bill is to relieve unemployment and allow the States to match Federal-aid funds already available with the funds provided in this measure. To illustrate this, Alabama's part of this fund, amounting to $2,550,053, can be used to match an equal amount of the unexpended balance of Federal-aid funds available to Alabama, amounting to $5,389,119. I wish also to have you note that the States are given until June 30, 1933, to absorb this advance for the reason that we have been much later in providing this legislation than in the last Congress, and we believe greater employment can be secured by not requiring the expenditure so rapidly as was required last year.

In addition to the legislation authorizing the regular Federal-aid amounts, the committee has added smaller amounts covering other activities of the Federal Government in road building. This same feature was carried out in the legislation of the last Congress in connection with the $80,000,000 advance. The additional items provided are as follows:

For national forests highways, $5,000,000; for roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, and so forth, in the national forests, $3,000,000; for roads in national parks and national monuments, $1,500,000; for roads on Indian reservations, which employment is exclusively Indian labor, $1,000,000; and for main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands not in forest reservations, $2,000,000.

In section 3 of this bill the committee has made a special provision to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act, with the view of providing the maximum employment of local labor consistent with reasonable economy of construction. The general legislation governing the Federal Government's activities in road building provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall make rules and regulations to carry on the work, but the committee felt that in this case, since these funds are to be advanced for the sole purpose of aiding in employment, that he should have the authority to provide in the regulations such requirements that would enable a greater number of people to be employed than might be under other circumstances.

The last paragraph of the bill makes a slight change in the existing law. The present law provides that before the State can add to its 7 per cent system, which, as you know, is the Federal-aid system, it must have that system completed to meet the traffic requirements before additional miles can be added to the system, so that they may secure Federal aid. It is found in a number of States that the construction has now arrived at the place where the rigid enforcement of this law causes not only embarrassing situations but an uneconomic one. There are States which have omitted the construction of approaches to railroad crossings, awaiting the construction of those crossings because of the financial condition of the railroads, which in every State are required to pay a part of the cost of the elimination of these dangerous railroad grade crossings. The total mileage in this item alone is large and will not permit the State to add to its system. There are other cases where it is very inexpedient to attempt to change the present Federal-aid system. The committee, therefore, felt the time had arrived when there should be a slight change made in this requirement. This section therefore provides that whenever a State has made provision for the completion and maintenance of 90 per cent of its system, as required by the present law, that the State may add additional mileage equal to not more than 1 per cent of the total road mileage of that State. The committee felt that since this is emergency legislation, this change in the law should take place at this time to enable these States to make full use of the emergency funds advanced to them.

In testimony presented to the committee there was developed that the State highway departments of all of the States are favorable to this legislation. The financial condition of the States is such that they would not be able to carry on a road program anywhere comparable to that of last year. In addition to the recommendation of all of the State highway departments, the committee also had support from many organizations, including the farm organizations, and all felt that the condition of employment was such that, notwithstanding the great demands on the Federal Treasury, this was an opportunity for the Federal Government to aid materially in relieving the unemployment situation and adding to the wealth of the country by a public improvement lasting in character.

It is not necessary for me to elaborate upon the suffering and hardships that are now being endured by many people throughout the country who have no funds of their own and yet are not given the opportunity to earn their daily bread. Here is an opportunity to relieve to a great extent this situation, and we have the positive assurance that the States have their plans for construction already prepared and on a moment's notice can make use of these funds if provided. [Applause.]

NOTE.—This table does not include prison labor.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, these walls have hardly ceased reverberating from the numerous speeches that have been made recently on the subject of economy, until we find ourselves confronted with a bill which proposes to take out of the Federal Treasury $132,500,000 additional for highway construction.

I am just as anxious as anyone in this House to relieve unemployment, but until some one comes forward and tells us where we are to get the $132,500,000 to pay the cost of this bill, I think we ought to cease considering it.

I think the answer to much of the activity in behalf of this bill can be found in this list. Here is the bait that is being used to put this program through. I hold in my hand a list of the approximate amounts that will be available to each one of the States of the Union if this bill is passed.

The list discloses that the States will receive sums ranging from $600,000 to $7,668,024, the amount to be received by the State of Texas. That money can be taken by the respective States and used, as I understand it, for the purpose of matching Federal funds, and is to be repaid at some distant future time, if at all.

If it would insure employment to any appreciable number of men; if a substantial part of each dollar appropriated would go to labor, we might think twice before opposing it. But I am reliably informed and believe that only a small per cent will actually find its way into the pockets of the laboring men of the country. Since most of the road-construction work of the country is now done by machinery the greater part of the money will find its way into the pockets of those who furnish the materials rather than those who are unemployed.

For that reason, and many others to be discussed by others, it strikes me that we ought not act favorably upon this measure.

We have just provided for the appointment of an economy committee to devise ways and means of saving money, and here in one fell swoop we propose to appropriate more money than that committee will ever be able to save, and it is money that need not, and should not, be appropriated at this time. [Applause.]

We shall soon see whether those who have been railing against extravagance and preaching economy were in earnest or were making an empty gesture.

If we are to balance the Budget and reduce expenses of government we must be consistent. We can not reduce to-day and increase to-morrow. I grant you it may take a little courage to vote to deny your States the amounts they might receive under this bill, but it would be far easier to do that than to explain to the taxpayers why an additional drain has been placed upon an already overburdened Treasury. For the information of the House, I wish to call attention to the approximate amount each State would receive under this proposal:

Let us give notice to the country through our action here to-day that we intend to hold down governmental expenditures and make an honest effort to balance our Budget. [Applause.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, as indicated a few moments ago in the questions propounded to the chairman of the committee, or Mr. WARREN, a distinguished member of the committee reporting the bill, I stated to him that under the 5-minute rule I proposed to offer an amendment. I have here the language of the amendment, and if you have a copy of the bill before you I would like to direct attention to the bill and read my amendment so that you will know exactly what will be accomplished if the amendment is adopted.

Turn to page 2, line 1. At the end, strike out the period and insert a comma and the following:

Except that such apportionment shall be wholly on the basis of population.

Under the present arrangement the Federal statutes provide that the apportionment of money shall be made on the basis of one-third for area, one-third for population, and one-third for roads.

Mr. COLTON. That would, of course, give New York the largest amount, and they have practically finished their road system.

Mr. BACON. And New York has the greatest proportion of unemployed.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, in the two sentences just uttered is to be found the real meat of the whole situation, and I think we ought to face it fairly and squarely. In response to my question the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] said that primarily this proposition is one of relief for unemployment, and in that connection that roads are to be used as the instrumentality for the application of this relief. The major proposition, then, as I say, is one of relief rather than of an extensive program of road building. If that be true, certainly my amendment is based upon an entirely logical theory, namely, that relief ought to go where the folks are who need the relief to the greatest possible extent.

Let me show now exactly how that will operate. I have before me a table which is a table prepared by the committee, showing the allocation of funds according to the bill as it now stands. In a column parallel to it I have secured from the Bureau of the Census the percentage of population in each State, and upon that percentage basis I have allocated the funds provided in this bill, the $120,000,000, to the several States upon the basis of population. I also present a table showing the distribution of the funds in this bill as they would go if allocated in accordance with the amount of internal revenue collected in each State. If anybody is interested in the comparison for his particular State, I shall be very glad, indeed, to give that information right now. If there is no interest in it, may I say that the table will be extended in my remarks, and I now ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in that manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The table referred to follows:

Mr. KETCHAM. Under the bill as written the Michigan apportionment will be $3,783,000, and upon the population basis of distribution Michigan will receive $4,680,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman base his statement on American citizenship or merely the population—that is, people who happened to be there at the time the census was taken?

Mr. KETCHAM. This is based upon the census of 1930.

Mr. RANKIN. I submit that would not be a fair allotment.

Mr. KETCHAM. It would not appreciably differ from present conditions. I think we have held our own fairly well so far as population is concerned since the figures of 1930 were made.

Mr. BACHMANN. Under the bill as originally written, how much will West Virginia receive?

Mr. KETCHAM. Under the bill as drafted, West Virginia would receive $1,316,000, using round numbers.

Mr. BACHMANN. And if the gentleman's amendment be adopted by the House, how much will West Virginia receive?

Mr. KETCHAM. $1,680,000.

Mr. BACHMANN. While the gentleman is increasing West Virginia under that amendment, there are other States that will be decreased.

Mr. KETCHAM. Naturally some other States will be decreased.

Mr. BACHMANN. What is the reason for the increase or the decrease?

Mr. KETCHAM. The reason is plain, indeed. Under the plan of distribution in the bill three elements enter into it, area, population, and road mileage. Under my amendment two of these are eliminated and we distribute only according to population, and that is upon the theory that this bill is not primarily a road measure but a relief measure. I submit that it is good, sound sense that if you are going to distribute relief, you should distribute it where the folks are that need it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman by his very answer to these questions as to whether a populous State will get such an amount and a nonpopulous State such an amount show that we are here offering a Federal purse to be fought for here by various Representatives in accordance with the population in their States? The gentleman says that this is a relief measure and takes the floor from a Michigan standpoint.

Mr. KETCHAM. Michigan would fare better in the end if she paid her own way in this matter. Under this bill she will pay $5,292,000 and would receive $3,783,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KETCHAM. Wait a moment. The gentleman just opened this subject and he has suggested another set of tables which will be read with great interest, namely, the contributions made by the States to this very proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have no doubt but that I have opened the great subject of Federal aid to the States—the so-called 50-50 propositions.

Mr. KETCHAM. If Michigan had simply to pay from her own Treasury the amount that will be required by this bill, she would be a little better off, because if this money were distributed on the basis of Michigan's proportion to her payments of income tax, she would receive $5,292,000 instead of $3,783,000, as the bill provides.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; the income-tax collector has to go into the States where he can find those who have incomes, and here comes Michigan with the demand that because it pays more Federal income it should have more Federal expenditure. The forthcoming tax bill will hit hard everywhere, including Michigan.

Mr. KETCHAM. Exactly. My amendment does not go to the merits of the bill. It simply provides that if the bill does finally pass with $120,000,000 put on the taxpayers that the expenditures shall be on the basis of relief to folks rather than areas.

Mr. KELLER. What about Illinois?

Mr. KETCHAM. The figures for Illinois are interesting. According to the present bill the distribution to Illinois is $5,077,000. If my amendment prevails, the distribution to Illinois will be $7,440,000, an increase of practically $2,400,000. More for folks—less for areas.

Mr. KNIFFIN. Will the gentleman give the figures for Ohio?

Mr. KETCHAM. Under the bill Ohio would receive $4,501,000, and if my amendment prevails, Ohio would receive $6,480,000. Again more relief for folks—less for areas. My amendment goes only to the $120,000,000. Beyond that there is $12,000,000 to be distributed for roads and trails in parks and forests, and I am informed that at the lowest 93 per cent of that amount will be distributed in Western States where there are forests and trails, and so these States are well looked after. My amendment goes only to the distribution of $120,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, the Members of this House should all attend the sessions of the Committee on Ways and Means. Then, I dare say, they would not be so willing to pass legislation of this kind.

For the fiscal year 1931 the deficit in the Federal Treasury was $903,000,000. For this year, 1932, it will be $2,123,000,000, unless we add new expenditures, and then, of course, it will be increased by any amounts that we add now. For 1933, during which fiscal year we have hoped to balance the Budget, the Federal deficit will be $1,241,000,000. Whence is the money coming for this expenditure that is to be authorized to-day? The Committee on Ways and Means is trying to evolve a method of sales tax, which we hope will bring in $600,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I can not yield in the time I have.

We will be required to increase the income taxes, the estate taxes, and almost every other form of tax, to the very utmost. In fact, we will go so far as to reach the vanishing point in income, not only of taxes but even of the people themselves. Then it is proposed now to burden the people with this additional expenditure which, in my opinion, is entirely unnecessary and unwarranted.

Members say this bill will give employment to 1,000,000 men, with an appropriation of $132,500,000. I have before me the official organ of the American Association of State Highway Officials, called American Highways. This official publication shows that during the year 1931 the total expenditures for highways in the United States was $1,038,090,101, and only 270,891 people were employed. It has been estimated, beyond any peradventure of doubt, that the largest number that could possibly be employed with this appropriation for one year is 35,000, and perhaps indirect employment might be given to an additional 20,000.

Gentlemen are laughing. Take the figures. How will the money be spent? Split up $132,500,000 among 50,000 men and see what employment is given to each of them. But Members say they are going to give employment to 1,000,000 men. How much employment? Just see how ridiculous it is. The total amount is $132,500,000. Suppose the cost of materials and the profits of all men engaged in this work, the profits of the contractors, the cement manufacturers, the machinery manufacturers, and everyone else are only $32,000,000 of the entire amount, there will be $100,000,000 left to distribute among 1,000,000 workmen, and that will give exactly $100 to each man. Of course, that is perfectly ridiculous. It is preposterous to argue that we will keep a million men employed and give them $100 each. That is all there is to it. That is the cloth. No more garments can be cut out of it.

How is this money to be returned to the Treasury? The bill provides that after the year 1938, for 10 years after 1938, this money is to be returned to the Federal Treasury. Out of what? Out of taxes paid by the people of the States? Out of appropriations made by the people of the States? No. Out of further money to be taken out of the Federal Treasury, which we now pledge to give the States for 10 years, beginning in 1938.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I can not yield.

If we are sincere in this talk about economy, if we actually intend to take some of the burdens of taxation off the people of the United States, the only way we can do it is to stop these enormous appropriations for aid and assistance to the local governments and the States, and also to reduce some of the large nongovernmental paternalistic bureaus which actually have no place under our system of government. [Applause.] We can not do it by paring away a few millions here and there. We can not do it by trying to save a few dollars here and there. We have to do it by a major operation. We have to take some large steps, and to come now at this moment and propose an additional expenditure of $132,500,000 it seems to me is perfectly indefensible.

The total expenditure of county and local funds for the calendar year 1931 on roads is estimated by the roads bureau at $586,340,000. The State funds for the same year are likewise estimated at $796,801,822. The Federal aid, both regular, emergency, national-park, and national-forest roads expenditure, in the calendar year 1931 was $260,555,000, being an increase of $154,907,000 over the previous year of 1930. And yet the total expenditure of local funds and State funds shows a decrease during the year 1931 as compared to the year 1930 of $121,775,000. In other words, with all of this increase of $154,907,000 which the Federal Government poured into the States in the year 1931, the States themselves reduced their expenditure by an amount which absorbed all of this increase except $33,000,000.

To point the moral further, although the Federal Government was appropriating this money in order to increase employment, the States simply decreased their expenditure by almost an equal amount, and therefore by all of the effort of the Federal Government we did not increase employment in any consequential amount. All we did was to transfer workers on the roads from the State pay rolls to the Federal pay rolls. This proposal here to-day will have exactly the same effect. It is simply a dole to the States.

It is interesting to take as an example the State of Pennsylvania, where we have heard much said of the hardships during the past calendar year. In that State the roads bureau estimates that the State expenditure in the year 1930 was $160,000,000, whereas the State expended less than $140,000,000 during the calendar year 1931. In other words, the State reduced its expenditures by $20,000,000 at the same time when the Federal Government increased its contribution to the State by something like $4,000,000. This case seems even worse than the average.

The truth is that when the Federal Government increased its aid or contribution to the States the States did not meet or match that additional Federal appropriation. That is the very reason why this bill is presented here and we are asked to provide Federal funds without any return or assistance from the States. It is not even a 50–50 proposition. It is now asked that the States get this money, not to match appropriations of their own but to match appropriations which the Federal Government is expected to make beginning in 1938 for 10 years to come.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I can not yield.

If we want to do something that will actually give employment, then we should resume the program of building construction—houses, offices, and the like. Road building is largely a matter of machinery. Everyone who has seen a road crew in operation knows that there are very few men employed upon the work. It is being done by the employment of the very useful and, of course, efficient methods which have come with the improvement of machinery. We will not give the employment that it is thought will result, by any means. But the important thing in this matter is that we are just giving notice to the country that the Congress of the United States does not propose to hold down expenditures, to say nothing about reducing them; that the United States Congress does not propose to balance the Budget; that the United States Government does not propose to take any part in securing that economic recovery, which can not be secured without the balancing of the Federal Budget and the maintenance of the national credit.

Government bonds are selling to-day at 90 and less instead of at 100. Interest rates on Government loans have increased during the past few months. How long shall this continue? Are we going to raise this money by an additional bond issue? Are we going to put the Government further into debt? Are we going to increase the burden of Federal taxes?

Mr. Chairman, shall we say to the rest of the world, "We have advocated the balancing of the budgets by other nations, but when it comes to our own affairs we are not going to indulge in any such unpleasant practice?"

This House and the Committee on Appropriations of this House took great pride recently in the passage of the agricultural appropriation bill, in reducing the estimates that came from the Bureau of the Budget. Where was that reduction made? It was made principally out of the regular road-appropriation fund. We reduced the agricultural appropriation bill below the Budget estimate for the next fiscal year $9,000,000 out of the road-appropriation fund. Prior to that we cut the Budget estimate for road building $10,000,000 in the deficiency act. That was done under the pretense of economy yet you now come with this bill to add $132,500,000 to the debt of the National Government for the purpose of doing the very thing which you refused to do in the deficiency and agricultural appropriation bills, even to the extent of $19,000,000. Why, we even cut out $1,000,000 in the Interior Department appropriation for public parks, roads, trails, and bridges, and lo and behold the item is restored in this bill for $1,500,000, an increase of 50 per cent.

We have had so much talk about economy, so much talk about retrenchment in expenditures, and the House has given the Ways and Means Committee the distressing task of trying to raise an additional $1,200,000,000 in a single year; but, despite all of that, you now bring before the House a resolution under which, by one fell swoop, you are not only adding to the burdens of the committee in trying to balance the Budget of the United States, but you are taking away even the small reductions in expenditures which have so far been perfected through the appropriations bills that have been passed by the House.

If there ever was a time to call a halt, it is to-day in the passage of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, as I have only five minutes, I will be unable to yield for any questions.

I have been listening ever since this Congress convened to the very eloquent speeches by the leaders of the Democratic Party about the necessity of balancing the Budget and reducing the Government expenditures. I agree thoroughly with what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] has said on Government economy. I agree with the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. DOUGLAS] and I also agree thoroughly with the statements of our able Speaker, the gentleman from Texas, when he pleads for a balanced Budget. And having all of these statements in mind, I am amazed therefore that this bill should have been brought out under a rule. It could not have received a rule if it had not been for the favorable consideration and advocacy of the Speaker.

In looking over the table I have before me, and which I will later insert in the RECORD, I am very much interested to note that the great State of Texas will receive 6.3 per cent of all of the money this bill proposes to authorize. In another table I have, which I will also insert, I notice that the contribution made by the State of Texas to the total Federal revenue, including income tax, corporation taxes, miscellaneous taxes, and so forth, is but 1.34 per cent. No wonder the Speaker and the State of Texas are in favor of this bill.

This week I took the opportunity of examining bills that have already been reported by the democratically controlled committees of this House. They provide for new Federal expenditures of over $1,000,000,000; reported bills, mind you, not merely bills that have been introduced; bills that have been earnestly recommended to the House for passage. If the enthusiasm with which the Speaker and his fellow Democrats have brought this bill on the floor of the House is any criterion of what will happen on these other bills calling for over $1,000,000,000 of new money, it is impossible for me to see how there will be any chance to begin to balance the Budget, which the Speaker and his chairman of the Appropriations Committee are so eloquently advocating.

But getting back to the bill before us, I wish to insert a table showing by States the total Federal taxes collected, which include income taxes, miscellaneous taxes, corporation taxes, and so forth, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, and also showing the percentage of the total revenues that each State contributed. Customs receipts are, of course, excluded.

Following this table I wish now to insert another table comparing the apportionment of the $120,000,000 road fund authorized by this bill with the proportionate amount assessable against each State in Federal taxes for the total Federal road fund under this same bill. The percentage of apportionment of the total road fund is also given as well as the percentage of the total Federal revenue collected on the basis of the fiscal year 1931.

I call to your attention that there are 13 States of the 48 which have contributed in the year 1931 an astoundingly greater percentage of the total Federal revenue than they will receive under the allotment of the $120,000,000 we are to-day asked to authorize. These States are California, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Why did the gentleman omit Colorado? It amounts to $15,000,000 on the one hand and $2,000,000 on the other.

Mr. BACON. I did not yield to the gentleman, but will be glad to answer his question. It is quite true that the total contribution of the State of Colorado to Federal revenues, excluding customs, for the fiscal year 1931 is, to be accurate, $15,772,615.89. This amount was 0.64 per cent of the total revenue received by the Federal Government. It is also true that Colorado under this bill would be apportioned $2,255,281. This apportionment to Colorado is 1.8 per cent of the total of $120,000,000. The gentleman entirely misses the significance of the table that I have been quoting from. I have been talking about the relative percentage of each State's apportionment under the bill in comparison with the relative percentage of the total revenue collected from each State, assessable against the cost of this bill. If the gentleman will refer to the table I have above inserted, I think the matter will be clear to him.

The 13 States which I have mentioned in the year 1931 provided 84.38 per cent of the total Federal revenue. Under this bill their proportion of road money will be but 32.9 per cent of the allotments that are proposed. This means that the remaining 35 States contribute but 15.62 per cent of the total Federal revenue, while receiving an allotment under this bill, as it is written, of 67.1 per cent of the $120,000,000 total that is authorized.

New York, for example, contributes 27.64 per cent of the total revenue of the Federal Government, excluding customs. Under this bill New York's allotment of road funds is but 5 per cent of the $120,000,000 total. Again, I call to your attention that the State of Texas receives 6.3 per cent. To put the matter in another way, the actual cash that will be contributed in Federal taxes by the State of New York for the purpose of this bill is, roughly, $33,000,000, while the total cash which will be contributed by the State of Texas is but $1,608,000. To put it even more flatly, New York, under this bill, is asked to contribute twenty times more than the State of Texas and receives over $1,000,000 less.

It seems to me that this bill is an attempt on the part of the sparsely settled States to get additional Federal aid for the building of roads under the guise of relieving unemployment. If this were an honest attempt to relieve unemployment, the amounts authorized by this bill should be apportioned according to population and not acreage.

For example, the population of the State of New York is 12,588,066; the population of the State of Texas is 5,824,715. On the basis of population the State of New York will get a per capita apportionment of 48 cents as against $1.30 for the State of Texas. We all concede there is more unemployment in the industrial than in the agricultural States, and especially in the larger cities, yet this bill does nothing or attempts nothing to relieve the unemployment there.

There is one further point to which I wish to call the attention of the committee, and that is that I have been discussing entirely that part of the bill which provides $120,000,000 for Federal road aid to the States. I have not in any way discussed the $12,000,000 allocated in this bill for expenditure in the national parks and Indian reservations. I have been informed, however, by the Bureau of Public Roads, that 90 per cent of this $12,000,000 will be allocated to 11 western Rocky Mountain States. I further know, and only too well, that none of the industrial States, where the unemployment is the greatest, will receive one cent of this $12,000,000.

There is one more thought that I have on this bill, namely, that the burden of maintenance of all Federal-aid roads rests entirely upon the States. The States will furthermore have to eventually match the amount apportioned to each State under this bill. These two items will add a tremendous burden to the taxpayers of each State at a time when many States are having difficulty in balancing their budgets and at a time when the raising of additional taxes in each State is becoming an increasing and overbearing burden on the taxpayers. Therefore, in considering this bill, we must not only secure this money by increased Federal taxation, but each State will have to increase its taxation to meet its share of this sum and also have to increase its taxation to maintain the roads after they are built.

My own State of New York is having great difficulty in balancing its budget. They have appropriated large sums of money for the relief of unemployment among the people of New York and intend and will continue to take care of New York's own unemployed. With the burdens already on the State of New York in taking care of its own unemployment problem, the additional sum that they will be required to pay to match the amount allocated to New York may mean the raising of additional State taxes.

As I have already said above, if this were an honest attempt to relieve unemployment, the allotment of funds under this bill would have been apportioned in accordance with population rather than acreage, in which case there might have been afforded to the people of New York some aid in their unemployment problem. I will therefore support the amendment proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM], which, however, may go out on a point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Did not the gentleman and all of those who have preceded him on that side in opposition to this bill support a similar measure calling for an emergency fund of $80,000,000 brought in by that side last year? Did not the gentleman himself vote for it?

Mr. BACON. I have forgotten whether I did or not. However, it is my impression that that was not a record vote. I have always viewed with disfavor these 50-50 matching propositions because not only have they tempted many States to incur expenditures which they could ill afford and which have greatly increased their taxpayers' burdens, but also because the benefits to the States contributing the most money have been out of all proportion to what they have received. And this is especially true when this matching is done on bases other than population. Particularly in view of the present huge deficit of over $2,000,000,000, and the efforts that are being made to balance the Budget by cutting down Federal expenditures and the raising of over $1,200,000,000 in additional revenue by taxation, I believe that this is a good time to stop contributions from the Federal Treasury to the several States. I therefore am opposing the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that in this instance I am not in accord with my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from New York, who just addressed the committee.

The unemployment situation in this country, unfortunately, is so widespread and is so universal that relief of any kind anywhere reflects upon the general situation.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Is it not true, though, that the greatest unemployment is in the metropolitan cities of this country and that this relief will not touch them at all?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; but the gentleman from New York is not so provincial as not to be able to visualize that if we can give some of the workers of this country temporary road work at a living wage they will at least be able to buy some clothes, some shoes, and some food which we produce in our city.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I agree 100 per cent with what the gentleman has said, but if this were an honest unemployment-relief bill, should it not be apportioned according to population rather than area?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, that is a detail which we can take up when we are reading the bill. I would favor such an apportionment. I want to say to all of my friends I would like to see how many votes we could get in this House if we brought in an honest-to-goodness unemployment-relief measure. This is what I have been driving for ever since we came into session—for this Congress, now that the first dole bill has been passed by Congress and signed by the President—I refer to the billion dollar relief bill—to give some immediate attention to direct relief to the millions of people who are actually in want in this country at this very moment.

There is no longer any question of constitutionality that may be properly raised at this time. The constitutional limitations of the power of Congress, so far as this Congress is concerned, is expressed in the Finance Reconstruction Corporation bill. Show me the constitutionality for that and I am ready to argue the constitutionality of any other relief measure which may be considered, including direct relief and unemployment insurance.

Of course, there are no Federal-aid highways in my city, but that is no justification to vote against this measure. Why, this bill is the first indication, it is the first attempt, it is the first color of any legislative action on the part of the House of Representatives to get right to the spot where relief is needed. [Applause.]

The engineering plans will not take long. The States can avail themselves of the benefits of this bill. Appropriations ought to be immediately made, and if we can put several hundred thousand men to work on the roads, this means that many relieved from the humiliation of standing in the breadline.

I get very impatient with this ostrich-like tendency on the part of alleged statesmen to refuse to admit existing facts. The stock ticker of my city is no indication of the employment situation throughout the country. There is unemployment, there is want, there is need, and we have been talking so much about public improvement and public works as a constructive means to provide employment that I am surprised that in this feeble attempt to carry out such a program that there should be any objection at all. This is only a little move toward a step in the right direction. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. I am opposed to a dole, but I do ardently favor honest employment for honest laboring men, and I believe that road work will give more labor per dollar expended than any other projects that may be undertaken.

There are many good features in this bill. There is one additional feature that I want to talk to you about—an amendment which I believe would still further improve the bill. Many of you have heard of the so-called Summers farm-to-market post road bill (H. R. 137), which I shall offer as an amendment. You can get it in the document room and learn the details, if you wish. It proposes to extend aid 50-50 to States, counties, or subdivisions to build rural post roads, farm-to-market roads, which are now untouched in any way by any legislation that has been enacted.

It is believed that this farm-to-market post road amendment contains more good points than any legislation yet proposed for the purpose of building rural roads and giving employment. My amendment specifies that due consideration shall be given roads which shall best serve the agricultural needs of the country in obtaining access to the Federal road system, rail and water shipping points, and markets.

The measure is indorsed unanimously by the rural letter carriers of the United States; it is indorsed by the organization of rural carriers in your State and in your county; it is indorsed in principle by the National Grange, by the Farm Bureau, by innumerable local organizations, such as farmer organizations and chambers of commerce, because it helps to lift the farmer out of the mud and helps him to get to town in order that he may carry on his trading and market his products.

It does not call for any particular machinery or for shipping in materials from some other place. It proposes in two days' time to send men out with picks and shovels and scrapers in your county and mine and let them go to work. These are men who are now in the soup line. It will distribute the small burden of cost over more than 3,000 counties and to the National Government. It will inaugurate a practical nation-wide road-building program, and it will utilize home products and home labor exclusively.

It will relieve the jobless. It will give men in every county of the United States who want to work an opportunity to work. It will curtail the soup line. It will put idle men to work and thereby reduce crime. It will require the outlay of not one needless dollar. If approved, it can be put into operation immediately.

It is not proposed to build boulevards or speedways, under the amendment which I shall offer to the bill, but to improve much-used roads right down to the old farm gate, at an expense on the average of about $2,000 a mile instead of $30,000 a mile as concrete roads now cost.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes, briefly.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. I think the gentleman is on the right track. Will the gentleman support an amendment which I shall offer to this bill requiring the loading of this dirt and the excavating and grading to be done by shovel instead of steam machinery?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I shall take that under consideration.

Now, gentlemen, I am calling your attention to the fact that you can get the amendment that I shall offer, H. R. 137, in the document room. I introduced H. R. 137, the farm-to-market post road bill, December 8. The first hour after Congress convened. I reiterate, that it is indorsed by the rural letter carriers and farm organizations, and by commercial organizations all over the United States.

Mr. Chairman, my bill which I offer as an amendment may be rejected to-day, but we shall carry on until it is enacted into law. It is right, it is just, it will serve the masses. You may defeat it to-day, but ultimately it must win. It serves the rural carrier and the masses of the farmers. We shall carry this fight to the country and on its merit we shall finally win and lift the farmer and rural carrier out of the mud and give them some of the advantages the tourist now enjoys.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, you have heard a good deal about who is going to pay for this, but I do not believe any figures have been presented to show the fallacy and sophistry of the employment argument.

I have figures and facts as to that feature. Massachusetts increased appropriations for roads from $12,800,000 in 1930 to $17,350,000 in 1931, making an increase of $4,550,000 for that year.

Now, in 1930 and 1931 the peak of employment on road construction in that State was 5,632 men, and the minimum employed during that same period was 300 men, or an average in 1930 of 2,100, and an average in 1931 of 2,900 men, an increase of employment in 1931 of 800 men, by the expenditure of $4,550,000 on road work at an average daily wage of less than $4 per day. Now, take $135,000,000, which we propose to appropriate, and divide it at this ratio, and you will find that you are going to give employment in road construction for 2,600 to 2,700 men now unemployed.

The material that goes into the construction of roads is largely steel and cement. I do not know how many of you have steel or cement factories in your districts, and I do not know just what proportion of this one hundred and thirty-two million is going to the employment of labor in the steel and cement factories. But, if you are going to talk about local employment, realize how many you are going to get of the 2,600 or 2,700 men at work. Also consider that the greatest suffering to-day is not among the men who can use the pick and shovel, but the white-collared men who have lost their jobs, and imagine how far you will get when you send those men out on the road with a pick and shovel, with their tender hands and body unused to hard physical labor.

This proposition for the relief of unemployment is a great mass of contradictions and sophistry, which does not deserve the attention of this body.

Now, gentlemen, placing 2,600 men at work, putting them into employment, would be some little relief, but at the price of $135,000,000, the price is too high, with the deficit we have to meet. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The way we build roads in the State of Washington, more than that total number of idle men will be employed.

Mr. UNDERHILL. If we are going to pass a bill we ought to pass a bill similar to the one that the gentleman introduced, but we are considering this bill, not his. If we are going to consider and pass this bill, I want it done with the knowledge each Member will get employment for about one man in your whole district.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MCGUGIN].

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Chairman, this Congress can not and will not enact a single bill during this session which is loaded down with more asininity and inequality than this bill which we are considering to-day. No one insists for one moment that there is any imperative need from the standpoint of building highways for this appropriation. The sole justification offered for it is unemployment.

When we consider this measure solely from an unemployment viewpoint, it is then that we realize its asininity and its inequality. When the chairman of the Roads Committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON], appeared before the Rules Committee he made the extravagant estimate that 1,000,000 men would be given employment through this legislation. He stated that 300,000 would be the number that would be directly employed. He then estimated that indirectly 700,000 more would be employed. Of course, the number which are to be indirectly employed is to be limited only by an unbridled imagination. Personally, I am quite convinced that it is extravagant, advertising deceit upon the part of Congress to say that this legislation will furnish employment for a million men; however, let us grant that it will furnish employment for 1,000,000 of the unemployed, it is then that we realize the asininity and the inequality of this bill. If it furnishes employment for a million men, then that means $132.50 worth of employment per man. Well, what are you going to do with these men after the $132.50 apiece is expended?

There are eight and one-half million unemployed. Which million are you going to pick out and deliver from the despair of unemployment and which seven and one-half million are you going to leave in their present slough of despondency? I can go out on the highway, pick up any unfortunate hitch hiker, and from him I shall receive the same statesmanship as is involved in this bill. He will doubtless suggest that he should be taken care of by the Public Treasury. That statesmanship would not work. It is utterly impossible for the Public Treasury to feed the unemployed. The theory of this bill is to furnish work for the unemployed out of the Public Treasury. That, too, is utterly impossible. This bill clearly proves the situation. Its most fanatical advocates concede that it will take care of only a million men and that to the extent of only $132.50 a man. If this Government is going to endeavor to take care of unemployment by public works, then it must have the decency to be as fair with all the citizens as it is to one. If we are going to give work to one million men, we must give work to eight and one-half million men.

If we are going to give work to eight and one-half million men, this appropriation should be increased from $132,500,000 to $1,146,250,000.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] justifies this bill with the explanation that the States individually can not build the roads but assumes that the 48 States collectively can build them. One would not think that a Representative from North Carolina, a State which traditionally believes in State sovereignty, would present the childish suggestion that 48 States collectively can financially do that which 48 States individually can not do.

The Government at this time is running behind $2,000,000,000 a year. Just yesterday I heard the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] state that the Ways and Means Committee had exhausted every effort to tax the large incomes, and yet there is no way of balancing the Budget except to take on the sales tax. Personally, I regard the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] as one of the outstanding statesmen of this House. I am basing that statement primarily upon the address which Mr. CRISP gave in the House a week or two since demanding a balancing of the Budget.

This morning the press reports are that the Democratic floor leader of this House, Mr. RAINEY, of Illinois, takes the position that a sales tax is imperative. When we turn to the sales tax, every State and every individual proportionately pays an equal part of the tax burden. If the money to meet this appropriation were collected from the large incomes, I would accept this bill upon the theory that it is one way of getting back into the rural communities the money which is daily drained away from them by monopoly; however, since the Ways and Means Committee has exhausted every effort through the income-tax route, yet there is a deficit, and to meet that deficit it must turn to the sales tax, that means that this appropriation will be paid equally by the States and the people of the Republic. Since the sales tax is to furnish the additional money to balance the Budget, then that means that every new appropriation will be met by the sales tax rather than by the income tax collected from the large estates.

It is admitted that the States can no longer meet their tax burden and it is common knowledge that property and farms are being confiscated by taxes. If we collect a sales tax from the people, who own the real estate in the States, upon every thing which they eat and wear, then they will have only that much less money with which to pay their property taxes. It would be the same result if we were directly increasing the property taxes of the country in order to meet this appropriation.

If this Congress will lay aside its socialistic statesmanship and will be willing to reach the unemployment problem in a practical and permanent way, then I suggest two propositions: First, lend its good offices in forcing the shortening of the hours of labor from eight hours to six hours a day, that will increase the employment of this country 25 per cent; and second, then if we must make some appropriations to assist the unemployed, let us go along with the financial institutions of this country in some sort of a program to provide liberal credit for two or three million of the unemployed to get back to the small farm. Sooner or later many of our unemployed must return to the farms as millions went from the farms to the factories when we had the markets of the world for manufactured products. At that time our European competitors were at war. To-day our European competitors are back in the markets of the world and have regained their lost markets. Our exports for December were the lowest of any month since before the war in 1914. As millions of men went from the farms to the factories, when we had the markets of the world, it is obvious that millions of men must go from the factories to the small farm, since we no longer have the markets of the world.

If we try to solve unemployment by public works or by direct donations, we are following the precepts of socialism and communism. All there is to communism is that everyone works for the government; therefore the government must have all of the income. If we are going to give to one-eighth of the unemployed work for a few weeks by the process of a little pinch of communism, we may as well reconcile ourselves to the fact that sooner or later we are going to have to take on more communism, giving eight and one-half times as many men employment and make the employment permanent instead of temporary. When we have eight and one-half million men permanently working for the Government we shall have communism and nothing less. Let us throw off the mask of hypocrisy, look the matter squarely in the face, and either decide to solve our social problems by taking on communism in its true form or let us gird ourselves to the situation and meet our present ills in the traditionally American and Anglo-Saxon way. It is either the case of balancing the Budget or ultimately communism. There is no escaping it.

This bill does not solve unemployment. It does not even alleviate unemployment. It is only a raid on the Public Treasury in the name of unemployment. If it has any justification, that justification is political. Its only purpose can be for the Members of this Congress to use it as a deceitful thing to pacify the distressed unemployed. It may pacify them long enough for us to get by the next election. If we must spend some money to perpetuate ourselves in office, let us have the manhood to furnish our own campaign expenses rather than to bleed the Public Treasury.

If I did not believe that unemployment could be solved in the traditionally American way, I would not only be in favor of this bill but I would be in favor of multiplying it manyfold. I would be in favor of taking on communism. Unemployment must be solved. We must face it and accept it. I think that our unemployment ills can be solved by shortening the hours of labor and getting a part of the surplus industrial labor back to the small farm. I think this is the traditionally American Anglo-Saxon way to relieve unemployment.

For my part, I am going to vote against this and all other raids on the Public Treasury to solve our economic problem. I shall vote against it and continue to live in the despairing hope that sooner or later the political, the financial, the industrial, and the social leadership of this country will recognize the necessity of shortening the hours of labor to take up the slack brought about by the use of modern machinery, and of getting the men back to the small farm who formerly worked in the factory when we had all the export markets of the world.

If this Congress really wants to do something effective for unemployment, it can within a week's time put three men to work permanently for every man this bill would put to work temporarily. This Congress will not have to follow the precepts of socialism. It can carry out a program which is traditionally American.

I refer to the great opportunity of this Congress to protect the American fuel market for American coal, the American oil market for American oil, and the American copper market for American copper. Give us a tariff on imported oil and you will preserve the American fuel market for American coal and the American oil market for American oil. That will permanently put to work 400,000 unemployed men in the oil and coal fields, and at the ratio of 300,000 directly employed and 700,000 indirectly employed, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON], the advocating of this bill would mean that these 400,000 men put back to work in the American oil and coal industries would carry with them 900,000 more men back to employment. This would be 1,300,000 men employed permanently and indefinitely. They would not be discharged just as soon as they had earned $132.50. The employment of this number of men would bring some permanent prosperity to the country, and the country would be better able to pay taxes with which to build roads or other public improvements. I do not know how many men would be permanently restored to employment if you would protect the American copper market for American copper. It is safe to say that thousands of men now unemployed in the copper industry would be returned to employment.

I would not oppose this bill and I would not oppose socialism if I did not believe that we could follow in the footsteps of our patriotic and fearless forbears, and do more to relieve unemployment than we can ever do to relieve it by following such socialistic measures as this one. I call upon the Congress to be statesmanlike and manly and look to programs which are traditionally American, which are sound and will furnish relief which is permanent and lasting. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the bill which is before us to-day purports to be an emergency measure for the purpose of furnishing employment to the unemployed. There has been much discussion concerning the number of men to be given employment if this bill becomes effective. It is ridiculous to say that with $120,000,000 to be expended for highway purposes that 1,000,000 men can receive any appreciable amount of employment. So far as furnishing employment is concerned, this bill is a farce. This is referred to as emergency legislation. Surely there can be no emergency so far as building additional roads is concerned, especially in forests, parks, and on Indian reservations. Therefore if the bill fails as an emergency measure, so far as employment is concerned, it loses all its force and effect. The people of the country are demanding economy. That sage of wits, Will Rogers, has suggested to Congress that whenever we appropriate any money that we carry in the same bill a provision providing for the raising of the money. We can not have economy by pinching, scraping, and paring in the Appropriations Committee and reporting out unwarranted legislation from other committees. When the agricultural appropriation bill was up we cut out certain appropriations for the expansion of roads and claimed credit for cutting the appropriation bill. I see my friend and colleague from Michigan [Mr. HART], who is a member of the Agricultural Subcommittee on Appropriations, is present. He insisted on cutting down those appropriations and was correct in so doing. We also eliminated roads in the parks and Government reservations when the Interior appropriation bill was before Congress. We went to the country with the statement that we had reduced these appropriation bills, and yet under the misnomer of emergency we are to-day undoing everything we have done in the way of reductions in appropriation bills. There is a difference between economizing for the purpose of reducing taxes and economizing for the purposes of publicity. However, be assured that the taxpayers of the country will not be deceived.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. HART. Is not this bill simply using Federal funds to match Federal funds we appropriated under the agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; this bill is asking the States to tax their people to raise money to pay more money for Federal roads. Every time we pass one of these 50-50 bills offering to give the States something for nothing we not only invite the States, but we urge the States, to place more taxes on the backs of their people, for the sole purpose of getting something for nothing. [Applause.] This is the bait that is held out to get Members from States to support this kind of legislation and the list which Mr. PURNELL will publish is presumed to have sufficient potentiality to garner a sufficient number of votes. While it is true that Michigan will get more than $3,000,000 of this money, yet she will pay into the Treasury of the United States as Federal revenue much more than this amount. In other words, Michigan would be much further ahead of the game if she kept her own money in the State and built her own roads. Our tax burden up there is almost unbearable and we do not want additional roads which must be paid for by the taxpayers—not for the present at least.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON] spoke for this bill. He is a member of the committee and understands the motives of the committee. He made this statement in substance: "I want you people to understand that this bill is not for the purpose of sidetracking any other relief legislation." He tells us that this is to be followed by the Costigan-La Follette bill, and by other similar bills. He says that this is just one step, this is one item. We have heard it whispered about the floor of the House that the purpose of this so-called relief bill is to block something worse, and that this is a reason why those who are opposed to the Federal dole and legislation of that type should vote for this legislation. This reason does not appeal to me at all. This bill, if enacted into law, is a framework on which can be grafted many more expensive propositions when the bill reaches the Senate. I do not want legislation of this type written in conference. It is easy and appealing to talk about our unfortunate people and to appeal in behalf of "starving millions." Personally, I do not believe there are "starving millions" in the United States. There is undoubtedly distress and hardship, yet I have too much faith in our local communities and American patriotism to believe that these local communities are at this time permitting their fellow-citizens to starve.

Every dollar received by the States under this legislation requires additional State taxation. It is true that a part of this appropriation, if used by the States, would not have to be repaid by the States until after the year 1938, but we are assuming a burden, which some day, somehow, must be paid by the folks back home, and let us have the courage to stop this spending right here and now. The Committee on Ways and Means is exerting every effort to find enough money to pay the running expenses of the Government. Our Committee on Appropriations lops off five or ten millions and to-day we add $132,500,000—more than we can hope to save through the efforts of the Appropriations Committee. We are all for improved roads, when we can afford them, but we can not afford them at present, and the benefits to be derived from additional employment as hoped for in this legislation are far outweighed by the actual injury of additional appropriations and added taxation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KEMP].

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, there has been, in my opinion, a great misunderstanding of not only the purpose of the bill but the effect of it. The objection urged against the passage of the bill because it would interfere with balancing the Budget overlooks the very nature of the thing that will be accomplished by the expenditure of this money. This is not a current expense, it is not the expending of $132,000,000, but it is a capital investment; it is purchasing that thing which will endure for the happiness, convenience, and the benefit of all the people of all this broad land. It goes into the years to come and its service will continue. It must not be considered as a current expense. It is something that the people want. It is something that the American people will enjoy; and it is an investment that is being made at a time when the greatest possible economy can be practiced in the acquisition of this capital investment. Has there ever been a time since 1914 when so much road could be bought for the same amount of money? Labor, materials, and everything are reduced to-day and we will get more road for our money than ever before.

I want to insist that this House bear in mind that this is an investment of a permanent character and not an ordinary current expense. I am surprised that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] would object to the expenditure of money for good roads. Does the gentleman not know—and do we not all know—that had it not been for the establishment of Federal aid for road building in 1916 we would not have had the great system of good roads that we have in this country? Does the gentleman not know that without that system of good roads we would not have had the great automobile industry in this country, which is now the greatest single industry in the whole United States? Does not the gentleman know that without the growth and expansion of the automobile industry during the last decade this country would not have enjoyed the unprecedented, marvelous, and unbelievable prosperity that came to this country during that period? Does not the gentleman know that had not the automobile industry, which was new, absorbed three or four million men, we would have had in this country the same widespread unemployment that prevailed in Great Britain and other foreign countries?

The Bureau of Public Roads states, through its chief, that there are presently 3,000,000 men engaged in road construction in the United States. We are also informed that this year there will be $264,000,000 less for road construction in the United States than was available for 1931. That makes it very important that we provide this $132,000,000.

I also wish to submit to the House some figures that were furnished me this morning as to the number of people that this fund will employ. These figures are furnished by the Bureau of Public Roads. Mr. McDonald said that this fund provided in this bill would build 15,000 miles of roads; that from 80 to 90 per cent of the road dollar goes to the road-building personnel—to labor and personnel; that the emergency appropriation will keep from 80,000 to 90,000 men employed for one year.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, unemployment is more serious and widespread than ever before in the history of the country. The American Federation of Labor estimates that at present 8,300,000 people are out of work.

No one measure will completely solve the question. It is universally conceded that public works provide employment. During depressions, repairs and building are always urged. I know of no public work that provides more widely distributed employment in all the States of the Union than highway construction. Road building has contributed much to the relief of unemployment in the past two years. Highway programs have been adopted in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and other States to relieve unemployment. The State Highway Commissioner of Michigan estimated that a $10,000,000 road-construction program in that State would provide winter employment for approximately 30,000 workers.

We are entering the third year of unemployment in the existing depression, and many States of necessity will decrease appropriations for road construction. There are universal deficits in States, counties, and cities. There is no market for highway bonds. There is a tendency to divert the gasoline tax from road building to other purposes. Many States are and will be unable to match Federal-aid highway funds.

On December 9, 1930, upon the recommendation of President Hoover, and by a unanimous-consent agreement, without previous legislative authorization, under the leadership of the Republicans then in control, with a majority of about 100, the House passed H. R. 14804, appropriating $80,000,000 to enable the States to match Federal-aid highway funds in aid of unemployment. The Democratic minority cooperated in the passage of the measure.

THE BILL

The main provisions of the bill under consideration are substantially the provisions of the emergency act of December, 1930. The funds authorized are to be apportioned as temporary advances to the States. They may be used as State funds on Federal highway projects, but primarily the sums advanced are to be used to match the regular Federal-aid apportionments.

There are two constructive features that did not occur in the emergency act of December, 1930. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of the act, with the view of providing the maximum employment of local labor, consistent with reasonable economy of construction, and in those States where 90 per cent of the Federal-aid highways have been completed, 1 per cent may be added to the 7 per cent now provided by law.

The bill was carefully considered by the committee. Hearings were conducted thereon, and the legislative authorization must be followed by an appropriation. There is no merit in the criticism that the bill was hastily drawn or considered.

INCREASES EMPLOYMENT

We are considering the first measure to increase employment that has reached the floor of the House this session. It is universally conceded that there is more unemployment now than in December, 1930. The pending bill contains an authorization of $120,000,000, whereas the legislation of December, 1930, provided $80,000,000. The measure is entirely logical. With more unemployment, more money is provided for relief.

The Democrats are now in control of the House by a bare majority. With no constructive suggestions and with no alternative program, those representing the Republican minority have suddenly announced their opposition to the pending bill. Many have spoken against it. Those who advocated identically the same emergency measure in December, 1930, now oppose the pending measure.

President Hoover on December 4, 1930, transmitted a Budget estimate to Congress asking for the $80,000,000 emergency appropriation for highway construction to relieve unemployment. So eager was the Republican organization to comply with the President's request, the usual procedure was not followed. The matter was not considered by the legislative Committee on Roads. The measure was brought before the House by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He requested and obtained unanimous consent for consideration of the emergency measure. Not a single Republican or Democrat then opposed it. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] not only sponsored the identical legislation a little more than a year ago, but he announced that its purpose was to aid unemployment. For this purpose he advocated it. He has just spoken in opposition to the pending measure.

OPPOSITION

Notwithstanding his advocacy of the moratorium, notwithstanding his advocacy of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation legislation, the gentleman argues that the pending measure ought to be defeated to relieve the taxpayers. He is not only inconsistent, he has not only turned about face, but he offers no explanation for his changed position. He even went so far, in December, 1930, as to congratulate the Democratic minority upon their cooperation in passing that measure. I confess that there is always apparent effort when the distinguished gentleman makes acknowledgment to the Democrats, but to show not only his inconsistency but his change of position without rhyme or reason I quote from the gentleman's statement on the floor of the House when he championed the highway emergency legislation in aid of unemployment in 1930, as follows:

> And I wish now to express my appreciation of the part the Democratic Members took in formulating this bill.

It may be remarked that the pending measure is before the House with the unanimous report of the Committee on Roads and with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Rules.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL] likewise opposes the pending measure. He was thoroughly satisfied that $80,000,000 could be spent on the Federal-aid highways and that unemployment would be relieved a year ago, but he is among the doubting Thomases now. He is uncertain. He opposes the pending bill without the slightest reason for his position. He does manifest his anxiety for the unemployment situation, but he neither offers nor proposes any solution. Without any remedy he is content to obstruct. It does not disturb him in the least that he has completely reversed his former position.

It was reserved to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], representing, in part, the second largest city in the United States, to bring up the heavy oratorical artillery in opposition to the only measure in aid of unemployment thus far considered. He opposes the first bill in aid of unemployment, although he stood loyally by the identical program a year ago and supported faithfully President Hoover in enacting the program. While opposing highway aid, the statesman from Illinois takes occasion to advocate another strain on the Treasury in an effort to balance the Budget. He almost sheds tears as he thinks of appropriating money for building roads, which are to be used by the people of the entire country, but he waxes eloquent in advocacy of an appropriation to build houses and construct offices in the great cities of the country. It is difficult for some statesmen to see beyond the municipal limits of the cities in which they live. The gentleman from Illinois speaks of balancing the Budget. He opposes the pending measure, but he advocates no other form of relief. He neglected to speak of balancing the Budget when he approved billions of dollars for the banks, railways, and other financial institutions of the country, but when it comes to aiding the unemployed in the only relief measure thus far considered on the floor of the House, he becomes gravely and profoundly concerned about balancing the Budget. He is a member of the Ways and Means Committee. He knows full well that when we speak of balancing the Budget we refer to the fiscal year 1933. The passage of the pending bill will not interfere with balancing the Budget. Appropriations made under it, like appropriations for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and for other similar purposes, will not in and of themselves increase the taxes in balancing the Budget for 1933. The appropriations for 1932 will be passed to the public debt. All emergency appropriations will tend to increase the public debt, but will not materially interfere with balancing the Budget. The moratorium was passed primarily to aid the rehabilitation of Germany and to help our former allies. We can not afford to do less than pass the pending measure in aid of the unemployed in our own land. [Applause.]

The opposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] is typical. Under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt, the distinguished Governor of the Empire State, relief programs have been adopted in that State; however, the gentleman from New York is not bothered about consistency. He advocates no measure of relief for the unemployed. In fact, he makes no reference in his speech opposing the pending bill to unemployment at all. I dismiss his opposition by calling attention to the fact that he does not know whether he supported the identical legislation a little more than a year ago. He actually stated that he had forgotten whether he supported it or not.

Of course, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], as was to be expected, gave us the benefit of his views in making vocal his opposition to the pending relief measure. Frequently constructive in his suggestions, the gentleman was probably louder in his denunciation of the pending bill than any other Republican who spoke in opposition to it. He is usually careful and painstaking, but he completely overlooked any sort of explanation of his reversal of the position taken by the Republican administration on identically the same bill just a year ago. In his zeal the gentleman from Michigan referred to the commendable economy of the present Democratic leadership in the House; however, he erroneously stated that the regular Federal-aid road appropriation was deliberately cut in the current agricultural appropriation bill.

As I have already stated, many States are unable to match the Federal aid. The Agricultural Committee evidently had this in mind, and as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] stated more than once during the consideration of the annual appropriation for regular Federal aid to highways, there was no reduction in fact, and every dollar that Mr. Thomas H. MacDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads stated could be used in 1933, was appropriated. Moreover, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] evidently do not recall that the former emergency road appropriation of $80,000,000 contained a stipulation that one-fifth of the $80,000,000 was to be deducted from the apportionment to the several States for the five years commencing with 1933. That provision accounts for the reduction in the annual highway appropriation.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] have made known their opposition to the pending bill, although they were solicitous, as shown by the discussions, for the passage of identically the same bill in December, 1930. These gentlemen are evidently laboring under the delusion that the unemployment situation in Illinois and Washington is not as acute as it was in 1930.

REPUDIATION

Federal-aid highway appropriations have been increased from $75,000,000 to $125,000,000 in the past two years. Public buildings in the cities costing hundreds of millions of dollars have been authorized under the administration of President Hoover and upon the advocacy of the Republican majority in the House during his term, largely in aid of unemployment. The country was prosperous in 1928. Bankruptcy stalks abroad in the land now. Unemployment obtains in the city and the country. The Republican minority in the House criticizes but offers no solution. I point to the significant fact that every Member who has spoken in opposition to the pending bill offered no remedy for the unprecedented unemployment. The opposition involves not only an admitted and unexplained inconsistency but a shameless repudiation of the program of the President of the United States and a repudiation of the adoption of that program by the Republican majority in control of the House in December, 1930. [Applause.]

MONEY

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] opposes the expenditure under the pending bill because it involves the appropriation of money. I ask him and all who concur in his opinion how they intend to relieve unemployment unless money is provided. People are begging for work, and money is essential if work is to be paid for. No self-executing program has been suggested. I repeat that neither the gentleman from Indiana nor any other person in Congress can suggest any program to relieve unemployment unless it involves the expenditure of money. [Applause.]

WORKERS

Much has been said during the discussion about the number of workers employed in highway construction. I shall not quibble about figures. The view is general that from 75 per cent to 80 per cent, and possibly 90 per cent, of the money expended for highway construction is ultimately paid out as wages and salaries. I make this statement upon the authority of the Bureau of Public Roads. The matter was developed in the hearings. Mr. MacDonald, the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, stated that the percentage ranged all the way from 15 to 80 per cent, depending upon the type of the work. For modern pavements 15 to 20 per cent goes to labor on the job. Eventually most of the money goes back to labor. In the hearings before the Post Offices and Post Roads Committee of the United States Senate in January, 1932, Mr. MacDonald inserted a statement showing the distribution of $910 out of every $1,000 in highway construction for wages and salaries. Moreover, before the committee of the House in the hearings on the pending bill, as well as in said hearings before the Senate committee, Mr. MacDonald stated that for highway State and Federal employment there was an average of 288,000 workers for each month of the year 1931.

The use of man power and the elimination of machinery wherever and whenever economical and consistent are encouraged by the rules to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture. Whatever may be said about the number employed, I challenge any opponent of the pending bill to point out any expenditure of Government funds that will provide for more general employment than aid to Federal highways. I also challenge any such opponent to name any legislation from which the general public will receive more direct benefits.

PUBLIC WORKS

Donations from the Public Treasury are decried. The dole is denounced. Work is the remedy for unemployment. We must be national in our point of view. The cities profit from the construction of public buildings. The country is benefited by the building of roads. Those who represent the sparsely settled States are asking no special favors. They are advocating a national program for public works that will benefit the industrial workers of the city and the laborers of the country.

I advocate the broad and liberal view. Harbors are improved, with direct benefit to the cities located thereon. I advocate appropriations for improving harbors. The representatives of the cities advocate aid to banks, railways, life-insurance companies, and shipping companies. I gladly support all reasonable measures for these purposes, but in support of these measures I ask my friends from the great cities to reciprocate. I commend the view and the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], for he admits that there is the problem of unemployment in both the country and the city.

If Congress is not to adopt the dole, then all appropriations to aid unemployment involve construction of some kind. If those who advocate relief for unemployment oppose highway construction, they should submit a better program of relief. It will be difficult for the country to understand the complete change of front and the utter repudiation of that program for unemployment that was proclaimed by President Hoover and his defenders as sound in December, 1930.

LOCAL LABOR AND REASONABLE WAGES

I favor a reasonable wage scale, and I am also in favor of the employment of American citizens on all public works. At the same time, I favor regular aid for highways. One of the dangers in Federal aid is the tendency to centralize. The States contribute 50 per cent. They should have the final voice in the expenditure of the funds. Federal aid provides, under our dual form of government, for the distribution of income equitably among the States for national purposes. The laws of the States with respect to labor and public works control in highway construction. Contracts are made subject to State laws. I therefore oppose any further Federal legislation that will take away from the States power and authority in the distribution of the funds and in the execution of the works. I oppose further bureaucracy and advocate local sovereignty in Federal aid.

RELIEF

Did the emergency highway program in 1931 actually give relief? Every dollar of the emergency appropriation was allocated and used. New York, Indiana, and Michigan, as well as every other State in the Union, used every cent of the emergency appropriation allocated to them. The relief under the previous emergency act came to every State in the Union. No time-serving or political opposition can controvert successfully the undisputed fact that employment was promoted by the previous emergency appropriation.

EMERGENCY

I want to say a word about the present necessity for the legislation. The revenues of the States have decreased. As I have pointed out, the funds for highway construction will be materially less in many States during the current year. Many heretofore employed on highways will be without work. There is the problem to maintain those who are at present employed. Moreover, with the difficulties of balancing State budgets for the current year, where a different plan of financing obtains from that in the Federal Government, the taxes on gasoline are being diverted to pay other obligations. Highway construction will lag. The States will be without money to match the regular Federal aid in 1933. Passage of the pending bill will make available, therefore, without local contribution, approximately $250,000,000, for immediate highway construction.

[1] The total for Hawaii includes $880,000 which was set aside as a special fund by the act of Feb. 23, 1931.

There is a balance to the credit of Mississippi from the apportionment of 1931 of $1,266,550.71. Only two other States in the Union have not used their 1931 apportionment. These States are Florida and Alabama. There is to the credit of Mississippi for 1932, $2,209,509. There will be apportioned in 1933, $1,907,440.80. Thus the total unobligated balance to the credit of Mississippi is $5,383,500.51.

The danger is that Mississippi and other States will lose Federal-aid road funds because of the inability of the States to match these funds. Under the Federal highway act all Federal-aid funds unallocated and unobligated for two years after the close of the fiscal year in which the apportionments are made lapse and are reapportioned among all of the States. For instance, a part of the Federal-aid apportionment for the State of Montana for the fiscal year 1923 lapsed and that State lost $655,546.34. For the fiscal year 1928, $326,846.96 apportioned to Hawaii lapsed.

The apportionment of $1,266,550.71 for the fiscal year 1931 to Mississippi will lapse if the amount is not obligated and matched by State funds before July 1, 1933. This State and other States are in danger of losing their apportionment of Federal-aid highway funds. The apportionments for the fiscal year, I repeat, lapse after two years, unless they are matched and obligated. Hence the emergency and importance of the pending bill.

I also insert the following table showing the unobligated apportionments accruing to the several States in another form, to wit:

[1] The term "stage construction" refers to additional work done on projects previously improved with Federal aid. In general, such additional work consists of the construction of a surface of higher type than was provided in the initial improvement.

Under the emergency act of December, 1930, there was apportioned to the State of Mississippi $1,452,736. The amount was used for 41 projects and for 201.5 miles.

Under the leave to extend my remarks, I include herewith a table showing the amount that each State will receive under the authorization of $120,000,000 in the pending bill, to wit:

Amount each State would receive of an apportionment of $120,000,000, using the percentages of the regular 1933 apportionment

Alabama	$2,550,053

It will thus be seen that Mississippi will receive $2,160,628. This amount will be immediately available and can be used to match Federal aid. Approximately $4,500,000, without State funds, will be immediately available for highway construction in Mississippi.

If the Mississippi Highway Commission is able to obtain in the next 12 months, either through legislative enactment or from funds accruing to it, approximately $3,500,000, there will be available for highway construction about $11,000,000.

The great benefit of the emergency highway legislation becomes apparent. The situation that obtains in Mississippi prevails in many States.

No burdens of taxation are placed upon the States by the passage of the pending bill. The emergency act of 1930 provided for deductions from future Federal-aid apportionments in repayments over a period of five years. A similar provision obtains in the present bill for deductions for 10 years beginning in 1938.

SETTLED POLICY

While this is not the occasion for the discussion of the merits of Federal-aid highway construction a few observations are in order. Those who use the highways should pay for them. Highways are now used by citizens of all the States. Federal aid is the best plan devised for all to contribute to their costs. Federal aid to highway construction has become the accepted policy of the country. President Hoover, in his message to Congress in December, 1929, said:

> Federal aid in the construction of the highway systems in conjunction with the States has proved to be beneficial and stimulating.

The United States Chamber of Commerce is nothing if not conservative. Silas H. Strawn, president, in a communication to the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on January 1, 1932, submitted resolutions adopted at the annual meeting in 1929, from which I quote:

> The constant expansion of motor transportation has brought with it new demands for highway construction and improvement despite the great progress made during the past decade.

And again:

> Increased Federal funds for use on the interstate system will at once expedite completion of this work and will release State and local funds for use on secondary roads.

Those who oppose Federal aid for highway construction maintain that the larger and wealthier States contribute more as taxes than they receive under Federal highway legislation. It is said that Mississippi, under the pending emergency act, will receive 1.8 per cent of the apportionment and will contribute only .06 of the total revenue collections. It is pointed out that Mississippi will receive under this emergency appropriation $2,160,628, and that the total internal-revenue receipts from Mississippi for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, are $1,584,433.15. I submit, however, that such opposition is not well founded. The large commercial institutions are domiciled in New York and other great cities, but they engage in business in all the States. The industrial centers, other States, and cities participate in the benefits of highway construction in Mississippi. In concrete roads, about 15 per cent is paid to men employed on the job. 12 per cent goes to men employed in the quarries, gravel pits, sand pits, mills and factories, and 14 per cent to men employed in transportation. Some of the costs of construction goes to miners. Fuel to produce power is necessary. Part of the cost is paid to men who build the machinery, and some goes to the cement plants and steel mills, where road materials are produced. Many city workers are employed. This is particularly true in the transportation and in the mills and the factories.

Again, States like New York receive credit for revenue collections from many railway, insurance, both fire and life, and other financial institutions that are engaged in business in all the other States of the Union. The citizens of other States contribute to the income that is paid in New York. These States are entitled to share in the distribution of the taxes from that income.

Automobiles are manufactured in Detroit. They are sold in every State in the Union. The highways of the Nation are used by the people of the country and all should contribute to their construction.

Federal aid for highway construction is fair and just. The general public receives the benefits of Federal-aid road expenditures.

In conclusion, I urge the passage of the pending bill as an emergency and as a tried and proven measure in aid of unemployment. I suggest that no further limitations or rules and regulations controlling the expenditure of the funds in Washington be inserted in the bill, by amendment. It is difficult, if not impossible, to embody in a national statute all the details that apply to labor and other conditions in all the States. The committee gave careful consideration to the legislation and it is believed that the provisions of the bill with respect to local labor will be generally applicable.

I ask those who oppose to reconsider. I call upon both Republicans and Democrats alike to vote for the passage of this bill and thus make the first and only material contribution thus far during the session to the relief of unemployment in every State in the Union. If highway construction aided unemployment in December, 1930, it will certainly doubly aid it in February, 1932. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, this measure will not give all the relief needed or desired, but it is the only bill reported to this House seeking direct relief for the unemployed. We have granted relief to the larger industries through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, whereby banks, railroads, insurance companies, agricultural-credit corporations, farmers for crop purposes, and others may borrow money. A moratorium has been passed granting relief to European nations for the payment of their indebtedness due this year to the extent of $252,000,000, and this burden must be passed on to the taxpayers of this Nation. One hundred and twenty-five million dollars has been appropriated for the relief of Federal land banks. We have also passed the Glass-Steagall bill liberalizing the Federal reserve bank system, which will go far in putting more money into circulation, but none of these measures go directly to the relief of the unemployed. Under the terms of this bill $132,500,000 is appropriated for the purpose of matching Federal aid, and without this appropriation at least one-third of the States of the Union will be unable to carry on their Federal road-building program. Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, South Carolina, Florida, and Arkansas are unable to match Federal-aid money, and many other States, on account of the bond situation and the depleted income from revenue, will be unable to obtain their full benefit of Federal aid. Many States, including Rhode Island, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Ohio, North Carolina, and New York, have completed, or about completed, their 7 per cent Federal road program, but under section 4 of this measure they can add another per cent and reap the benefits under this bill.

By this money being used to match Federal aid, which is now available to all States, it will mean $265,000,000 going direct for Federal road work, and it is estimated by the Bureau of Public Roads that this measure will be the means of at least $300,000,000 being used on public roads in the next year. The Director of Public Roads, Mr. MacDonald, after a very extensive check and investigation declares that in the breakdown of a dollar used in building public roads that over 85 to 90 per cent goes to personnel and labor. In arriving at these figures he takes into consideration the men employed directly upon the project, the labor used in transportation and the manufacture of material and the tools used in the burning of cement, and the office force. It will thus furnish labor for at least 275,000 every day for a year and 1,000,000 for the peak load during the summer months. This will mean that 85 or 90 per cent of this $300,000,000 will go to labor and that the Federal road program will continue in operation, which will not be possible in at least one-third of the States of this Union, if not more, unless this or a similar measure is passed.

Regardless of the actual amount that will go to labor, we do know of our own knowledge that a great percentage of it will be thus used; in addition thereto we know that this means to put $300,000,000 into circulation, and the greater portion of this amount going into the hands of those who are in dire need and who are now out of employment.

Certainly labor is entitled to this measure in view of the fact we have appropriated fifteen times the amount of this bill for the relief of banks and their associates, to say nothing of the fact that this will mean the continuation without interruption of our Federal road program, and will leave valuable improvements in every State in the Union.

In most of the States the law provides that contracts must be let to the lowest bidder, and heretofore the Federal Road Bureau has had very little to say in this regard. The contractor is generally equipped with the most modern machinery, together with a force of men, and takes his outfits, including laborers, from one community to another and from one State to another, and local labor has not been receiving the benefit that it should.

Then, too, the contractors are apt to take advantage of the unemployment condition and pay very little for common labor. Section 3 of the bill was inserted for the purpose of giving the bureau the right to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of the act with a view of providing the maximum employment of local labor consistent with reasonable economy of construction. This will permit the director to present a questionnaire to each bidder requiring him to show how he intends to perform the contract if successful, and what wages he expects to pay. It was the desire of the committee, concurred in by Mr. MacDonald, that a reasonable wage should be paid for labor and that no contract should be awarded where there was not a minimum wage specified. It was also the desire that machinery should be eliminated as far as possible, in order to furnish more labor, consistent with reasonable economy of construction. In many instances more labor can be used consistent with reasonable economy in the building of culverts and excavations for the same by using teams and scrapers rather than highly improved machinery. This section also provides for local labor. We feel confident that under the authority given in section 3 that the Bureau of Public Roads will have a right to sit in and have a voice in saying to whom and under what circumstances contracts shall be awarded, and that the director will go the limit, consistent with reasonable economy, in providing that a living wage shall be paid and that as much local labor will be used as possible, and that labor will be given the first consideration in this program.

This measure will grant relief where relief is most needed. In my opinion, on account of the depression and the decreased income from gasoline and automobiles taxes, at least one-half of the States will not be able to carry on in their Federal road program without the relief of this or a similar bill. For instance, in my State, Arkansas, on account of this very fact we will have no money to match Federal aid, and will, therefore, be unable to carry on the Federal road program in the State this year without the relief sought in this measure.

Under this bill Arkansas will receive $2,091,143 to match Federal aid, which will mean that we will do at least $4,000,000 worth of road work in the State this year. We are assured that every State has a set-up and is ready to take advantage of the terms and provisions of this bill and start work at once.

Personally, I would much prefer that this money be used in the building and improving of rural post roads and farm-to-market roads not now in the Federal system, but I realize that it would take new legislation and much time would elapse before the money would be available due to new regulations and new set-ups. Then, too, it appears to be the policy of the Government to do nothing for this class of roads until the present plan under which we are working is completed. The enactment of this law will speedily hasten the day when the present program will be completed in order that we may grant relief where it is contemplated under the Constitution that the relief should go, and that is to the rural post roads.

This measure is in no sense a dole, as the money advanced will be repaid by the States out of future Federal-aid allotments in 10 equal payments, beginning in 1938. It is along the line of the La Follette-Costigan measure, differing in amount and providing for repayment.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to review a bit of recent history in the House for just a few minutes. When the first deficiency bill came before the House, this body, under the leadership of the Democratic-controlled Committee on Appropriations, with great cheering and boasting to the country of economy, took $10,000,000 from the appropriation for Federal aid for public roads. Then a few weeks later, when the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill was before the House, the Democratic majority on that committee, with the approval of this House, took $9,000,000 more from the appropriation for Federal aid for public roads, again boasting to the country to look at a Democratic majority in the Congress to see how much money they were saving. In two bills $19,000,000 was stricken from the appropriations for Federal aid to roads by the Democratic majority in this House at this session. When I was pointing out that that saving was not real but a paper saving and not in good faith, the newspapers carried a statement signed by the Speaker of this House [Mr. GARNER], by the majority leader [Mr. RAINEY], by the minority leader [Mr. SNELL] to the effect that under their leadership this Congress would not report nor pass bills that called for an increased expenditure of money.

Of course, this was done, quite obviously, with the idea of heading off any sentiment that I might have been able to develop in favor of giving to the appropriations for public roads the amount that the Budget and the President had asked for. That publicity-getting statement served its purpose and has long since been quite obviously forgotten by the Democratic leaders.

Nineteen million dollars has been taken out of this fund this year by the Democratic majority of this House. Then the Interior Department appropriation bill came along, and that committee also wanted to boast to the country that it was saving money, and so, among other things, they took $1,000,000 out of the Budget estimate for roads to be built in the national parks. This proposed bill calls for $1,500,000 for national-park roads. They took out $1,000,000—now they put back in $1,500,000. They have gone both ways on that proposal.

This is $20,000,000 that the Committee on Appropriations has taken out of the appropriations for roads that have been asked by the President in the Budget. Having cut out $20,000,000 from the road appropriations and claimed the savings to the public, it is now proposed to appropriate $130,000,000 for exactly the same purposes that the $20,000,000 would have been used for.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Please wait until I am through and then I shall be pleased to yield.

Then in the Interior Department appropriation bill, also in the name of economy and saving money, the appropriation bill took $2,000,000 from the construction fund for Boulder Dam, a labor-giving project. They took $1,164,000 from two reclamation projects that are almost entirely labor items.

Then in the bill that is now before the House the Committee on Appropriations again in the Treasury and Post Office bill has a bill before the Congress taking $12,000,000 from the Budget estimate for money for the building of public buildings. Another item that gives employment.

So that we have here $20,000,000 that has been cut out of the appropriations for roads this year in the name of economy for which the Democratic Party of the House is asking credit, and now it proposes to appropriate $130,000,000 to cover up that $20,000,000.

Then they have taken out of these other bills a total of some $16,000,000 additional that would have gone directly to the employment of labor throughout the country. This bill is offered as a labor-giving measure. Where is the consistency in such a program? Thirty-six million dollars taken out and a proposed $132,500,000 put in.

We have meeting this afternoon a special committee set up in the House with the idea of finding ways and means to cut Government expenditures, and the Ways and Means Committee of the House is now in session trying to devise ways of raising revenue to meet the expenses of the Government. So that at this minute one Democratic committee is trying to save money, one Democratic committee trying to spend money, and one Democratic committee trying to raise money.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two more minutes.

Mr. SIMMONS. So that we have a situation where the Democratic Committee on Appropriations of the House is cutting appropriations for the building of roads and for public improvements that employ labor, and then we have a special committee of the House set up aiming to find some way to save money, and the Ways and Means Committee is sitting up nights in an effort to balance the Budget; and then another branch of the same party comes in with a bill asking us to appropriate $132,500,000 to give employment to the men who have been denied employment in the appropriation bills that this House has already passed.

It just occurs to me, in all kindliness, that the statement that was made by a distinguished speaker in Ohio the other night that the Democratic leadership of this House is getting a bit "dizzy" is being pretty well proven by what is going on here to-day.

I now yield to my colleague from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman stated that on the public-road highway item of the agricultural bill which we recently passed there is $19,000,000 that the President requested, which we cut out, that would give employment to a number of people. The gentleman is mistaken. The Budget cut off the $10,000,000 under the emergency act of last year.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the gentleman misunderstood me. In the deficiency bill $10,000,000 was taken from the Budget estimate for public roads. The President asked for $60,000,000 and the gentleman's committee gave $50,000,000. Then in the agricultural bill the President asked for $109,000,000 and the committee gave $100,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Nebraska made some statements that the facts do not bear out. It is true that the appropriation was cut $10,000,000 below the President's estimate for public-road construction in the deficiency bill, and it is true that the agricultural subcommittee cut $9,000,000 from the President's estimate for public roads. But the gentleman from Nebraska knows that in the hearings before those committees, Mr. MacDonald, Chief of the Highway Department, said that such reduction would not hurt the public-roads construction program one iota; that the amount carried in such bills would be sufficient to carry through the fiscal year until Congress met next December, when the next agricultural bill would be passed. The bill under consideration is to make a further advance to the States, which they do not have to match in the year in which it is expended. It is to be loaned to the States and repaid by the States by deducting one-tenth of the amount loaned to each State from the allotment made by the Federal Government to such State for each year from 1938 to 1948. This bill is in the interest of unemployment. The agricultural bill was passed, and the States have to match the appropriations. This appropriation does not have to be matched this year or next year, and the gentleman from Nebraska knew it when he made his speech. [Applause.]

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, there have been things spoken during this debate that I am sure are confusing. We are bending every effort to get this country out of the so-called depression in which we find ourselves at the present time.

I have supported every one of the administration measures, but I do not recall that when we were considering the Reconstruction Finance Corporation measure, which I supported, nor do I recall that when we were passing the bill giving $125,000,000 to the Federal farm-loan banks of this country, which I also supported, that these gentlemen rose with the same degree of eloquence and asked where we were going to get that money. [Applause.]

Let us be consistent. This year is not going to be worse than last. This bill only authorizes an expenditure of practically the same amount as that we spent on roads last year. We got the money last year. Is there anything on the horizon, anywhere, that indicates that we are not going to get the same amount of money that we got last year for this very laudable and fine purpose?

Oh, they may talk that we can not get the money, but let us be consistent all the way along the line.

I have faith and confidence in this country. I believe that for every just, legitimate expenditure of this Government the United States can find the necessary money. [Applause.]

Now, just a word about this bill. The gentleman from Illinois and others have said that it is outrageous. Well, let us see. It is all right to come before us and make statements of that kind, but let us look carefully into this question. This is an emergency proposition. There is about $109,000,000 to the credit of the States, because the States can not match it. If this bill is passed, they can put the men to work with the set-up they have in 30 days.

I say to-day, without fear of successful contradiction, that there is no money appropriated for any purpose from which the labor of this country derives more benefit than it does from the appropriation for roads.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I agree with the gentleman; but if this is an emergency relief measure, why should it not be allocated in proportion to population?

Mr. COLTON. Well, that question has been raised by the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Michigan, but this is not the only employment relief measure that will come up. If you made population the basis of apportionment, you would rearrange the entire roads appropriation scheme. For this emergency proposition you would go back to the beginning, and say that the basis on which we divided the road appropriations has not been correct. I am not prepared to do that, nor do I think it is necessary in this matter. Moreover, go into any city to-day, and you will find that the road-building associations of the country are making requisitions for labor from the cities.

It has been said, and I think without successful contradiction, that between 80 and 90 per cent of this money goes to labor. It is true that is not wholly upon the projects themselves. In round numbers let us say that there are employed upon the road-building project 300,000 men. A conservative estimate, not guesswork, based on actual investigation and survey, discloses that for every man actually employed upon the project there are two men employed in the furnishing of the material and in the transporting of it to the roads. So that for every man employed on the project you have two other men employed. This will not take up all of the slack of unemployment. I repeat again, however, it is the first and the best appropriation that has been or will be made to relieve the unemployment situation, and further, it is necessary. Out in the West, for instance, we have Indians to-day that are practically starving. If you make this appropriation, those Indians may be put to work on the roads of the reservations—and they are good road builders, too. There is a provision in the bill that will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to prescribe rules and regulations to request and require the greatest possible amount of local labor consistent with economy to be employed.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. And machinery will not be employed to the exclusion of labor, but the money is going to labor. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman to say that that means the utilization of local common labor?

Mr. COLTON. Largely.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Does the gentleman not think that common labor ought to be specified?

Mr. COLTON. Some local skilled labor ought to be used. We do not want to limit it to any one class. We want to give to the Secretary of Agriculture the authority which in many cases he has already used, without it, to see to it that local labor is used in the building of these highways.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That might be skilled labor. What I refer to is common labor.

Mr. COLTON. I think the Secretary of Agriculture and the road commissions may be trusted to employ to the best advantage all local labor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. WARREN. I yield now to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT].

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Roads, I desire to state that the pending measure to appropriate $132,000,000 as an emergency fund to aid in relieving the unemployment situation in America by building public roads is not ill-advised or a hastily prepared measure, as the opposition charges. Days of hearings were held on this bill by the committee before it was brought here for consideration. It was shown that the passage of this emergency legislation would put at least 1,000,000 unemployed American citizens to work. Not a dole, mind you, but it would permit a million jobless men to earn an honest livelihood. I have long contended, and still feel, that a chance to earn an honest living is all the average American citizen desires. Let me say that if ever there was a time when legislation were needed to relieve unemployment it is now. We are sure that 90 per cent of the money proposed to be appropriated for this emergency will go to pay for labor. This is the first of the many bills presented or passed by the present Congress to actually bring relief to the unemployed.

There has never been a time when this Government could get more value—more lasting value—for the money invested than is proposed in the pending bill to construct public roads through the entire country. Never has there been a time when we needed good roads in my State, and I assume in other States, more than now. Never was the public holding its breath, so to speak, wondering if Congress will really do anything to relieve the terrible conditions as now. Mr. Chairman, this bill, if and when passed, will send approximately two and a quarter million dollars to Oklahoma from the Federal Treasury in addition to the regular annual appropriation for highway construction.

Several very distinguished gentlemen, including the able gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM], and other Republican leaders, have bitterly opposed this bill on the plea of economy. Just how gentlemen could support the moratorium on foreign war debts, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that was admitted to be a dole to the big banks to the tune of billions of dollars, both of which I am glad to say I opposed, and at the same time so bitterly oppose the pending bill that would really aid the destitute and the unemployed of the country is beyond my understanding.

We have done enough for big business—now let us do something worth while for the rest of the country. Let us pass this emergency road-building program now.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS].

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, this is the only measure that has been brought into this House that promises to give any employment to labor since this Congress met, December 7, 1931. Let us see where we stand in this matter. Last year we expended in the country a little more than $1,000,000,000 on roads. That $1,000,000,000 expenditure employed about 3,000,000 men, directly and indirectly. For the year 1932 the reductions in the cost of road construction will be about 30 per cent, so that there will be at least 900,000 less men employed in the manufacture of road material and in road building than there were in 1931. This measure will in some respect give employment to the extent of an expenditure of $120,000,000. I have been amused at gentlemen from the large cities who oppose this measure. When we had the bill under consideration to vote $1,750,000 for the world fair at Chicago in my State, which I was proud to support, one of the gentlemen who spoke in opposition to this bill this morning loudly acclaimed the fact that we should have that money for the world fair. The gentlemen from the cities who are opposing this measure should understand, of course, that if roads are not built throughout the country, if roads are not built from city to city, out through the country, the streets and the roads surrounding the city would be of very little value to them. The gentlemen from the cities who are opposing this measure should at least give some consideration to the fact that you must get somewhere on your roads leading away from your city streets. I have been amused also at the attitude of some of the gentlemen across the aisle this morning in trying to inject this bill into politics. When the $125,000,000 Federal land bank bill was under consideration we did not hear any cry of economy. That was for the bondholders to the extent of $100,000,000, and the $25,000,000 additional appropriation has not up to the present moment released a single farmer whose mortgage was being foreclosed. When we had the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill under consideration I did not hear any economy talk on the floor of the House. It was said the money could be raised overnight. Up until the other day, while this organization has been functioning for 30 days, only $24,000,000 had been loaned. At that rate it will take seven years to loan the $2,000,000,000 you voted here.

I understand there is in the committee another bill of $150,000,000 for home-loan banks and $150,000,000 for insolvent banks, and yet I presume when gentlemen bring those bills on the floor of the House the idea of economy will not be raised. Let us vote for a bill that will give some relief to the country at large; that will put some people to work and help restore prosperity which the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have talked so long about. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Roads Committee I listened attentively to all of the testimony submitted to it, and at the end of that testimony I was sorry that I did not have an opportunity to vote a greater amount than the amount reported to this House in this bill. [Applause.] I also want to say as a Member whose district is principally urban that I hope before this Congress adjourns there will be some bill brought here to relieve unemployment in the cities. [Applause.] I wish to urge upon you, especially with reference to this road bill, the great need that exists for continued highway construction during this economic crisis. The highway program should be increased rather than curtailed in order to furnish work for thousands of unemployed. The materials used in roadway construction are, in the ultimate analysis, more nearly 100 per cent labor product than those of any other industry. Highway construction will therefore do more, dollar for dollar, to relieve distress than any other type of project which can be undertaken immediately. The benefits derived from improved highways are universally acknowledged to be of great and lasting benefit. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the bill under consideration is meritorious and should be enacted.

Under the existing general law the Federal Government appropriates many millions of dollars every year, which is apportioned in amounts to the various States as follows:

One-third in the ratio which the area of every State bears to the total of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of every State bears to the total of all the States as shown by the latest available Federal census; one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural-delivery routes and star routes in every State bears to the total mileage of rural delivery and star routes in all the States at the close of the next preceding fiscal year.

Upon this basis the Secretary of Agriculture determines the amount of Federal aid which each State is to receive. Before this amount is available for expenditure in the several States, the State itself is required to match this amount, dollar for dollar. It is further provided by the present Federal highway act that this sum of money is to be expended by the various State highway departments upon roads which are known and designated as primary or interstate highways. In determining, under our present law, the roads which are to receive Federal aid, the Secretary of Agriculture is required to give preference to such projects as will expedite the completion of an adequate and connected system of highways, interstate in character.

In other words, under our Federal highway act all sums appropriated by the Congress are spent by the State highway departments upon roads which are designed to create a great system of interstate connecting highways, and such sums of money are to be supplemented, dollar for dollar, by the States. It is further provided that the total mileage of roads in a State upon which Federal money may be expended shall not exceed 7 per cent of the total mileage of the highways in the several States.

Conditions now existing in practically every State in the Union make it imperative that the appropriation carried in the present bill be made if this system is to be carried forward. The bill under consideration specifically provides that the sum of $120,000,000 shall be immediately available for expenditures by the State highway departments without the necessity upon the part of the State highway departments supplementing the amount appropriated and received. While the bill provides that this $120,000,000 is an advancement and that the amount received by an individual State shall be returned to the Government over a period of 10 years, beginning in 1938, as a matter of fact that provision of the bill, if enacted, will not be binding upon future Congresses and may be repealed at any time, and I predict that the sum will never be returned by the States.

It is necessary that these primary roads be completed and be maintained and it is necessary that this advancement be made. The advancement will help to relieve the unemployment situation that exists in every State, and will afford employment for the people in the sections where these roads will be constructed. Without this advancement many roads, now in an incompleted condition, would be seriously damaged, and it appears to me economically necessary that the advancement be made, and for these reasons I am supporting the proposed bill.

However, by supporting this bill I do not want to convey, Mr. Chairman, an impression that the duties of the Congress, in so far as the construction of highways is concerned, will have been done, because, in my opinion, the national legislation in reference to the building of highways is not sufficient and does not include all the roads that should be built and maintained by the National Government.

The present Federal highway act and the bill now under consideration are justified by clause 7 of section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, which provides:

> The Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads.

This provision of the Constitution is unambiguous, and the Congress should, in my opinion, discharge in a more comprehensive manner the obligation of the National Government to build and maintain post roads. Under the existing law Federal appropriations can be applied only to the improvement of roads aggregating 7 per cent of the total mileage of the roads in a State. Everyone knows that in every State in the Union only a small percentage of the rural routes, post roads, traverse these Federal-aid roads, and the Congress, it seems to me, has been derelict in its duty, solemnly enjoined by the Constitution, in so far as the greater number of post roads in the various States are concerned.

On February 18, 1932, I prepared and introduced a bill, H. R. 9490, which is designed to discharge this obligation. Under the provisions of my bill, H. R. 9490, the rural routes in the various States will actually receive the benefit which it was, in my opinion, intended by this provision of the Constitution they should receive.

The bill, H. R. 9490, now pending before the Committee on Roads of the House, provides for an appropriation of $100,000,000 per year for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934. It provides that this sum of money shall first be divided among the various States in the same ratio as now provided by section 21 of title 23 of the United States Code of Laws. The amount thus allotted to the several States would be further divided and apportioned to the respective counties or other subdivisions created by the law of the several States and expended by the counties or other local agencies established by the laws of the States upon the rural routes which are not a part of the State highway system in the respective counties. In this way every rural route in the United States would receive direct benefit and this Government would in that way discharge the obligation enjoined upon it by the Constitution to the people residing upon these routes or in the territory served by the rural routes.

We hear it very often said that one of the problems confronting us to-day is to provide for the return of the urban population to the rural sections. That is true; but at the same time we can prevent the flow of the rural population into the urban centers by giving to these people some of the direct benefits of Federal expenditures, and I know of no better way to do this than to follow the plain mandate of our great Constitution.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Roads of the House and that the leaders in this Congress may realize the importance of this matter and that this Congress may favorably act upon H. R. 9490, because the bill now under consideration does not reach the people residing away from these Federal-aid roads.

I have felt constrained to call the attention of Congress to this bill in these remarks with the hope that the aid of men older in service may be enlisted in my effort to carry these benefits to the rural communities as well as to continue our expenditures upon the great trunk roads that now are a part of the great highway system. This can not be done under the bill now before the House, and I appeal on behalf of that great body of taxpayers and citizens who can not speak for themselves that some of the highway funds appropriated yearly by Congress be expended upon these rural routes and that we in that manner insure to those people the same consideration that we give to those who may happen to live on one of these great trunk interstate highways. It may be argued that to build and improve the rural routes would be too expensive; but, may I say, Mr. Chairman, there have never been any Federal funds appropriated for these particular roads that are covered by my bill, H. R. 9490, and our great Government should not by a plea for economy fail to give to those people who reside away from the great highways the same consideration that is given to those who live elsewhere. Every dollar that is expended in developing our rural sections traversed by the now neglected rural routes will return to the Government tenfold and will contribute materially to the welfare of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN].

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, this is the first legislation that has been before this Congress that will take care of the man who is unable to help himself during these days of distress and want, the laboring man. Strange as it may seem, we are met with the plea that the laboring man should be denied relief. Why? Because we have to balance the Budget.

I sat upon this floor and saw Members of this body relinquish over $250,000,000 to take care of foreigners, and yet not a word was said, when the moratorium bill was being considered, about balancing the Budget. We passed a bill that will give to the banks and railroads and insurance companies of this country $2,000,000,000, and not a word did I hear from the opposition about balancing the Budget. They seem to think it is all right when we vote money out of the Treasury to protect property and that it is all wrong when we vote money out of the Treasury to protect human lives. [Applause.]

I, for one, want to say to the gentlemen in opposition, that the Democratic Party has always placed human rights above property rights. [Applause.] Balancing the Budget! I believe in balancing the Budget, but let me tell you that if 25,000,000 men and women in this country are to remain in poverty and distress, if that is the price it costs to balance the Budget, then I am against balancing the Budget until we bring relief to our men and women.

Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the American laboring man, I want to say that he is not asking this Congress or anybody else for charity, but he is demanding work. [Applause.] That is what he is asking for. When we try to put him to work so that he can support his wife and children, we are told that it will not do; that we have to balance the Budget. If this bill will put 1,000,000 American men to work, then for God's sake let us pass it and put them to work. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $120,000,000, to be immediately available for expenditure in emergency construction on the Federal-aid highway system, with a view to increasing employment. Such sum shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture to the several States by the method provided in section 21 of the Federal highway act, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., title 23, chs. 1 and 2; Supp. V, title 23, chs. 1 and 2). (The sums apportioned to the States shall be available as a temporary advance of funds to meet the provisions of such act as to State funds.) The sum apportioned to any State under this section may be used to match the regular annual Federal-aid apportionments made to such State (including the one for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933), and when so used such sum shall be available for expenditure in paying the share of such State in the cost of Federal-aid projects. No sums apportioned under this act shall be advanced except for work on the Federal-aid highway system performed before June 30, 1933: Provided, That the sums so advanced shall be reimbursed to the Federal Government over a period of 10 years, commencing with the fiscal year 1938, by making deductions from regular apportionments made from future authorizations for carrying out the provisions of such act as amended and supplemented.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this measure will do good as far as it goes. It will afford employment for an indefinite number of men, those who are able to get jobs because of it and help them, and those who are dependent upon them. It will relieve the able-bodied, the capable, the skillful, the fortunate in job getting, and those in the prime of life—in short those groups which ordinarily would be better able to take care of themselves without it. But for the millions of children and old people, for the widows and orphans, for the cripples, and incompetents, for the classes which lead but a scrambling existence at best, and who are always the first to be submerged—for all those millions it promises not one penny of help.

Eight millions of our fellow citizens are unemployed. Probably twice that number are working less than half time, but that is but a small part of the awful cloud which hangs over this country. There are behind them—the darkest part of all the picture—the hopeless millions of their dependents, many of them now suffering for the necessaries of life.

For the helpless it appears nothing is to be done. From all that appears, this measure is to exhaust the magnanimity of the Federal Government for the relief of the distress which prevails throughout the land. These piteous millions have looked toward the administration, but found that its face was turned against them. They turned then to Congress, but their pleas have fallen upon deaf ears. Now, it seems that with making this gesture and affording this small measure of relief we have the answer of the administration, and, alas! the answer, as well, of the representatives of the people, that these suffering and destitute citizens shall be sentenced to starvation.

As for me, I dissent from any such inhumane program.

I protest with all earnestness and solemnity against such heartlessness toward those who are suffering for bread. [Applause.]

We have men in very high positions in our Government who are now found to stand upon the high principle that they will not accept Federal relief for the starving when it is to be administered through a Federal agency. That is, they will not accept it in this particular instance. They accepted Federal highway aid administered by a Federal bureau; they supported the maternity act, administered by a Federal authority; they voted for farm relief, at the hands of the Federal Farm Board. In the drought relief which we voted a year ago there was provision for Federal administration. They accepted Federal aid administered by a Federal bureau, and found it agreeable, in connection with the crop-loan provision of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act. It is only now, when it is proposed to use a few pennies of Uncle Sam's money to buy bread for the starving, that these worthy gentlemen suddenly discover for the first time the immutable principle which forbids that they accept it when administered by a Federal agency. They will not accept Federal aid through a Federal bureau to buy food for the starving, but they will take it for anything else. When starvation is involved the aid must be handed over to the States for administration by local politicians or they will not take it at all.

I protest. It is useless, perhaps, to express these sentiments; nevertheless I feel it my duty to my own people, many of whom—even of my personal acquaintances—are now actually suffering for bread; many of whom are in a state of starvation, and not too slow at that. I feel it my duty to them, 50,000 of whom are being fed by public charity——

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Over 50,000 of my constituents are now being fed by public charity, and probably 50,000 more are in dire need and ought to be receiving some help. My district is merely typical of many industrial districts.

To say that the local communities can care for the needs of their people is foolish; more than that, it is heartless and wicked. They can not do it. Every instinct of humanity, every sound principle of government demands that the Federal Government shall come to the rescue. Even if I did not represent a suffering people I would feel it my duty, having at heart the best interests of my country and the security of its institutions, to advocate some help for them in their hour of despair. [Applause.]

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KETCHAM: On page 2, line 1, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "except that such apportionment shall be upon the basis of population instead of area, population, and mileage."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KETCHAM. I desire to be heard briefly on the point of order, but should not the gentleman from North Carolina state his point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would rather hear from the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the amendment, I can scarcely understand how the point of germaneness can be lodged against it, for the simple reason that reference to the statute itself shows very clearly the method by which the distribution is to be made. That statute is referred to specifically in the language of the first section which has just been read. That statute provides that the distribution shall be by area, by road mileage, and by population. The amendment which I have offered simply eliminates two of those factors and includes only population. It would, therefore, seem to me to be perfectly germane to the section in view of the fact that "population" is included in the language in the original bill.

Mr. MICHENER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard for or against the point of order?

Mr. MICHENER. Against the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, from the statement made by the Chair when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM] suggested he wanted to be heard it would appear that the Chair had already made up his mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan that when the other gentleman from Michigan first suggested that he would offer this amendment, the Chair had the parliamentarian look up the precedents, and those precedents have been looked up. But if the gentleman from Michigan desires to be heard, the Chair will gladly hear him.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Michigan probably can not change the situation. However, the gentleman from Michigan does want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the purpose of this bill is to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction. The purpose of the bill is to provide emergency relief to the unemployed. The purpose of the bill is to provide relief to the greatest number of people possible. While I am familiar with some of the precedents which the Chair will probably cite, I want specifically to call the Chair's attention to the fact that this bill has but one purpose, and that purpose is emergency relief and to furnish employment. The method provided in the bill is material only as it will give the most work to the most people. The suggested amendment will distribute the money where it will best serve the announced purpose of the bill. The specific method should be considered in connection with the specific intent of the bill.

Any amendment which deals with the purpose of the bill, or any amendment which accomplishes the thing which the bill aims at, would, in the opinion of the gentleman speaking, be germane.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is the Chair prepared to rule on the question?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). Unless the gentleman from Alabama desires to speak against the point of order, the Chair is ready to rule.

The bill provides a specific method of distribution, to wit, that contained in the highway act. The method of distribution in the highway act is a specific method. It has been held many times that, where a bill provides a specific method, an amendment providing a different method is not germane. The Chair has before him a decision made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] directly on the point. That decision was made April 24, 1929. The Chair will quote the syllabus:

To a bill seeking to afford agricultural relief by one specified method, an amendment seeking to afford the same relief by a different method was held to be not germane.

The Chair will follow that decision and sustain the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 2, line 17, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That none of the money herein authorized to be appropriated shall be paid to any State on account of any project on which convict labor shall be directly employed."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that we asked the Director of Public Roads about this question——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] reserves a point of order?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman make the point of order, because I do not want to take up the time of the House unnecessarily?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The reservation is made upon the proposition that it is not germane to the section of the bill.

I may not press the matter, Mr. Chairman, if I may be allowed to consult with the chairman of the committee a moment.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I think I can explain the matter satisfactorily.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. FULLER. The director said that last year he never permitted any of this money to be used for convict labor, and he submitted section 3 in order that he might promulgate rules and regulations to control the expenditure of the money in the letting of these contracts. This was done at the instance of the Director of the Bureau of Roads, and the director states that under no circumstances will he allow any of this money to be used where convict labor is employed; and he told us further not to put it in the bill, but that he would attend to it under the provisions of section 3.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think this is purely a legislative function of the highest degree, and it seems to me that every Member of this House would want to be sure that we will not only not make ourselves ridiculous before our own country but before the entire world, and when we are providing appropriations to relieve unemployment we will be assured there will be no loophole for employing convict labor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I am very much in sympathy with the statement just made by the gentleman from New York, although I think there is full authority to prevent the use of convicts now. I think the gentleman, however, has offered his amendment to the wrong section, and I suggest to the gentleman that he offer the amendment to section 3, and the committee will accept the same.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will take the gentleman's word for that, and on the assurance of the gentleman that he will accept my amendment, if offered to section 3, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment and I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 2, after line 17, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "And provided further, That the prevailing rate of wages as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, shall be paid to all skilled and unskilled labor employed in the construction of all roads in said Federal highway system."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It strikes me that the amendment is not germane, inasmuch as this legislation contemplates that the work shall be done under rules and regulations as provided for in section 3 and under the provisions of the Federal highway act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the amendment provides that the prevailing rate of wages shall be applied. The very purpose of this bill is to increase employment. It is an employment bill, and any amendment pertaining to the payment of such employment goes to the very crux of the bill and, of course, is germane. There can not be any other interpretation of germaneness than to fix a rate of pay in a bill calling for employment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BLANTON). The Chair is ready to rule.

When the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. SNELL, was occupying the chair on December 9, 1930, he held that to a bill appropriating money for various construction projects and containing sections dealing with the interchangeability of appropriations and with the submission of reports to be made by the President, an amendment offered as a new section providing that none of the money should be used to pay laborers working more than seven hours a day was germane.

Under the authority of this ruling the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now, gentlemen, there is nothing extreme or radical in my amendment. It simply carries out the purpose of the bill, and that is that a fair proportion of the money goes to the men who do the work, and not to the contractor.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I ask the gentleman if this is substantially the language of the Bacon Act?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. I can not see how there can be any objection to my amendment. This is not a bill for the promotion of profits to the contractors. If it were it might be well to vote down my amendment. We are appropriating $120,000,000 in an emergency, and we want to spread it over as many workers as we can. This will prevent contractors paying their men, as some contractors are doing, as low as 75 cents a day.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. I might say that that is the practice all over the United States. In California, for instance, the contractors paid less than the going wage, and the labor commission was utterly powerless to prevent it.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. HORR. I want to say to the gentleman that in the State of Washington, in the reclamation projects, they have been paying as low as $1.50 a day.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then we better get after the contractors and put them out of business. Let us protect the workers on these roads and provide a decent American wage.

Mr. HORR. You can not do it under the law, for there is no provision by which the contractors could be reached.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, yes; if my amendment is adopted, we can surely compel the payment of the prevailing rate of wages.

Mr. BEEDY. I want to say that that is what they have been doing down in Maine, and they have threatened to reduce the local wages if they did not accept their wage.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My amendment would compel them to pay the prevailing wages.

Mr. HARE. I would like to get the gentleman's definition of the prevailing wage. Does that mean the prevailing wage of the locality, or the uniform wage of the entire country?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The prevailing wage where the work is being performed.

Mr. FULLER. That is the definition in the act of March 1, 1931?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. I make reference to the act for that very purpose.

Mr. BACON. I will say that the amendment that the gentleman from New York offers is the same language in the bill I introduced in the last Congress. I am delighted that he has offered this amendment so that it can be included in the contracts.

Mr. ARENTZ. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that the difficulty we got into in the Boulder Dam on the wage scale was that there was no local wage scale, and we put in the nearest employment area.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If we put in the prevailing wage scale, and they do not pay it, we will stop the payment at the Comptroller General's office. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment again reported.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] will be adopted. The amendment seems to be so fair and equitable that I think the chairman of the committee ought to state that he will accept the amendment and then let us proceed with further debate upon the bill. I pause for a moment to see whether or not the gentleman in charge of the report of the committee will state that the amendment is agreeable to the committee.

Mr. WARREN. Since having an opportunity to read the act of March 3, 1931, dealing with contractors, subcontractors, and so forth, on public works in the United States, the committee accepts the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I do this for the purpose of directing the attention of the proponent of the amendment to a condition that perhaps he is not acquainted with. If I am not in error, in Wisconsin, our State in its highway improvement provides a scale of wages higher than the prevailing rate. This amendment would negative the action of our State in prescribing a certain high rate shall be paid to all labor engaged in highway construction. It is not the purpose of the gentleman, I know, to lower the rate below that which the State prescribes. The State of Wisconsin says that all labor shall receive so much per hour, I can not say how much.

Mr. BACON. May I explain that?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to have a lower rate paid in the State of Wisconsin than the rate the State prescribes as a living wage to the men employed in this line of work. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. I think I can answer that satisfactorily to the gentleman. If the prevailing wage rate in Wisconsin happens to be higher than the prevailing wage rate in Florida, the prevailing wage in Wisconsin will obtain.

Mr. STAFFORD. The prevailing wage rate is lower than the State prescribes. Our State through its legislature prescribes that a certain definite rate shall be paid to labor on highways. I do not want to have the rate lowered by this amendment.

Mr. BACON. It will not be lowered.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The rate paid by the State establishes the prevailing rate. It is established in New York in the same way.

Mr. STAFFORD. Very well.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by inserting, after the act of March 31, 1931, the words "Public, No. 798, Seventy-first Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, we are passing through the greatest depression in the history of the Nation. No one bill can remedy the situation. We have passed several bills, others will be considered during the session. This bill authorizes supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction.

Section 1 authorizes the appropriation of $120,000,000 for expenditures in emergency construction on the Federal-aid highway system with a view to increasing employment. This sum is to be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture to the several States, as now provided by law. It is immediately available. The report of the committee is unanimous. It is approved, or at least no objection is made, by the Director of the Bureau of Roads. It must be expended by June 30, 1933.

Section 1 also authorizes any State to use its apportionment to match the annual Federal-aid apportionments made to the State, conditioned that the money be used on Federal-aid highways and that the sum so advanced shall be reimbursed to the Federal Government over a period of 10 years, commencing with the fiscal year 1938. The repayments are to be made by deductions from the regular apportionments on and after that date during a period of 10 years. The amount out of this sum authorized to be prorated to the states may be used by the several states to match other advancements by the Federal Government to be repaid in ten installments beginning in 1938.

Section 2 authorizes appropriations for national forest highways of $5,000,000; for constructing trails, bridges, and fire lanes in national forests, $3,000,000; for construction of roads, trails, and bridges in national parks and national monuments, $1,500,000; for construction and improvement of roads on Indian reservations, $1,000,000; and for construction and maintenance of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations other than the forest reservations, $2,000,000.

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of the act but specifically directs that these regulations shall be made with the view of providing the maximum employment of local labor consistent with reasonable economy of construction. This is an important addition in these depressed times. It should be sympathetically administered.

Section 4 provides that whenever provision has been made by any State for the completion and maintenance of 90 per cent of its system of primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty highways equal to 7 per cent of the total mileage of such State, that an additional mileage of 1 per cent may be added to the total Federal highway mileage of the State.

The purpose of the bill is twofold. Its main object now is to provide emergency employment to local labor throughout the country.

Section 3 emphasizes that the rules made by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be with a view of employment of local labor consistent with economy of construction.

I greatly fear that the appropriations heretofore made have not given the amount of employment to local labor that we had hoped. The work on Federal highways, for the most part, has been let out by contract, and the contractors have to a great extent used machinery and their regular forces of men without any very great benefit to local labor.

I am glad that this section is in the bill, and I trust that drastic rules and regulations may be made by the Secretary of Agriculture with a view of aiding the unemployment situation throughout the country.

I also indorse section 4 of the bill, which authorizes the adding of 1 per cent additional to the Federal highway system of a State where provision has been made for 90 per cent of its present system of highways. This will enable additional mileage to be added to the Federal highway system in each State. In my judgment, this mileage should be increased more than 1 per cent. It should be at least 3 per cent additional.

My State is a comparatively new one, but is making rapid strides in highway construction. We are expending large sums of money, secured for the most part from a gasoline tax and automobile licenses, on Federal highway systems. The hearings disclose that there is no unobligated balance due from Federal appropriations to Oklahoma for the year 1932. The apportionment due my State for 1933 is $2,328,366.59. This appropriation, when made, will give our State an additional amount.

I regard expenditures on roads as good investments. Everyone, whether living in the cities or the towns throughout the country, is benefited by expenditures on roads. Expenditures of this character enhance the value of farm lands. Roads provide arteries over which farm products may be marketed.

They aid the schools and the churches. They make it possible for every child living on the farm to attend city schools and receive a high school education. Good roads eliminate distance. They bring the city and rural population together.

The expenditure of Federal-aid appropriations matched by State funds on Federal-aid highways will permit the State highway commission to lay out additional State roads upon which State and county funds may be expended. We need to have more money expended upon farm-to-market roads, connecting up every community with State and Federal highways and with the market centers. I can not emphasize this need too strongly. I wish I had more time to dwell upon it. This money expended on Federal roads will release local and State money to build local farm-to-market roads. I would like to see every road over which rural mail is carried made a Federal-aid road.

I supported the first good roads bill, approved July 11, 1916. The appropriation then authorized was small. We have increased it from year to year, and as a result there has been a very great improvement in our national highways. We should not be content, however, until these highways extend through and connect up every section of our common country. Every county seat and every community center should be served by a State or Federal highway and these connected up with improved roads extending into and serving every community.

The amount authorized to be expended out of the Federal treasury in aid of good roads, including the amount carried in this bill, aggregates $1,490,000,000. This does not include appropriations authorized for forest reservations, national parks and Indian reservations. These appropriations have greatly stimulated road building, brought all sections nearer together, and aided in the development of the entire country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, while I would like very much to support this bill because of the benefits in road building which would accrue to the State of Washington and the third congressional district, I feel that I can not give my vote to the measure until I have some knowledge as to where the Federal Government is to secure revenue for its Treasury.

I regret that this bill has been brought out of committee in such haste and hurried to consideration on the floor in such record-breaking time. In my opinion, it would have been far better to have withheld the consideration of this bill until we received some word from the Committee on Ways and Means as to how it proposes to raise funds by Federal taxation.

The revenues of the Government have dropped all along the line. There has been a perpendicular drop in receipts from income taxes, both corporate and individual. This drop is from a figure of $2,250,000,000 in 1930 to an estimated figure of $650,000,000 in 1933; and until we can make sure we will have revenues sufficient to restore the solvency of the United States, it is not wise to authorize any new appropriations in any considerable sum. This bill calls for $132,000,000. If the House passes it, it is fair to presume that it will be the vehicle in the other body for hanging on proposals which will call for additional millions. Once the House becomes committed to this bill for the $132,000,000 authorization it will not be easy to stand against any additional sums that the other body may add even though the additions may run into large figures.

For these reasons and for the further important reason that while this bill is being put forth as a relief measure for unemployment, it must be apparent to anyone who will take pencil and paper in hand and figure for three minutes, that the employment relief phase is the small part of the bill. In my opinion, not 40 per cent of the whole sum would reach unemployed labor, and that 40 per sent would have to be spread among 48 States and the Territory of Hawaii. The relief in unemployment, if expected to be spread over 100 days' time, would be extremely small—too small to warrant calling this an unemployment or relief measure.

I realize that my voice and vote can be but in the nature of a protest. The nature of the bill is such that it qualifies along pork-barrel lines so that it will receive a vote far beyond that it would receive could it be considered on its merits alone.

Mr. HUDDLESTON offered the following amendment:

Page 2, at the end of the amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA, insert a new section, to be known as section 2, to read as follows: "That the sum of $100,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be available until July 1, 1933, to the President of the United States, for the relief of persons residing in the United States who may be in need of the necessaries of life. In disbursing the said sum the President shall have authority to use and employ such agencies as he may create for that purpose or as may already exist, and may cooperate with organizations, States, counties, and municipalities upon such terms and conditions as he may deem best, and may disburse same either as gifts or loans of money or of supplies to the beneficiaries."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is clearly well taken. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma offered the following amendment:

Page 2, at the end of section 1, add: "Provided, That whenever provision has been made by any State for the establishment of a system of farm market roads under the jurisdiction of the State highway commission, such roads shall be eligible to be constructed under the provisions of this act."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, under a former ruling by the Chair, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is clearly not germane, and I therefore make the point of order that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is clearly subject to a point of order. It is not germane. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RAMSPECK offered the following amendment:

At the end of the LaGuardia amendment, already adopted, strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "Said prevailing rate of wages shall be predetermined and made a part of the specifications and contract."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, because I could not hear the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the reason that if we are going to depart from the established policy of the House that when an amendment is once adopted we can modify it, I will wish to offer an amendment along the line that I was speaking upon. I think the gentleman is too late in offering his amendment. I therefore make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have had a great deal to do in my lifetime with the building of roads. I was one of the original five men in the State of Illinois who established the hard-road system in that State.

We organized in the State and we passed a $60,000,000 bond issue for the building of cement roads in the State of Illinois. Therefore I have had a great deal to do with the building of roads and I know how much labor it takes to build these hard roads.

When we began to build cement roads in the State of Illinois a contractor would use from 75 to 100 men to build two miles of road. Finally they improved the machinery to a point where those 75 men had been reduced to 15 men. In other words, with the machinery of to-day you can build two miles of hard road with 15 men. That represents $60,000 worth of road.

I do not object to the Government appropriating money for good roads; in fact, I am willing to vote for a bill that will give employment, but I tell you gentlemen you ought to think about this, because the bill which you have under consideration to-day will not employ any considerable amount of labor. The bill is not so drawn as to permit the hiring of men, but much of the money will go into materials and into the pockets of the contractors.

All of the States of the country to-day have rural roads, roads over which the mail carriers travel. These roads are in a deplorable condition, and you should put an amendment into this bill whereby this money will all go on these rural roads. Of course these will be gravel roads, and on such roads it will be possible to hire much help to dig the ditches and make the culverts. If you will do that you will put at work at least 75 men to each 2 miles of road, and you will do that for the same amount of money you will put at work 15 men on these general highways.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Yes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. I have an amendment to offer to that effect.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. All right. I think you are on the right track as far as putting your money into good roads is concerned; I think that is the correct thing to do, but in doing it you should not make a foolish move. You should not provide $120,000,000 that will positively go into the pockets of the contractors and which will not help from a labor standpoint.

I know what I am talking about. I have been in this road business in the State of Illinois for over 15 years. I was sent to South America by President Coolidge to promote good roads there, so I know what I am talking about. I say to you that as surely as you men vote for this and pass it as it is you are not doing what you are intending to do. In other words, you will not employ labor, but you will simply take $120,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States and put it into the pockets of the contractors. Therefore I hope you will consider some amendment whereby this money will go on the rural roads, and whenever you get these rural roads built you will be in a better position to have the delivery of mail thereon.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. Under a similar appropriation last year there were nearly 300,000 men employed directly upon the projects, and a conservative estimate showed that there were two additional men, or about 600,000, employed in furnishing materials and transporting them to the projects.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. The gentleman does not mean to tell me he expects to put any man to work under this bill, does he?

Mr. COLTON. Indeed I do.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. How many men?

Mr. COLTON. We will put to work nearly 1,000,000 men on the projects and furnishing and transporting material.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. The gentleman is misinformed. It would take ten times as much money to do that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 1, line 8, beginning with the word "States," strike out all of the remaining language on that page and the first two words on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KETCHAM: On page 1, beginning in line 8, after the word "States," strike out the remainder of line 8, all of lines 9 and 10, and the word "and" and the figure "2" in parentheses, on page 2, in line 1.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan prevails, will it then be in order for the gentleman from Michigan to offer the amendment which was ruled out of order a short time ago?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that that is not a proper parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cross that bridge when he reaches it. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KETCHAM) there were—ayes 71, noes 116.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, to be immediately available, for expenditure in emergency construction on public roads (other than the Federal-aid highway system) during the period ending June 30, 1933, with a view to increasing employment, the following sums to be expended for the purposes specified:

(1) For the construction and improvement of national-forest highways, $5,000,000.

(2) For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, etc., including the same objects specified under the heading "Improvement of national forests" in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, approved February 23, 1931 (46 Stat. 1242), $3,000,000.

(3) For the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks and national monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior, $1,500,000.

(4) For construction and improvement of Indian reservation roads under the provisions of the act approved May 26, 1928 (45 Stat. 750; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 25, sec. 318a), $1,000,000.

(5) For the survey, construction, reconstruction, and maintenance of main roads through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations other than the forest reservations, under the provisions of the act approved June 24, 1930 (46 Stat. 805; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 23, sec. 3), $2,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 2, in line 20, after the word "roads," strike out "(other than the Federal-aid highway system)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think I have as consistent a record for economy in the casting of my votes in this House during this session as any man in it. We have heard a great deal of cry from the other side of the House to-day with reference to the drain upon the United States Treasury. I remember very well the other day when we had a matter here for an appropriation of $1,000,000 to Chicago the gentleman from Illinois who spoke over there this afternoon did not think then about conserving the interests of the Treasury.

When you had up your proposition here of voting for a moratorium of $252,000,000, which ought to-day to be in the Treasury of the United States, I cast my vote against that. I saw some of you over there who are almost shedding tears to-day about giving a little relief to the unemployed cast your ballots for a $2,000,000,000 proposition and vote $500,000,000 out of the United States Treasury at one time.

This is the only bill, so far as I recall now, that has been brought into this House that seeks to give any relief to the unemployed in the United States. It is said we have 8,000,000 of them. I imagine we have more than that. If this bill takes care of 1,000,000 or 1,000 it is a step in the right direction, and the measure ought to prevail.

When you put money into good roads or into internal improvements in the United States you are putting it where it will be multiplied many times, and it is money that is not going to be wasted.

Gentlemen talk about the cities not getting any benefit from road improvements. Why, bless your life, many of the people who work on the public highways under these contracts live in the cities and go out in trucks in the morning and come back at night. This will relieve conditions in your cities as well as in the country generally.

Mr. YON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes.

Mr. YON. Do not the contractors in a great many instances live in the cities, and they are benefited as well as the people that they employ?

Mr. GLOVER. This bill will benefit the merchant; it will benefit everybody that has anything to do with business. If you put money into the laboring man's hands he is going to spend it and put it in use. The trouble is now that it is concentrated in the hands of a few, and those that would spend it have not got it to spend. This will give them a little bit of money so they can take care of themselves and their families.

We heard a statement made by a Member on the other side to-day that he hoped this bill would meet with a presidential veto. I have more confidence in your President than you have. I believe he is a man of too much feeling for the laborers of this country to veto the first proposition that comes from this Congress to relieve the unemployed; but if he should do it, as one Member of this House I stand here ready to join with you in passing the measure over his veto.

Mr. ALMON. I think the gentleman has misquoted the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] did not say the President would veto the bill but said that he hoped the President would veto it if it were passed.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said that when a man in an argument has no facts to back him up he must either make fun of the other fellow and laugh or get angry. A few minutes ago when, in answer to a question, I gave the estimate of the number of men that would be employed this year on the roads by reason of the road appropriations there were many men over here who laughed.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Roads went into this matter very carefully, and they were as credulous in the beginning as these men who laughed. I make the statement now that last year there was an average of about 288,000 men employed upon road projects in this country, and in the actual breakdown of the road dollar appropriated it was conservatively shown that for every man employed on the project there were two other men employed in the furnishing of the material and in transporting it. It is conservative to say that nearly a million men will be put to work as a result of this appropriation.

Gentlemen, it is well enough to try to make fun and laugh, but this is a serious matter. This is the first bill that has been offered in Congress for the direct relief of the unemployed. I have gone with my party leaders in every single effort they have made to support the President of the United States in this emergency, and I expect to in the future, but I say that when a serious bill of this kind comes before the committee it is not fair to meet the arguments that are presented by the committee with laughter and derision. This does not get us anywhere.

Mr. Chairman, just one more word in conclusion. I say again—and the facts have not been disputed—that there is no appropriation made by the Federal Government where so large a percentage of the dollar goes to labor as that for the highways. Your committee went into that very carefully and presented this bill, with the honest belief that it is a bill for the relief of the unemployed. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, after the figures "$1,500,000," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "including national parks authorized to be established under the act of May 22, 1926 (U. S. C., title 16, sec. 403)."

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered in the interest of the Smoky Mountain Park, which would be excluded without it. The Great Smoky Mountain National Park was created by an act of Congress in 1926. The substantive act provided for the development of this great park when 425,000 acres had been acquired. There have been 397,000 acquired at a cost of between $8,000,000 and $10,000,000. The Federal Government has expended nothing except about $30,000 annually for the supervision of the park.

About 150,000 tourists visited the park last year and it is rapidly becoming one of our most popular national playgrounds. It is very important that some work be carried on in the way of roads and building trails. Of course, this amendment does not arbitrarily require any portion of the amount to be expended in the park. It merely brings the Great Smoky Mountain Park into the picture subject to the discretion of the Park Service.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I would not be fair to the committee if I did not state that this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee affects only the State of Tennessee and my own State of North Carolina. It would mean, if the amendment was adopted, that it would apply to an expenditure in a section of my own State.

But that park has not been officially taken over by the Government of the United States, and therefore, until that project has been actually taken over, and inasmuch as heretofore we have not appropriated for building of roads and trails in areas of that kind——

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think the gentleman must be mistaken when he says that this park has not been taken over by the Federal Government. The Federal Government has been paying for superintendence for a number of years, and 397,000 acres have been conveyed to the Government. Deeds for same have been delivered and accepted.

Mr. WARREN. I will modify my statement to this extent: I think they have accepted a portion of it only, but the entire acreage has not been accepted. They have not fixed the status of it as they have other national parks, and for that reason no appropriation has been available in the past. I think the amendment ought to be voted down, and I am asking you to vote down an amendment that does affect my own State.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There has developed here some opposition to this bill. It seems to align the cities against the rural districts. It is a question of area against population.

We have passed some relief bills in this House during the 10 weeks since the Democratic Party came into control, bills for the relief of our banks, our railroads, and agriculture, and to a degree, at least, the entire country will participate in the benefits of these measures.

I am advised that this bill comes before us with the unanimous vote of the Committee on Roads. It is purely a loan measure seeking to aid the States. We loaned our money to foreign nations; we are now loaning our money to private business; surely there must be some merit in a bill granting the same consideration to the States of the Union.

I come from a city, and the argument that the cities may give more and receive less and that the rural districts will receive more and give less does not appeal to me. If unemployment exists and human misery accompanies it in any place in America, if relief is required in Michigan or Georgia or any other State in the Union, then those people affected are Americans and entitled to my consideration and yours. Even though this may not meet with the approval of the President of the United States, the same leadership that inspired this bill should, in the interest of the men who come from the cities, bring out a building bill for the construction of public buildings, most of which would be located in the cities. The President of the United States, I believe, prevented the Federal Building Commission at the beginning of this session from sending to the Congress their regular annual authorization for the construction of public buildings, buildings vitally needed by the Government throughout the country. If this bill is passed, then we should bring out a bill for the construction of public buildings.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Was the gentleman one of those who went down to Mr. Roop's office to inquire about the expenditure of a sufficient amount of funds to carry on the building program?

Mr. MEAD. I went down to the Federal Building Commission time and again with my colleagues urging the construction of Federal buildings when they were needed, where the rentals paid by the Government are exorbitant. Such building would relieve unemployment. It could be justified by the saving in rentals. It could be done at less cost at a time like this. The construction of public buildings that would last for a hundred years would not be a bad business investment, particularly in this terrible crisis when men and women are virtually destitute all over America. The public-building program was stopped by the administration, and I hope the leadership of this House will bring out such a bill and give us a chance to vote upon it that will be fair to the Members supporting this measure who come from our cities.

Mr. ARENTZ. What Mr. Roop failed to do and would not do has since been done by the President of the United States.

Mr. MEAD. I can not yield further. The President of the United States some years ago sent the Governor of Maine to a conference down in Louisiana to inform the country of the benefits of public construction in times like this. He seemed to have a patent on the cure for unemployment then; for years he maintained it was good policy in a crisis such as this to build Federal buildings, Federal highways, river and harbor projects, and other necessary public works, but now we are informed he opposes the very plan he himself advocated then.

LABOR FOUND TO RECEIVE MOST OF HIGHWAY-PAVING FUNDS

In a recent statement issued by the Bureau of Public Roads we are advised that at least 85 per cent of the money expended for a concrete pavement is ultimately paid out in wages and salaries. Even if it is not quite that percentage, road building is one of the best means of relieving unemployment. Unless we carry on this program, thousands of workers who were employed last year will be added to the 8,000,000 unemployed workers of our country.

EMERGENCY FUND FOR ROAD BUILDING

The most significant item in the emergency Federal fund of last year was the $80,000,000 for road building. This amount was advanced to the States in order to enable them to meet the Federal-aid allotment which was increased from seventy-five to one hundred and twenty-five million dollars. Many of the States had practically exhausted their road funds in 1930 in an effort to meet the unemployment situation. Without the special emergency fund they would not have been able to secure any Federal aid last year.

INCREASE IN ROAD BUILDING

The total Federal expenditures for road building in 1931 were $259,897,000, an increase of $154,000,000 over 1930. The increased Federal expenditures, however, did not bring a proportionate increase in the total road-building program of the country. It brought an increase of only $34,000,000 which meant a drop of $120,000,000 in State and local expenditures for this purpose.

ROAD BUILDING AND UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Road building has been a most effective method of unemployment relief during the depression. The various State highway commissions have made a special effort to organize their programs to meet the needs of the unemployed. Among the States that have given special attention to unemployment relief in their highway programs are New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, New Jersey, Delaware, Oregon, and Nebraska. On August 15 the State of Pennsylvania added 20,000 miles of township roads to its highway system. Construction work was started immediately on 1,700 miles of roads in 66 counties of the State. Work was also begun this fall in the reconditioning of 5,000 miles of road taken over by the highway department. The department cooperates with the various local relief organizations in relieving the unemployed.

"In order to provide winter unemployment relief for approximately 30,000 workers," writes the State highway commissioner of Michigan, "this department is rapidly placing under construction a $10,000,000 road-construction program consisting mostly of grading drainage structures, grade separations, and bridges. A large number of projects are now being placed under construction. In order to insure that the work as specified shall be carried on this winter the department has estimated the amount of each contract that can be carried on during the winter and is requiring that the contractor shall have the percentages estimated completed on or before April 1, 1932. The department is including in the special provisions set up in the proposals that a definite amount of equipment be used, stipulating some work for hand labor. * * * In order to provide the maximum number of men with work the department requires that to the fullest extent possible all employees on State highway projects shall work part time either three days a week, or alternate weeks. In connection with the employment it is specified that the contractor shall employ not less than 75 per cent of all labor used on the work from lists of unemployed furnished by the State employment commission through its local committees and that a minimum wage of 35 cents an hour be paid. Projects are being placed as far as possible according to the urgency of the need for unemployment relief. * * *"

CHARACTERISTICS OF ROAD PROGRAMS

The road programs of Michigan are fairly typical of the programs that have been adopted by a number of States for the relief of unemployment. Certain general characteristics stand out in these programs:

First. An effort is made to spread the work over as large an area as possible.

Second. As far as practicable, projects are undertaken in places in which the need for unemployment relief is greatest.

Third. There is a very pronounced tendency to substitute hand labor for machinery. In two States this tendency has assumed an extreme form. It represents a sincere effort on the part of the public authorities to provide work for the largest number of men with the limited resources at their disposal.

Fourth. In State road programs there seems to be a general policy of staggering labor.

Fifth. When work is done by contractors the State highway commission specifies a minimum rate of wages for workers.

Sixth. The workers employed on the various projects are selected on the basis of need, usually on the recommendations of local social agencies.

Seventh. Under the emergency programs road building, which heretofore was regarded as a seasonal occupation, is continued on an all-year-round basis.

ROAD BUILDING AND EMPLOYMENT

The emergency Federal fund of last year was of very great assistance to the States in speeding up their road programs and in providing work for the unemployed. The total number of men employed in Federal and State road work increased from 148,600 in January, 1931, to 365,000 in June, 1931. For every person employed directly in road work at least two other persons are employed indirectly by industries applying and transporting road material. It is, therefore, perfectly safe to assume that a total of 1,095,000 were given employment directly or indirectly on Federal and State road projects last June.

POSSIBILITY OF MAINTAINING LAST YEAR'S PACE

The maintaining of last year's pace in road building throughout this next year is a matter of vital concern to all persons interested in unemployment relief. Nothing would aggravate the unemployment situation so much as a large falling off in road building, and yet this is the situation with which we are threatened. The Federal funds available for road building last year amounted to $259,000,000. The funds available for the next year will be approximately $175,000,000. There is, moreover, good reason for believing that the States will not be able to match a considerable part of the Federal-aid funds. There is approximately $75,000,000 of Federal road funds in the Treasury at present that the States are unable to match. Last year there was a decrease of $120,000,000 in local and State expenditures for road building. Everything points to a further decrease next year. Last year the State of Michigan had approximately $30,000,000 available for road building. For this present year $15,000,000 will be available. Ohio anticipates a decrease of 20 per cent in its State and local programs. A number of the Southern and Middle Western States anticipate a decided decrease in their road funds. One of the very important factors in the falling off of State and local road programs is the tendency to divert the gasoline tax to purposes other than road building.

FEDERAL BUILDING PROGRAM

While road building offers the most immediate hope for an accelerated Federal program of public work there are many other types of work to which the Federal Government is committed in which considerable acceleration is possible. In 1926 Congress inaugurated a large Federal building program. As finally approved the program included 1,085 buildings at places now without Federal buildings, 245 new buildings at places that now have buildings, 191 extensions to existing Federal buildings, 41 projects for marine hospital and quarantine-station accommodations and 62 miscellaneous projects. The program was to be completed in 1937 at an estimated cost of $620,000,000. This program has been carried out at an accelerated pace particularly during the past year. The total amount expended to December 31 was $189,994,324.72. With increased appropriations and authorizations the program could be accelerated at a more rapid rate during the next year. Of $620,000,000 Congress has authorized the expenditure of $486,089,300.09 and has appropriated $238,527,621.98. If Congress would appropriate the total amount authorized and would grant authorization for the buildings that have been approved, the program could be accelerated very materially in the next year.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to address myself to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR]. I feel some interest in this amendment, because it not only affects my district but it affects a great national enterprise. I am sorry that my colleague [Mr. WARREN] does not see this matter as we see it. It is a very simple proposition.

Under the act of May 22, 1926, the Government is authorized to take over and establish the great Smoky Mountains National Park. The lands to constitute that park were to be acquired by the States of North Carolina and Tennessee. Pursuant to the act of May 22, 1926, the State of North Carolina appropriated $2,000,000 from its treasury and the State of Tennessee appropriated an equal amount from its treasury for the purpose of acquiring the lands. This was not sufficient. The Rockefeller Foundation came to the aid of the two States and agreed to expend $5,000,000 to aid in this great national enterprise. Under this situation the States have acquired nearly 400,000 acres of the property, acquiring the great backbone of the Smoky Range as a national park. There are just a few condemnation proceedings yet undecided which are necessary to complete the 428,000 acres necessary to be taken over when the Federal Government would establish the park just as any other national park.

Mr. FULLER. Since this is a measure to grant relief for roads that are already in the Federal road system and there are no Federal roads or trails in this park——

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, yes; there are.

Mr. FULLER. But they are not in the system. How can the gentleman hope to get any benefit from the amendment?

Mr. WEAVER. One of the great roads into the park comes under this amendment.

Mr. FULLER. That is true. We have general authority under the terms of the bill, without specifying this particular park as the park named in the amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. But it says for the reconstruction and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges in the national parks, and so forth. All we ask you to do is to say that instead of confining it to national parks already established, it shall apply to those which are in process of establishment, and especially in this case where the Government owns in fee nearly 400,000 acres of land which has been turned over to it under deeds now of record in the several counties, and let them build these roads and trails. The National Park Service wants this. The Director of National Parks is now in full control of the property conveyed to the United States by North Carolina and Tennessee. A superintendent has been appointed and rangers are now in charge of the property. For administration purposes, the National Park Service now has complete supervision and control, but under the act of May 22, 1926, the process of development would have to await the acquisition of the full 428,000 acres.

Mr. LEAVITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEAVER. I yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. I agree with the gentleman. That is one of the finest parks in the entire system. It seems to me there is authority to do that already on the land that has been taken under jurisdiction by the Park Service. The bill reads: "The national parks or national monuments under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior," this work may be done. A very considerable portion of the Great Smokies are now under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. WEAVER. If we were sure that that was true, we would not have offered the amendment?

Mr. LEAVITT. If I am not correct, I am in favor of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. I have an amendment which I got from the Park Service. I at one time thought that this would take care of the situation, but I find the legal advisers of the Department say it will not, and for that reason the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] and myself have interested ourselves in this legislation.

Mr. LEAVITT. I shall vote for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. It does not add anything to the amount to be appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina..

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I rise to make a few remarks on the basis of the tables that have been handed out this afternoon. I was glad, indeed, to find only one man from a State which would be called upon to pay more than it would receive in benefit take the floor in support of this legislation.

I was in Canada recently and I watched them build scores of miles of dirt roads. There I found people living in communities which received real benefits from road construction, because the work was chiefly manual. But I can picture in my mind roads being built in some sparsely settled sections of our country, and the picture is entirely different. On the day the contractor arrives with his 5-ton trucks and all the rest of his machinery he brings with him from 15 to 25 men who drive the trucks and serve as mechanics. These few men—generally workmen from outside the locality—will do all the work involved in building that road, and the native population will watch it done and curse the machines which are doing it. I have seen that very thing happen. How much benefit, in the sense of unemployment relief, do you bring to such communities with that sort of contract work?

The title of this bill indicates that it is supposed to be an aid to employment. I fancy that is not it. Under a plea of unemployment you would primarily be getting a lot of good roads everywhere at the expense of a few States. As some of the speakers earlier this afternoon said, there is certainly a lot of bait in this bill. There might have been a great deal more bait in it if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan had been in order, because certainly such a proposition as this ought to be according to population so that each section would get its fair and proportionate share.

I repeat that, in spite of the argument by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] to the effect that in building the machinery and transporting it to other places you are increasing employment, this is negligible in comparison with the cost involved. You may increase the number which will be benefited a little more, but there is a vast difference between 25 per cent and 90 per cent. But in most localities to which you are trying to bring relief from unemployment the benefits would be almost negligible, under the present contract system, even with the amendment relating to paying the prevailing rate of wages. Contractors will bring their own help, and while they will pay the prevailing rate of wages, they will not hire labor locally in any material number. Machines, not men, will do most of the work, especially not the men of each different neighborhood where the roads are being built. You are very much mistaken if you think that this will not be the case. Surely you must know you are not bringing about something to help unemployment. You are taking advantage of the unemployment to get a lot of good roads at the expense of a few States which will have to bear the major burden of the cost, and which, in turn, will receive almost no benefit. This is illogical and unfair. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on this section.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If an amendment in the form of a new section is offered at this time, will it be subject to debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The private opinion of the present occupant of the chair is that it would not be subject to debate, but the parliamentarian believes otherwise, and the Chair will so rule. The Chair will rule that it is subject to debate if it is offered as a new section.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, then I offer an amendment, as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington, [Mr. SUMMERS] offers an amendment as a new section, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: On page 3, after line 20, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 2 (b) That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and to establish post roads, provide for the common defense and general welfare, there is hereby authorized to be allocated by Congress out of any money herein authorized to be appropriated to be expended in the improvement of rural post roads over which rural carriers travel in serving the rural routes in addition to those roads now or hereafter to be included in the Federally aided road system.

"The sums of money appropriated by Congress under authority of this act shall be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States among the several States in proportion to the total mileage of rural routes within the respective States and shall be available only when and upon condition that the several States, or subdivisions therein, or both, appropriate and make available an equal sum exclusively for the same purpose. The expenditure of all such sums of money shall be made by the highway departments of the several States or by the equivalent office or officer thereof, as provided in the Federal highway act of November 9, 1921, or such agencies as the said State departments may respectively direct.

"That section 6 of said Federal highway act is hereby amended, authorizing and creating a third class of highways to consider both those intracounty and intercounty highways over which passes the United States mail by rural mail carriers, first selecting and improving those roads which shall most usefully and conveniently contribute to rounding out and expanding the system of primary and secondary highways, and to continue enlarging and expanding until all rural mail routes shall be improved in the manner decided by the respective State highway departments"——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has not finished reading the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has proceeded far enough to show that it is clearly out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I hate to interrupt the reading of the amendment but it is so clearly subject to a point of order, on account of its nongermaneness, that I therefore must make the point of order.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order and permit just a few more lines to be read?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington desire to be heard on the point of order? If so, the Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration is to aid in the construction of highways—federally aided highways. Presumably we get that authority from certain provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and the amendment I have offered is founded on precisely those same provisions of the Constitution. My amendment specifically refers to post roads. The bill under consideration is somewhat mystical as to whether post roads or other roads are to be built.

They both call for cooperation by the States; they both serve the same purpose; they both trace back to the same provisions in the Constitution. No new provision is set out or contemplated by the amendment which I have offered. The money comes from the same source. It is spent under the direction of the same authorities—both Federal and State. It must be expended under those same authorities; it is to accomplish the same purpose; and, as far as I can see, is identical in purpose through and through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The bill before the committee is for a specific purpose, and is limited as follows:

No sums apportioned under this act shall be advanced except for work on the Federal-aid highway system performed before June 30, 1933.

The gentleman's amendment carries legislation of a general nature that is not germane to the purposes of the bill, and the Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act with the view of providing the maximum employment consistent with reasonable economy of construction.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. WARREN: On page 3, line 24, after the word "employment," insert the words "of local labor."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I desire to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill as to what he means by the words "of local labor." Would that include the State in which the work is to be done or only the community where the road is being built?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may state in answer to the gentleman's question that the intent of the committee in offering this amendment was that local labor in the community generally, and certainly in the State where the work was being done, would be used.

Mr. DYER. That is what I was afraid of. Those who come from the cities, to which none of this proposed appropriation is allocated, will not benefit. The people of the big cities will not benefit, because the work is to be done by local labor in the locality where the road is to be built.

In other words, it is class legislation and will not in any respect help the people of the whole State to which the money goes. None of it will go to the large cities and they will receive no benefit whatever from it. The Appropriations Committee of the House has brought in amendments to their appropriation bills to provide that certain employees of the Government shall have their pay reduced. That has been done already in bills that have passed the House and that are now pending. In every instance those people live in the large cities.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that appropriations for the construction of Government buildings, including court and post-office buildings, provide only for employment in the cities and in industrial cities generally?

Mr. DYER. No. That is not in the bills of which I have knowledge, that employment shall only be given to the people living in the particular city.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. But is it not true that, as a matter of fact, the employment is largely restricted to the places where those works are being constructed?

Mr. DYER. The contractors for public buildings in my city bring a vast amount of their equipment and a large number of employees from other cities. I think it most unjust, Mr. Chairman, to legislate in this way. I think it is unjust to take money away from the people of the big cities and transfer it to the building of roads in States where the people of the cities, who pay a large part of the taxes, receive no benefits therefrom.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that under this legislation ultimately 50 per cent of the cost is paid by the local communities?

Mr. DYER. If that were true, it would be a different proposition, but under this bill there is evidently no intention of having the States pay back any of this money.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true of this bill, as it was of a similar bill passed by this House in 1930, that every dollar that may be advanced to any State must be repaid out of the funds accruing to that State in the future? So each State does make a local contribution after all, does it not?

Mr. DYER. My State will pay its part, of course, but it receives no benefit from this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the prior act to which the gentleman refers the money will be apportioned for repayment to the National Government up to 1938, but under this bill it is proposed to have this money apportioned from 1938 to 1948. However, the States will first have to appropriate, and if they do not appropriate the National Government alone will bear the expense which is supposed to be borne by the local communities. So if the States do not make the appropriations from 1938 to 1948—and they are not likely to do so—then the National Government is building the roads itself.

Mr. DYER. That is quite true, Mr. Chairman, and shows the great injustice of this legislation which is brought here on the pretense that it is going to provide work for a number of people. It will benefit very few, and the Democratic Party, which has been here urging economy and reducing the pay of Government employees in the appropriation bills, comes in here now with this large bill to eventually saddle almost all of this amount on the taxpayers of the entire country, including the people whom I have the honor in part to represent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMASON: Page 3, line 25, after the word "construction," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

"And provided, That none shall be employed except citizens of the United States."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee has just adopted as its amendment the committee amendment with respect to local labor and that the amendment that is now proposed seeks to modify and change the amendment just adopted. The appropriate time for the amendment to have been proposed was before the committee amendment was agreed to, because it is an amendment to that amendment, involving the principle of local labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The question raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is one of consistency, on which the Chair does not pass.

The point of order is overruled, and the gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has stated that the committee accepts the amendment, and for that reason I do not desire recognition.

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. STAFFORD, there were—ayes 142, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana, Mr. LAGUARDIA, and Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri rose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. There was an amendment offered to section 2, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] said he would accept it as an amendment to section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] in a moment. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOGG], who has not spoken on the bill.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOGG of Indiana: Page 3, line 25, following the amendment just adopted, add as follows:

"That all contracts entered into before June 30, 1933, and providing for the payment of any funds authorized or appropriated by this act, shall contain a provision that in the making of any execavation and in the construction of any grade or fill the material removed from such excavation or placed in any grade or fill shall not be loaded at such excavation, grade, or fill into trucks, lifts, or conveyors by means of power-driven machinery, except in the case of stone, heavy individual objects, and material beneath the water surface."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane, and that it is contradictory of the method of doing the work as provided in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOGG] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit, I wish to reenforce the argument that I made a moment ago, because it is applicable to the amendment that is pending.

The committee adopted an amendment that relates to the way the money shall be used, namely, by means of local labor. It was possible, under the rules of the House, at any time prior to the adoption of that amendment, to offer any germane amendment; but when the committee adopted the amendment it foreclosed itself, then and there, from proposing any amendment that was germane or related to the subject of local labor. The amendment now proposed is one relating to the labor that will be employed in the utilization of these appropriations. I claim the amendment comes too late. The time for the amendment was before the committee had adopted an amendment determining the policy with respect to employment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOGG] desires to be heard, the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. HOGG of Indiana. If the Chair please, the section provides for labor of a local nature, and this simply provides for one of the ways in which it can be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The question raised now is different from that raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin, which merely raised the question of consistency. This is an amendment to an amendment that has already been adopted by the House, and clearly is subject to the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 25, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "and such regulations shall provide for the predetermination of the prevailing wage scale provided for in section 1 hereof, and the inclusion of the same in the specifications and contracts."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is the identical question the Chair has passed upon, and the identical amendment proposed to section 1 of this bill; that it seeks to change the method of doing this public work to relieve unemployment.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The point of order made before was that it was an amendment to an amendment already adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. On February 24, 1921, when the gentleman from New Jersey was in the chair, this same question was raised, and he ruled as follows:

The amendment offered by the gentleman is an amendment to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio and should have been offered before the original amendment was passed upon.

That being on all fours with the recent ruling of the Chair, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I wish to say to the Chair that I was on my feet when the gentleman from Texas offered his amendment. I was a member of the committee, but the Chair recognized the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] when I was entitled to priority.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the ruling is based on the fact that there was a committee amendment adopted by the House, which would be equally applicable to the point of order.

Mr. RAMSPECK. My amendment had no relation to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It was the privilege of the gentleman from Georgia, if he so desired, to offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment, under the agreement with the gentleman from North Carolina, be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 25, after the word "construction," strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That none of the money herein authorized to be appropriated shall be paid to any State on account of any project on which convict labor shall be employed."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, the committee accepts that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Page 3, line 24, after the word "labor," insert a comma and add the following: "the minimum use of machinery and the use of equipment and material of domestic manufacture and production."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that for the same reason. This involves a matter of labor and that matter has been passed on. It is an amendment to an amendment and comes too late.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill, according to the title, is "To authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment." The purpose of section 3 is to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of the act, with a view of providing a maximum employment of local labor. My amendment seeks to take out of this picture the steam shovel and the concrete mixer and require contractors to use domestic material. What more can be done to provide employment for those who are looking for work than to get rid of machinery and require those who are constructing the roads to use material manufactured in the United States and not in Belgium and other countries? In December Belgian cement was purchased by a contractor to make a road in the Canal Zone, 10,000 barrels. They use Belgian cement in States along our coast, and I want to prevent the use of Government money for this purpose. No point of order should be made against an amendment that will give Americans work in preference to men in foreign countries. Let us take care of the American unemployed, and let the foreign countries take care of their own. We have done enough for them. Do you ever see them helping us?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair can not pass on the merits of the proposition. He has already cited the precedent established by the ruling of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] on a question on all fours with this, which held that the gentleman's amendment should have been offered at the time the committee amendment was under consideration. As it is an amendment to an amendment that has been adopted, it is not in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. We are considering a bill here to help the unemployed. The committee amendment assists those who live in the vicinity of the job, but I seek to go further than the committee and give more work by prohibiting the use of machinery in the construction of roads known as Federal-aid highways. First, by my amendment I attempted to prevent the use of machinery on Federal-aid roads. If you really want to help the unemployed, place my amendment in the bill, and you will be doing something worth while. Next, I attempted to prevent the use of Belgian cement, as this country has the best cement in the world, and because Belgian cement is manufactured by cheap labor and can be bought more cheaply in the United States than domestic cement. As I said a few moments ago, the States along the Atlantic coast and other States have been using Belgian cement, and in December 10,000 barrels of Belgian cement were purchased by a contractor to be used on the roads in the Canal Zone. You say you are passing legislation here to help the unemployed, still you seem willing to let the men stand around the job and watch the steam shovel and the concrete mixer doing this work and human beings wondering whether they are going to get money to buy something for their starving children and pay rent. I am surprised that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] objects to an amendment of that character. If you really want to help the unemployed, you will do it by putting the machinery out, and if you do not put the machinery out it will not be long before the unemployed will do it for you. Honest men, able and willing to work, are entitled to work, and the time is not far distant when they will see that they will get it. They are not going to let their families want for necessities of life.

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Always to my friend from California—to be more direct, from San Francisco—a city that recently provided that there would be no steam shovel or concrete mixer on some public work. I know the working man has no better friend in Congress than Mr. WELCH.

Mr. WELCH of California. If the gentleman's amendment prevailed, as I was in hopes it would, it would give work to idle men instead of idle steam shovels and concrete mixers.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Absolutely. As the gentleman recently told me, one steam shovel will do the work of fifty or a hundred men, depending upon its size. Steam shovels do not need food, clothes, nor shelter, but the unemployed do, and some way must be found to give it to them.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. On all matters of this kind it is primarily for the States to determine. I answer the gentleman by saying that my opposition to his amendment is based upon the ground that I think the States that contribute 50 per cent of this fund ought to have the final voice as to how the money will be disbursed.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Does the gentleman from Mississippi approve of the act of contractors in the State of Arkansas that paid their labor on roads last year 75 cents?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not. Section 3 of the bill provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide for a maximum of local labor and the elimination of as much machinery as possible.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Not for the elimination of machinery. That is what I wanted to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, under unanimous consent to speak for two minutes I can say very little concerning H. R. 9642, being a bill making further appropriations for highway construction.

This is another time when we are called upon to vote upon a measure involving many millions of dollars without having been given sufficient time to consider the subject. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the bill was reported from the committee day before yesterday. Indeed, the hearings before the committee, and I think this is true of the report also, were not available until about noon to-day. We have not been given opportunity to consult the highway officers or the highway commissions in our several States. We know not how we will be affected by the bill. Take Iowa, for example. The road program for 1932 has already been made up, or practically so. Can this program under existing conditions be modified or changed. I can not say. I have had no opportunity to find out. I do believe, however, that even were we so minded we could not get much help this year from the appropriations involved. And the bill by its own limitations prevents a Northern State like Iowa from performing much work next year, because the time limit for the work terminates in June, 1933; and we will have only something like two and a half months of available workable time next year within which to do the work contemplated by the esteemed author of this bill, who hails from the sun-kissed slopes of Alabama, where work can be commenced very early in each year and can be prosecuted thereafter practically the whole time.

Furthermore, I call the attention of the House to the fact that the ranking minority member of the Committee on Roads is sick and not able to be here to-day. I understand also that he was not able to be present in the committee during the consideration of the measure.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to assure the gentleman that the ranking minority member did appear at the hearing on this bill.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I accept the statement of the gentleman. I was advised by one Member that he was not present. In any event the gentleman is not here. He is my colleague from Iowa. We want and should have time to consult him. We have not been able to do so, and before Members are called upon to vote for the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars I think it would be fair to give them sufficient time to consider the proposition. For one, I am growing rather tired of being compelled to vote upon measures without having had time to look into them. I say this in all kindness to the committee. Why not allow us opportunity to consult our constituents and public officers who have charge of these matters at home? Why not allow us a chance to take the advice of the minority ranking committeeman, who might have something to say about the measure, and who could at all events give us some information about the conditions existing in our home States?

I do not oppose good roads. It is clearly within the jurisdiction of Congress to establish post roads, and appropriations therefor are not opposed by those of us who are against the present bill. But we have heretofore taken care of this matter by liberal appropriations voted by the House. The usual program respecting these things is fully provided for. The Federal appropriations for road building in 1931 were increased many millions of dollars over those of 1930, and the Federal Government has been very generous in regard to this subject. The deficiency appropriation bill already passed by the House gave liberal Federal aid to public roads and millions of dollars were allocated to that purpose by that bill. The appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture gave many millions more for the same purpose. We have done, and we will yet do, our full duty in aiding Federal highways and the primary systems of the States. There is no emergency on that subject. The regular program is sufficient.

But, Mr. Chairman, this bill is just another raid on the United States Treasury. I am under no illusions as to the 50-50 proposition contained herein. I know that any dollar which is raised by taxes in Iowa, and is then rolled down here to this great Capital at Washington into the hands of bureaucratic commissions and afterwards rolled back for expenditures out there, will suffer great and grievous attrition. I know, also, that the Federal dollars which the States are to get by virtue of the bill will not drop down like manna from the heavens above but, on the contrary, they will be wrung by tax-gatherers from impoverished men and women now crying for relief. I also know that the State dollars with which to match them will come in great part from the sweat and toil of those who perform the labor and who own the farms and the homes throughout our land.

All along during this session we have been reminded of the condition of the Public Treasury. It is in the red more than $2,000,000,000, and the figures are staggering. The Ways and Means Committee is now at work with inventive skill devising new, additional, and ingenious methods for taxing a distressed people in order that the Budget may be balanced. And this bill is but another raid. If we must spend the people's money, let us not spend it like drunken sailors upon shore leave. If we are to change the program and the precedents, and if we are to establish new procedures and make new allocations, then I call your attention to the fact that there is imperative need for something to be done to provide and keep in repair the postal routes of our rural mail carriers, as well as, and in addition to, the hundreds of thousands of miles of farm-to-market highways, so that we may furnish employment and help to revive business and make it possible for country folks to enjoy a little of the privileges which good highways bring.

There is only one way to retrench and that is to quit voting for new and additional appropriations. There is only one way to amend the situation and that is to lop off subsidies. There is only one way to economize and that is to quit spending money. There is only one way to reduce taxes and that is to reduce taxation. There is to-day in this country an awful and tragic need for retrenchment, because economic disaster stalks the land like a pestilence at noonday. There is no imperative need for establishing a new policy regarding Federal highways, however grateful these might be in the sunny times of prosperity. The bill brings no relief to the ruined farms of this country but rather sends the tax gatherer out to levy further tribute upon them and to put additional imposts against them. The way to reform is to reform. The structure of the bill is such that the States themselves must raise like sums of money. This means taxation. This means bonds and more tax-free bonds so that children in swaddling clothes and even generations yet unborn will be compelled to underwrite and pay for the folly and asininity of their fathers. Oh, we can be mighty fearless in visiting our sins upon those who shall come after us.

Since I came here I have heard much about the great god, Demos; about the rights of the people of the States; about Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson and other men who have stood in the path of monarchy and autocracy and bureaucracy to defend the people and the rights of the people of each State. But here is a bill which will bribe the legislature of every State against their own right of self-determination. It stultifies their conscience. This money is like the 30 pieces of silver that bought Judas and if any State does not take the money, then it will be penalized in favor of the States which do stultify themselves. If, on the other hand, any State accepts the money, then it will be expected to spend dollar for dollar like sums of money upon like Federal highways.

The sums now to be advanced by Uncle Sam are to be reimbursed to him over a period of 10 years, commencing with 1938, by the making of deductions from regular apportionments which the State might otherwise obtain in the future. The scheme is nicely tied up until 1948. Who knows whether the next Congress or whether the Seventy-fourth Congress will continue the Federal highway appropriations upon a 50-50 basis? What right have we to tie the hands of the Seventy-ninth Congress or any other Congress? What right have we to impose our will upon the legislatures of the several States for the ensuing two decades? Let every Congressman when he comes to vote look to his commission and to his oath and inquire whether the authority exists, and from whence it emanates, that gives him leave to do this thing! Who can guarantee that any State after drawing this bribe will 10 or 15 years hereafter carry out the nefarious arrangement by paying its allotments? When gentlemen talk about democracy, let them not act as autocrats, and let them not dictate the policies of future Congresses and of future legislatures throughout the country.

I may well agree that this is an emergency measure, but the emergency is one in the future, because it establishes new precedents and creates new imposts and levies additional tribute upon a tax-suffering people, and it fixes such tribute upon them for a period of almost two decades yet to come.

Let us temper our present greed with a wholesome fear for future consequences. Let us no longer create in State and local agencies a spirit of parasitic dependence on the National Government. This will necessarily lead to wastefulness in local administration. Let us not discount the future. Let us not mortgage posterity. Let us not be prodigal, for if we do the time is surely coming when we will eat husks.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a committee amendment which should be read at this time. The Clerk will read the committee amendment.

The Clerk read the committee amendment as follows:

SEC. 4. The last paragraph of section 6 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921 (42 Stat. 212; U. S. C., title 23, sec. 6), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Whenever provision has been made by any State for the completion and maintenance of 90 per cent of its system of primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty highways equal to 7 per cent of the total mileage of such State, as required by this act, said State, through its State highway department, by and with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized to increase the mileage of the primary or interstate and secondary or intercounty systems by additional mileage equal to not more than 1 per cent of said total mileage of such State, and thereafter to make like increases in the mileage of said systems whenever provision has been made for the completion and maintenance of 90 per cent of the mileage of said systems previously authorized in accordance herewith."

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] desire to offer an amendment as a new section following section 3 before the committee amendment was adopted?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; I did, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will then report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK: Page 3, line 25, after section 3, insert a new paragraph:

"3 (a) The prevailing scale of wages provided for in section 1 hereof shall be predetermined and included as a part of the specifications upon which each contract is awarded, and shall be a part of the contract."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The same point of order that was made to this amendment when it was previously offered to section 1 of the bill, namely, that this bill contemplates the expenditure of these funds under the Federal highway act, and the method proposed is an entirely different and inconsistent method of expending these funds. It is not germane and it is thoroughly inconsistent.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon the point of order.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] made a part of section 1 of this bill the principles of the Bacon-Davis Act. The amendment which I have proposed simply means that in applying the Bacon-Davis Act, or applying the prevailing wage scale to these contracts, it shall be determined in advance of the letting of the contract and made a part of the contract. It does not change the method which is prescribed by the bill of having paid the prevailing wage scale, but it will simply enable a contractor who bids on the work to know exactly what he is going to have to pay for wages when he makes his bid and not put him in the position of making a bid and then having the Government officials come around and say "You have to pay higher wages than you thought you had to pay."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. This, Mr. Chairman, is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment would have been germane to section 1, because it applies to section 1. The amendment is not germane to the bill at this point, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLGOOD: Page 3, line 24, after the word "labor," strike out the period, insert a comma and the following words: "and the use of farmers' teams and the use of local materials."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this amendment, that it is not germane and it comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment comes too late. It should have been offered to section 3 before section 4 was adopted. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Page 3, after the last amendment adopted to section 3, strike out the period, add a colon and the following: "Provided, There is hereby authorized to be allocated funds out of any money by Congress herein authorized to be appropriated, to be expended in the improvement of rural post roads over which rural carriers travel in serving the rural routes in addition to those roads now or hereafter to be included in the federally aided road system."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, all I am trying to accomplish is to get some farm-to-market post roads that will employ the maximum of labor. I have left out all legislation in this amendment. I am not able to see why it should be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that section 4 having been adopted by the committee the gentleman's amendment is not germane. It comes too late.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the Chair will permit, I repeatedly endeavored to get recognition at the end of section 3. So far as I was able to determine they began the reading of amendments to section 4 before it had been reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington had the privilege of offering his amendment at any time as a perfecting amendment. It is incumbent upon the Chair to recognize members of the committee in preference to other Members.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I know that, but I did not know we had passed section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer the amendment at the end of the bill. It calls for no additional money and it is only for the purpose of getting rural farm-to-market roads. That is all I have been striving for during the afternoon. I have in mind the construction of some $2,000 or $3,000 mile roads as well as $30,000 or $40,000 mile roads.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers his amendment as a new section at the end of the bill. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington as a new section.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, this is exactly the same amendment which has just been offered and I make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, There is hereby authorized to be allocated funds out of any money by Congress herein authorized to be appropriated to be expended in the improvement of rural post roads over which rural carriers travel in serving the rural routes in addition to those roads now or hereafter to be included in the federally aided road system.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order. If the amendment is germane at all it should have been offered to section 2.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill to-day be allowed to revise and extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I do not intend to object to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina, but I would like recognition to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana desires the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina as to a correction in the bill.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, line 9, are found these words:

No sums apportioned under this act shall be advanced except for work—

And so on. In my judgment the word "act" at the beginning of line 10 should be "section," because in section 2 there are five other purposes, including the construction and improvement of national-forest highways; construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, and so forth, in the national forests; the construction and improvement of roads and trails within national parks; the construction and improvement of Indian-reservation roads, and the survey, construction, and maintenance of main roads through unappropriated or reserved public land. So if we leave the language as it is in section 1 there might be come conflict between the language of the first section and of the second section.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman, it does occur to me that the word "act" is properly used. It only refers to the apportionments made to the several States out of this emergency fund, and has no reference to the section to which the gentleman refers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the parliamentary inquiry has been answered. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee automatically rises.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLANTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers a motion to recommit. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am, Mr. Speaker, in its present form.

The SPEAKER. Is any member of the committee opposed to the bill? If not, the Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Roads with instruction to that committee to report the bill back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: On page 3, line 24, after the word "labor," insert a comma and add the following: "the minimum use of machinery and the use of equipment and material of domestic manufacture and production."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House has just adopted a committee amendment found on page 3, line 24, which provides as to local labor being the character of labor that should be employed in the use of these funds. The House having adopted that amendment, it is now too late to offer any germane amendment such as proposed in the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 109, answered "present" 5, not voting 112, as follows:

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. COLLIER, is absent on account of illness. He desires me to state that if he were present he would vote "aye."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. ROGERS, is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE "LAME-DUCK" AMENDMENT

Mr. JEFFERS. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 14, proposing an amendment to the Constitution for printing under the rule.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—EMERGENCY HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members of the House have five legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised at the opposition that has developed to this bill to create an emergency fund of $120,000,000 to construct highways throughout the length and breadth of the land, with some twelve millions additional for road construction in our public parks and Indian reservations.

I can not say that I am especially surprised at the strenuous opposition of the distinguished Republican leader from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], who for several years served as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. We know he has consistently opposed many other worthy appropriations because, I assume, of the depleted Federal Treasury. But I must confess that I am somewhat surprised at the vociferous opposition of the distinguished gentleman from Chicago [Mr. CHINDBLOM], who is not particularly known as such a consistent advocate of economy. In fact, it has only been a few days ago that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois stood on this floor and begged Congress to appropriate $1,750,000 to finance a show that his friends and constituents are sponsoring in the great city of Chicago—a show that he, several months ago, induced Congress to recognize as the world's fair. As I recall, we were assured by the same gentleman that Congress would not be called upon to make an appropriation for his fair; but the camel got its neck under a tent and Congress has been called upon to pay a lion's share of the bill. Only a few days ago the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, who now pleads with tears in his eyes for economy, was begging Congress to appropriate some million and three-quarters and actually induced this House to give his fair $1,000,000. Now, the gentleman from the great city, along with other distinguished leaders from some of the other city districts, is vigorously opposing this bill for highway construction that means so much toward the relief of the unemployed throughout the entire country. I do not understand that brand of economy.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] spent considerable time discussing everything but the pending bill. The fact is, he gave us a political lecture criticizing the Democrats and forgot to state whether he was for or against this measure, but I assume that he is opposed to it because it happens to come from a committee the majority of which are Democrats and is being supported by almost the entire Democratic membership of this House. The gentleman from Nebraska, as I recall, joined the gentleman from Illinois and other Republican leaders in supporting legislation that was nothing more nor less than a dole to big business and then to-day gives Members of the House a free lecture on economy.

Frankly, I am at a loss to understand how our Republican friends, who so enthusiastically supported the so-called Reconstruction Finance Corporation to underwrite big business, big banks, and the railroads, have the temerity to oppose this bill that is not a drop in the bucket as compared with the two-billion Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill. I am amazed that gentlemen who worked and spoke so earnestly for a bill granting a moratorium of $250,000,000 interest on foreign war debts, a bill that will mean the final cancellation of $11,000,000,000 due America by foreign governments, could with good conscience oppose this bill to bring some measure of relief to the unemployed people of our own country who are in such great distress at this time.

There appear to be two general but conflicting ideas in Congress as to the proper method of relieving the economic situation, the returning of prosperity, and especially in relieving the millions of destitute and unemployed. One idea is the dole, the other is to inaugurate a real public-building and road program to permit our people to actually earn a respectable living. I do not hesitate to say that I much prefer the latter method. Give our people work and we will hear no real demand for a dole to feed the hungry. But our citizens demand and have a right to insist on an opportunity to earn a livelihood. The situation is serious, and Congress can not afford to ignore the pleas of the seven or eight millions of unemployed representing some twenty to thirty millions of people who must be fed and clothed.

Mr. Speaker, let me say in conclusion I agree that this Congress must economize. It must combine overlapping departments, slash appropriations, eliminate a lot of high-powered commissions, and cut salaries that may be unreasonably high. But I insist that is an idle gesture, inconsistent and false economy for gentlemen to oppose the pending measure that will not only put idle and destitute men to work but will prove a lasting benefit to every section of the country, and yet at the same time show such a magnanimous spirit to ungrateful foreign governments and give a straight-out dole to make good worthless and questionable bonds of international bankers.

The pending road bill should by all means be passed to-day.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the pending bill proposes to loan to the States from the Federal Treasury the sum of $120,000,000 for highway purposes. I am opposed to the proposition. Not one word has been uttered that, in my judgment, justifies such action.

The people of our country are struggling under enormous tax burdens. We should reduce and not increase them.

Last June 30 the expenses of the Government for the year were $903,000,000 more than the revenues. By the end of the present fiscal year they will be $2,100,000,000 more than the income for the current year.

Gentlemen seem to forget that moneys expended mean that taxes must be paid. Whether the money is expended from the Federal Treasury or the State, it makes no difference. Taxes to meet expenditures must be paid by every farmer, by every business man, by every citizen.

This bill proposes a loan to the States of $120,000,000. For what purpose? For road building and for the States to use in matching other Government money that the United States is appropriating for cooperative road work with the States.

To the extent that State authorities accept this money, to that extent they add the equivalent of a bond issue upon the people of the States in whatever amount they borrow.

In probably all State constitutions definite provisions may be found limiting the borrowing of money and the floating of bonds.

Bond limits are usually fixed. Yet here you are proposing a plan by which a few officers of a State acting alone may assume for their State a definite liability, a definite indebtedness that must be met some time by the people of the State in taxes. Legislatures are not required to act. Electors and voters are not consulted. Constitutional limitations are brushed aside and burdens are saddled upon the States.

Gentlemen, we are already carrying forward road programs that are tremendously burdensome. Most road building has been voted in some manner by those who will be called upon to pay. But here you are departing from the policy of local control or determination and you are proposing a new method of creating indebtedness that will come back to plague you in the years to come.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this emergency measure to vote $120,000,000 for immediate application to construction of highways in the United States.

It is estimated 85 per cent of the money finds its way directly or indirectly to labor; that about 1,000,000 of our 8,000,000 unemployed will be put to work thereby.

I like especially two features—one that the spending of the fund for employment will not be delayed, so it may be used for the need of Americans out of work at a time when they need it most, during the coming months.

Another feature is that this appropriation is treated as a sort of a loan, an advancement on money already planned to be appropriated to the States in the next 10 years, only in this instance this appropriation will not have to be matched by an equal appropriation from each State.

In a way, we are not going into a new debt to help unemployment. We are merely advancing money to be expended in the years 1932 and 1933, which has already been allocated to be appropriated several years later for Federal road building.

We will pay a greater tax now in this attempt to relieve unemployment. But it is a tax in any event planned to be incurred at a later date. That is, we are merely setting the calendar ahead, and will charge this fund off against the future appropriations as planned. American labor does not need or want a dole.

I do not see this as in any sense a dole. I call it a loan, to be paid back and in line with the loan whereby millions are advanced by Uncle Sam for our Reconstruction Finance Corporation to save our banks, secured and to be paid back into the United States Treasury some future day.

This is the first near direct aid act for the unemployed. In proportion to the number out of work and their needs in the next few months while the worst of this depression is on us, the amount of money appropriated is relatively small.

So many of our people can not understand how we can vote huge sums for direct aid to our financial institutions and no direct aid to the everyday citizen and his family out of work.

The passage of this measure will be at least a partial answer. I can see the urgent need of both; of aid to both the financial institutions, already aided and on their feet, and labor yet to be helped. I voted for and talked in support of our two bank-aid loans. There is equal reason I should take as vigorous and as active a stand for this legislation.

I am strongly for this bill. I trust the Senate and President will see it through to an early passage so some of our unemployed will be relieved without delay and the rest heartened in the thought that we have their interest at heart, and, if need be, will go much further to aid them along similar lines.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is for the construction of Federal highways in 48 States. It appropriates $120,000,000 for that purpose to be matched by a like amount by the several States. Whether highway aid by the Federal Government is wise or unwise, it is too late now to object on that ground when we know that thousands of miles of permanent highways in this country have been made possible only by Federal aid. In other words, the wealthier States have provided for general highway construction in all States, a result that could not have been reached in a score of years if left to the States alone to build. The bill allots a specific amount to each State based on the method employed so that Wisconsin receives $2,992,438 from the Federal Government, or practically $3,000,000. All States will eventually make full State contribution, by deductions from future Federal authorizations.

UNANIMOUS REPORT FOR A 90 PER CENT LABOR PROPOSAL

A unanimous report of a committee composed of 21 members, including 9 Republicans, accompanies the bill urged at this time of unemployment in order to help furnish jobs to men in need. No public works employs money for labor alone, but the Bureau of Public Works, Department of Agriculture, has made a survey and reports "at least 85 per cent and possibly more than 90 per cent of the money expended for a concrete pavement is ultimately paid out as wages and salaries." Briefly, it apportions paid labor at "15 per cent directly employed on construction"; about 12 per cent to men in quarries, sand pits, mills, and factories; about 14 per cent to men with railroads and for transportation; and the balance to men in mines, steel mills, and elsewhere producing road machinery.

Opposition to this measure is suggested because of an "unbalanced National Budget." Refunding on payment of the national debt in half of the proposed time would be unrelated to the annual Budget. Any project to meet the present abnormal business depression caused by world-wide conditions should be met by issuing Government credits for definite terms. That method is employed by individuals and by foreign moratoriums to aid other governments. Why not aid our own when a succeeding generation should properly help pay for war and other unusual public obligations?

WE HAVE HERETOFORE APPROPRIATED FOR AGRICULTURE AND BUSINESS

During this session Congress has appropriated, in round numbers, $200,000,000 for loans to agriculture through Federal farm loan and other organizations. Also $500,000,000 for banks, factories, and other businesses, where loans are to be secured by credits now rated as "frozen assets." A bank often represents thousands of depositors, who suffer if a solvent bank is closed because unable to raise cash to meet all demands. If a bank functions properly it is the local clearing house for business activities.

These and other measures Congress has passed to meet a present world-wide depression and prevent conditions from becoming worse in this country, with a confident belief they will help turn the tide. All were passed practically unanimously. Why not give unemployment aid to the States by this proposed loan? The total amount would barely build three battleships, soon to be obsolete and used for targets.

Our American Government is sound financially, but in this world depression we find an age of machinery and overproduction compared with consumption which now calls for credits. That has been covered by other bills passed this session in order to inspire public confidence and aid business, which employs labor, so that labor in turn can buy food and other products. Any advance of funds for road building is not a gift but made under existing law so that Federal aid will furnish road building and help every industry contributing toward that end.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY FOR WELFARE OF CITIZENS

Apart from secured loans, whether for seed, grain, agricultural loans, or to save more banks from closing, I believe the Federal and State Governments have a direct responsibility for the welfare of citizens and all others who are suffering from want of food and clothing.

With its invitation to individual initiative and offer of opportunity ours is the nearest approach to popular government of any in the world, but with changing conditions which limit opportunities we may well study conditions that permit individuals to accumulate a billion dollars, or many millions in numerous cases, while men and women looking for work are dependent on private charity.

If charity gave proportionately to ability, such relief might be defended; but selfishness and greed that accumulates fabulous wealth is not inclined to give proportionately or liberally to charity. Its training is all to the contrary. Our country in 1921 gave $20,000,000 in foodstuffs to starving Russia. My committee then recommended the gift to the House, and in 1923 I traveled 600 miles down the Volga River famine district, hearing expressions of heartfelt gratitude from lips of those who were helped by the American Relief Association.

GENEROUS GIVING FOR OTHER PURPOSES

We give hundreds of millions of dollars in direct Government flood protection to people who insist on remaining in flood districts. In countless other ways Congress gives to drought areas, to unproductive waterway improvements, and to other sections specific relief.

No one will seek to discredit charities afforded in national emergencies that have come from the Red Cross, Near East relief, American relief, and other associations, but Congress also has extended a helping hand to Russian famine districts, to Austria, and China, and to hungry people in countries of warring Europe indiscriminately. Its aid and benevolences, more than its soldiers and sailors, have left for us lasting gratitude on the part of Europe and Asia. America has responded nobly to every cry for help from the distressed of every land, including our own.

As a joint partner in this humanitarian work, supplying an emergency Federal, State, and local aid supplementing temporary charity, I have offered a bill that amplifies benevolences by furnishing in great emergencies constructive labor with just compensation for a jobless army.

PROVISIONS OF BILL BRIEFLY SUGGESTED

My bill (H. R. 4552) for meeting emergency unemployment situations provides for a permanent Federal commission of three Cabinet officers, acting ex officio with a skeleton organization, excepting in cases of emergency, when the Federal Government is requested to aid local unemployment.

It provides, whenever petition is received from any State for contribution to meet emergency local unemployment, with notice that the State has made like provision for an unemployment agency, that the Federal commission will consider applications from any municipal corporation in that State for contribution toward the construction of specified local municipal improvements. The Federal commission may, after investigation, contribute not to exceed 20 per cent of the cost of the local improvement, to be matched by 20 per cent contributed by the State government, and the balance of 60 per cent is to be borne by the municipality for which the improvement is to be constructed.

Provisions for safeguarding the money so contributed by the commission, character of the local improvement to be approved, control and manner of payment of money, and other requirements are briefly set forth in the bill.

The Federal Government by contributing $100,000,000 in any great unemployment emergency would thus employ five times that amount in the construction of municipal improvements; the State, through its cooperation and equal contribution, would assume supervision of construction and thus avoid what might be undue demands by any one locality.

Restriction in the amount paid by the Federal Government of $1,000,000 to any municipality and of $5,000,000 in any one State from the $100,000,000 appropriation would thus provide five times the Federal contribution and safeguard any attempt to absorb the appropriation by one or more States. This aid would be in force only during the declared emergency by the commission. Not to exceed $25,000 shall be expended annually for commission investigations, excepting during the period of a declared emergency. These provisions are tentatively offered subject to amendment.

The bill answers the proposition that a man or woman asking for work should not be compelled to depend on public charity or beg for aid when out of a job. Wives, children, and other dependents must beg for that aid to-day, and humiliation in so doing is not understood by those blessed with a job or competence. Work helps an applicant maintain self-respect that is lost when forced to beg for aid.

Workmen's insurance, unemployment insurance, and other aid is all preferable to begging for charity, but I submit these do not meet the requirements of those asking for work instead of charity.

THE ENGLISH DOLE AND EMERGENCY AID DISTINGUISHED

From the lips of English laborers, when in that country, I learned their belief that the "dole" encourages idleness and dishonesty by substituting financial support for work. Instead of building a self-dependent manhood and womanhood for citizenship, the dole was declared to encourage slothfulness, hypocrisy, and dishonesty. However worthy its purpose, I learned that was the result. This bill is called into service during an unexpected emergency, which the commission determines to exist.

Neither a billionaire nor a millionaire who has acquired his wealth under our beneficent laws needs vast wealth for his selfish use during such emergency unemployment. When our forefathers wrote that all men have inalienable rights of life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, they intended to say that every man, not the few, had full protection under our law to those rights, and taxation nearer the English-system rates is justified during times of emergency.

In this day of financial extremes, where men of great wealth satisfy their consciences by dribbling small charities to keep other equally good Americans from starving, we may well ask, have we assured to those in need rights of existence promised by our forefathers when establishing this Government?

I have no envy for any man possessing great wealth. He misses much in life for the selfish enjoyment he gets in accumulating money. To cite an extreme case, the miser gets happiness out of his habits and his sacrifices for wealth, but few people envy him that joy. We are dealing with human rights when that wealth is permitted to accumulate and be protected, to the exclusion of rights to work and live by millions when not blessed with food or shelter.

MEN WHO ASKED FOR JOBS

It is generally understood that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, by threats of resignation and fears of ultimate national financial confusion, persuaded Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover to oppose and veto proposed veteran-compensation legislation. Its effect on the subject in hand is disclosed by the following extract from committee hearings quoted in a speech in the House on February 16, 1931:

Appeals for relief of unemployment by veterans and tales of need do not go to Mr. Mellon, where they would be unanswered, but to General Hines.

I quote from the committee hearings of January 31, 1931:

"General HINES. I estimate between 200,000 and 300,000 ex-service men are out of employment. * * *

"Mr. FREAR. You have previously stated that not over 50 per cent if given the option would release their certificates, so that 50 per cent will not be forced; is that right?

"General HINES. That is correct.

"Mr. FREAR. The proportion that will be forced is simply those out of work, in distress, with their families in need. Now, what provisions are we to make to care for those people other than the bills which are now before us?

"General HINES. I indicated, Congressman, I felt we should make an effort to get them into employment * * *. The Department of Labor, with the cooperation of the Veterans' Administration and the service organizations, indicate the result of our combined efforts * * * that from May until December of 35,974 veterans they were able to place in employment 13,253. An additional 17,439 have been referred to employers but to date it had not resulted in getting a job.

"Mr. FREAR. On the basis of those figures 22,000 of the 35,000 are still out of employment?

"General HINES. Yes.

"Mr. FREAR. Now, what proportion of the total number would you say are in this third group that are in distress or in need?

"General HINES. I think I limited it to two or three hundred thousand.

"Mr. FREAR. These combined efforts, as you have stated, have provided 13,000 with employment out of two or three hundred thousand. What are we to do for the balance of those two or three hundred thousand?

"General HINES. It is our duty to continue our special effort to get the veteran employment. * * *

"Mr. FREAR. But if we have only secured 13,000 positions out of two or three hundred thousands we have not made much progress. * * * Of course, they are put in competition with the great number out of employment who are not ex-service men. That is one reason why 13,000, the number provided for, is so limited, is it not?

"General HINES. Yes."

That relief bill was vetoed, with a dismal prospect of crowding soup houses with American boys we had drafted and sent to war, often hungry, looking for food in places already filled by several million other Americans looking for jobs. Congress, irrespective of politics, voted not to throw out the pleas of men who fought in France to help save Mellon's millions from serious loss. In so doing, to a mild degree, Congress reflected the immortal spirit of the Father of our County, whose anniversary we celebrate, when again it overruled a presidential veto.

HOW THESE MEN GOT JOBS

Present conditions are disclosed when the press recently reported that a call in one city for 250 men to dig ditches for sewers caused ten times that number to stand in line during the night, including many white-collared men, all looking for jobs to dig dirt at nominal wages. A small riot was precipitated by the excess of labor asking for that work.

A Federal unemployment commission to deal constructively with the problem might well follow the plan of Federal highway aid. That commission should be authorized in emergency to extend possibly not to exceed 20 per cent of the cost of new local, municipal improvements, providing the State in which the municipality is located contributed a like amount of State money.

This would leave 60 per cent of the actual cost of the improvement to be borne by the municipality. Such improvements, when an emergency was declared to exist, would extend from ordinary permanent municipal improvements to projects for housing and otherwise caring for the welfare of its people. The work to be performed under joint supervision after the project, including wages and amount of joint contribution, had been determined and agreed to.

Federal aid would be extended only in cases of unemployment emergency, to be determined by the administrative board acting under definite provisions of law, to avoid extravagance or unauthorized expenditures. Such Federal aid would be based upon cooperation by the State and local municipal unit. Details can be provided for safeguarding the Federal Government and a plan could be developed to meet the necessities of a situation that everyone concedes demands vigorous treatment.

FIVE TIMES THE FEDERAL AID WOULD BE EXPENDED

By payment of $1,000,000,000 toward unemployment in one year, a proper investment, the Federal Government could secure a contribution of four times that amount to be added from the States and municipalities, or a total of $5,000,000,000. Probably one-tenth of $5,000,000,000 that could thus be raised for any emergency would be sufficient to meet ordinary demands, but work should be given to those who ask for it, where possible to furnish.

A contribution of $100,000,000 from the Federal Government, with a like sum from the State and three times that amount from the municipality, would furnish employment for 2,500,000 people for several months at modest compensation, and double that Federal contribution would provide 5,000,000 unemployed with work on useful improvements throughout the average period of depression. Compared with appeals to charities, this would be a far better method of relief than to provide simple gratuities which would not approach those amounts during the same period nor be equitably contributed by those best able to pay.

The blessings of individualism have long been held up to the world, but when men and women ask for work instead of charity it is time for us to give attention to our own public methods that excite criticism from abroad.

The suggestion is here proffered of a constructive plan that may be further developed, with a protest against forcing self-respecting people to line up with down and outers, by pleading for charity, when work and not charity is asked. Our country can and should face the problem squarely, by making provision for the present and for the future emergencies that are sure to come.

WHERE REAL TAXES ARE PAID TO BALANCE THE BUDGET

To get a picture of the moderate tax paid by Americans, compared to that paid by English cousins, a tax proposal by Snowden in England reached 5 shillings (or 25 per cent) on the pound as the basic income tax. Ten per cent increase in the surtax on higher incomes is also an additional method of distributing wealth in conservative England.

Sixteen cents per pound on smoking tobacco, 16 cents tax a gallon on gasoline, and similar heavy English taxes are there imposed. A small fraction of that tax rate would provide work for all America's unemployed.

It is sometimes comforting to know that misery has company, and in these days of business depression when all the world is affected, the situation does not look so bad when we realize that, after all, ours is the best country in many ways, and it is only a matter of slightly better distribution of wealth by taxation that is asked in time of need, and contribution from those best able to pay in order to provide work for those who ask for jobs and not for charity.

This bill is to advance funds to States to be deducted from future allotments in order to provide work on Federal highways. If we can properly advance funds to banks through Federal agencies, and all Members of Congress unanimously agreed to do that in order to save banks from closing with serious injury to communities, it is certain we can afford advances to States when the purpose is to furnish jobs directly or indirectly, to those asking for work.

Mr. HALL of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, after having voted for legislation designed to help the bankers and the railroad men, I am delighted to cast my ballot for the Almon emergency road construction measure. It will not only afford a considerable degree of unemployment relief in my own State but boost employment in every State in the Union.

Moreover, it is in fact the first single measure hitherto passed by either House of Congress which provides jobs for workingmen. Nor is the $120,000,000 appropriation authorized a Federal donation or "dole" to the several States. It is merely a temporary loan to be recaptured from future Federal-aid authorizations in 10 annual installments.

There is neither guesswork nor hearsay concerning the measure of unemployment relief to be afforded. Eighty million dollars appropriated last by a similar act provided employment for an average of 300,000 men a month, and besides approximately twice that number were employed in the manufacture and transportation of road-building materials.

Consequently, the proposed loan would furnish work, directly and indirectly, for about a million men. What is more, it would permit many States to match Federal-aid funds already appropriated for that purpose.

Unquestionably putting people to work is the best way to route the depression.

Of the one hundred and twenty millions authorized by the Almon bill, $2,160,628 would be allotted to Mississippi, and that, matched by a like amount of Federal-aid money, would make available $4,321,356 for road construction in my State. And there are ample Federal-aid funds available for matching the amount allocated to Mississippi.

All the States have to their credit about $109,000,000 of Federal-aid highway funds, and if they are not matched by the respective States within two years the money will lapse and revert back to the Treasury. Of the above amount, more than $5,000,000 is accredited to Mississippi, and, naturally, I want the people of my State to be enabled to match that fund and use it in extending our highway system.

Fortunately, Mississippi would fare considerably better than some of the other States which would pay in more in the shape of Federal taxes than their pro rata share of the fund would amount to. To offset the $2,160,628 obtainable under the Almon bill, Mississippi would pay out only $72,000 in Federal revenue.

According to the Bureau of Public Roads, at least 85 per cent of the money expended on concrete roads, or high-type construction highways, is ultimately paid out in wages and salaries. Or, stated another way, $40 out of every $100 goes for transportation, $14 for base materials, $24 for cement, $16 for road-building machinery, and the rest for labor engaged directly on the construction jobs. In consequence upward of one-half million would be paid out in Mississippi to the men who actually would build the roads. As a great deal of the materials would be manufactured and transported within the State, the expenditure of this emergency road-construction fund would accelerate business all along the line.

Mississippi, I am glad to say, is constructing her highways on the pay-as-you-go system. Already wonderful progress has been made, and besides road building is being pushed as rapidly as possible. Hence, this emergency loan would not only provide employment for a great number of people in my State and district but would go a long ways toward ultimate completion of our highway system.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes a supplemental appropriation of $120,000,000 for emergency highway construction to be apportioned among the several States according to existing methods, and $12,500,000 for roads in national parks, national forests, and Indian reservations. The $120,000,000 item is to be matched dollar for dollar by the States. The amount Vermont will receive, and be expected to match, is $600,000. I voted against the bill because, at this time, it will be very difficult for the Government to obtain the $132,500,000.

The Nation is facing a crisis as dangerous to its life as any during its history. Our accumulating deficit is assuming alarming proportions. The Government is running behind at the rate of more than $6,000,000 per day. The Ways and Means Committee is searching every available source for increased revenue. The Committee on Appropriations is working night and day to cut expenditures in order to balance the budget. All that has been accomplished by hard work and careful planning is swept away by this authorization.

The bill proposes not only to drain the Federal Treasury to the amount of $132,500,000 but it encourages an additional burden of $600,000 on the already overtaxed people of my State.

It is said that this bill will relieve unemployment, but a study of it reveals that the amounts will not be allocated in proportions according to necessities to the States with the dense populations, where the unemployment situations are acute. It will go to States of the wide, open spaces, where unemployment burdens are much easier. In other words, the amount appropriated will be drawn from the States that contribute the most in taxes and where the effects of the depression are acute and will be distributed where it is not needed. Vermont, with a population of 360,000, will be allocated $600,000, while Nevada, with a population of 91,058, will receive $1,578,025.

The claim that it will give employment to a million people can not be substantiated. The best authentic estimates available indicate that the work to be done will not employ 75,000 throughout the whole Nation. The number of men who will be given employment in my State will not exceed 300, not more than the number employed in a fair-sized manufacturing plant.

The home people are demanding that we reduce and not increase Government expenses. They insist that we cut taxes down to the limit necessary to run the Nation. They will hold us responsible for failure to do so. We will be judged by actual performance. What progress are we making by reducing here and there and then authorizing an appropriation of an amount greater than has been saved? The people will not be deceived by the arguments advanced in favor of this measure.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill and include therein two short letters from the Wisconsin Highway Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Reserving the right to object, is it in favor of the bill or against it?

Mr. SCHAFER. In favor, and giving the Federal Government a little credit for relieving unemployment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall not object.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, under the permission given me by the House to extend my remarks on February 27, 1932, I incorporate in the RECORD letters which I received from the Wisconsin Highway Commission under date of December 15 and December 17, 1931, which indicate that one commission of the Wisconsin State government, now in control of the La Follette faction of the Republican Party, gives the national administration, under the control of the Republican Party, some credit for assisting to relieve unemployment in our State.

The letters are as follows:

WISCONSIN HIGHWAY COMMISSION,
Madison, Wis., December 15, 1931.

Hon. JOHN C. SCHAFER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SCHAFER: The unemployment situation in this State and the necessity of completing certain unimproved portions of our Federal-aid highway system during the 1932 construction program prompts me, as the chairman of the State highway commission, to bring to your attention the urgency of additional Federal legislation designed to provide the financial relief necessary.

About a year ago Congress made $80,000,000 available as special Federal aid for highway construction (H. R. 14804; Public, 550, 71st Cong.). This was merely an advance of Federal aid already appropriated, which is to be repaid through future allotments of Federal aid over a period of five years. The amount that thus became available to this State was approximately $1,900,000, and this advance, in addition to the amounts that were available from other sources, made it possible for our State to carry out one of the best construction programs that we have ever had. We are sure that this advance contributed materially to the relief of unemployment, and we also are sure that there was a material improvement in our State trunk highway system as a result of it.

You are probably aware that our 1931 legislature enacted important highway legislation in chapter 22, Laws of 1931. This, however, was primarily a tax-relief measure in that it shifted the cost of highway improvements from general property to the motor-vehicle license fees and gasoline taxes. The amount of revenues made available for highway improvement was not increased. On the contrary, an important falling off in motor-vehicle registrations and a decrease in gasoline-tax collections over what was anticipated leaves the commission in very straitened circumstances in so far as its 1932 program is concerned.

This situation is bad in two ways: In the first place, a decrease in our highway-construction program means a cutting down in the class of public work which offers the greatest opportunity for unemployment relief; and, in the second place, it makes it impossible for the commission to carry out some highway improvements which it had projected in 1932 and whose completion will be of the very greatest benefit to the traveling public in this State. As you are doubtless aware, our Wisconsin system of highway building has been criticized because of an alleged lack of completed through highways. We have, however, reached the stage in our highway development where the construction of a relatively limited mileage will serve to close certain unimproved gaps and thus provide the through routes which are quite necessary and whose lack has caused much adverse criticism.

You are doubtless more familiar with what is practical than we can possibly be, but we venture the following suggestions. The best thing for us would be an outright appropriation by Congress for the construction of the Federal-aid system in this and the other States. If this is not practical, a repetition of the legislation of a year ago, when $80,000,000 was advanced from future appropriations, would be helpful and would enable us to carry out a program next year which would compare favorably with the 1931 program both in the way of providing employment and in the way of improvement of our State trunk highways. I think, in fact, our showing in the way of improvement would be even better than in 1931 due to the tremendous effect of the completion of a number of through routes.

I am thoroughly convinced of the necessity of the provision of relief by the Federal Government as well as by the State and know that we can expend any Federal appropriations that may be made available to this State in such a way as to provide relief for unemployment and to give the public full value for every cent expended. I sincerely hope that you also will be impressed with the distribution of such a program as I have here advocated.

I am sending identical letters on this subject to all of our representatives in Congress. Thanking you for your consideration, I am,

Very truly yours,

WISCONSIN HIGHWAY COMMISSION,
By THOS. J. PATTISON, Chairman.

WISCONSIN HIGHWAY COMMISSION,
Madison, Wis., December 17, 1931.

Hon. JOHN C. SCHAFER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN SCHAFER: The purpose of this letter is to urge your cooperation for repeating the special allotment of Federal aid in highway construction in 1932 as was done in 1931 by H. R. 14804, Public, No. 550, Seventy-first Congress. Wisconsin received a substantial portion of the $80,000,000 special Federal fund and needs it very badly the coming year.

As you know, the 2-cent increase in the gas tax is producing added revenue in the amount of $8,475,000, but every dollar of this is returned to the taxpayer in relief from real and personal property tax. In fact, the provisions of the statute take not only every dollar of the new revenue produced but an additional $650,000 for allotments producing tax relief.

The consequence has been that there is a great deal of disappointment in the limited construction undertaken the past year and there will be similar disappointment the coming year, due to the fact that nine out of ten taxpayers have the mistaken idea that the increased revenue was intended to produce new construction rather than tax relief.

The policy of the administration to confine public works for the relief of unemployment exclusively to projects of permanent value, such as would be undertaken in the future under normal conditions, is, in my judgment, based on sound public policy.

My short tenure on the highway commission has impressed me with the care with which every item is checked and rechecked and the rigid economy that is practiced in every construction and maintenance operation. Nor have I ever heard even a whispered suggestion of graft in the operation of the department.

It would seem sound public policy to spend money on projects that are supervised and checked with scrupulous care by competent engineers.

I should appreciate a line as to the probability of legislation duplicating H. R. 14804 passing Congress.

Very truly yours,

WISCONSIN HIGHWAY COMMISSION,
JOHN C. SCHMIDTMANN, Vice Chairman.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent the following leaves of absence were granted:

To Mr. GAMBRILL, for to-day, on account of death in family of his uncle, James H. Gambrill, at Frederick, Md., at the ripe old age of 102 years;

CANDIDACY OF FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, in the Huntington (W. Va.) Herald-Advertiser of February 21, 1932, I find a description of a meeting of the Democratic State committee of West Virginia. I should like to read just a part of a resolution there adopted in support of the candidacy of Governor Roosevelt, of New York, for President. After reciting conditions in the country, the resolution reads:

> In the circumstances, we believe that the Democracy of the Nation and the progressive, thoughtful men and women of all other parties desire and intend to retire Mr. Hoover from office next November and restore the administration of the Government of the United States to the party that was founded by Thomas Jefferson, exalted by Andrew Jackson, and immortalized by Woodrow Wilson.
> In order most effectively to aid in achieving this fervently desired consummation we unqualifiedly approve the presidential candidacy of Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, of the State of New York, who has proved himself a great statesman, a skillful leader, a courageous champion of human rights, and a successful defender of Democratic faith.

I ask that the entire article may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[From the Huntington (W. Va.) Herald-Advertiser, February 21, 1932]

DEMOCRATS MARSHAL STATE SUPPORT FOR ROOSEVELT—COMMITTEE IS NAMED TO EFFECT ORGANIZATION AT PARTY RALLY

More than 2,000 Democrats, including most of the party leaders from all sections of the State, during a convention in the city auditorium last night perfected a preliminary organization to support Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, for the Democratic nomination for President of the United States.

A state-wide Roosevelt-for-President committee was named by the convention after Senator M. M. NEELY, of Fairmont, followed his spirited attack on President Hoover by presenting a resolution which indorsed Roosevelt for the Presidency and pledged the support of the convention to seek a solid electoral vote for Roosevelt from West Virginia.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED

The resolution, which was unanimously adopted, is as follows:

"We, approximately 2,000 West Virginia Democrats and members of other political parties, in public meeting assembled in the city of Huntington, on this 20th day of February, 1932, respectfully submit the following to the voters of the State:

"After 11 years of complete control of every department of the Federal Government by the Republican Party the country is now in the third year of the most disastrous financial, industrial, and economic panic that has ever afflicted the Nation. During the last three years business has been banished, industry paralyzed, and agriculture ruined; thousands of banks have failed, hundreds of thousands of business enterprises have become bankrupt, 8,000,000 toilers have lost their jobs, and millions of those dependent upon them to-day are face to face with starvation.

"The present administration has utterly failed to solve a single unemployment problem or devise a single effective measure for the relief of the blameless millions who are in dire distress. On every hand there is overwhelming evidence that the American people are dissatisfied with the Hoover administration as they have never been dissatisfied with any other, either in peace or war.

"In the circumstances we believe that the Democracy of the Nation and the progressive, thoughtful men and women of all other parties desire and intend to retire Mr. Hoover from office next November and restore the administration of the Government of the United States to the party that was founded by Thomas Jefferson, exalted by Andrew Jackson, and immortalized by Woodrow Wilson.

"In order most effectively to aid in achieving this fervently desired consummation we unqualifiedly approve the presidential candidacy of Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, of the State of New York, who has proved himself a great statesman, a skillful leader, a courageous champion of human rights, and a successful defender of Democratic faith: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we diligently and enthusiastically strive to send a solid Roosevelt delegation from West Virginia to the Chicago convention and pledge ourselves to do everything in our power to make Governor Roosevelt the next President of the United States."

Hundreds of Democratic leaders from throughout the State attended last night's meeting, which was the first of a series of similar meetings that will be conducted in all parts of the State for promoting the candidacy of Roosevelt.

SILVER AS A WORLD MEDIUM

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance an editorial appearing in the Reno Evening Gazette, of Nevada, of February 19, commenting favorably on a bill which has been introduced by my colleague the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] on the silver question. I fully agree with the Gazette on this matter and hope the bill in question will be enacted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted, as requested.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Reno (Nev.) Evening Gazette, February 19, 1932]

THE SILVER-CERTIFICATE PLAN

Of all the numerous bills offered in Congress dealing with the silver question, the one by Senator PITTMAN, providing for the issuing of additional silver certificates at the rate of $5,000,000 monthly, is the most practicable. Taking the position that it is impossible at this time to restore silver to free coinage, the Nevada Senator is endeavoring to bring about an international conference which he believes will result in the recognition of silver as a world medium of exchange, but in the meantime he would increase its use in this country by basing upon it sixty millions of new currency annually.

As a number of persons have pointed out, such an additional issue of paper money would not disturb the prevailing gold standard; it would be based upon values just as sound as the Federal reserve notes that are issued against commercial paper, and there would remain abundant gold in the hands of the Government to firmly maintain these certificates at par under all circumstances. Furthermore, it would expand the currency which the Treasury is now seeking to enlarge sufficiently to offset the deflation that has occurred, and the extent of the expansion would not amount to anything like inflation.

The effect in Nevada and throughout the West would be immediate. It would soon remove from the markets of this country the surplus silver stocks and tremendously strengthen the silver market.

The usual objection that silver is too unstable a commodity upon which to base even a small part of the national currency will be made, of course, but the fact is that silver, even at the present low market price, would be just as sound as a lot of the commercial securities upon which much of the Government's paper currency is now based.

PROPOSED FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX

Mr. FLETCHER presented an editorial from the Florida Times Union of the 27th instant entitled "Leave Gas Taxes to the States," which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Florida Times Union, February 27, 1932]

"LEAVE GAS TAXES TO THE STATES"

Florida, by reason of imposition of a heavy rate of taxation on gasoline sold and used in this State, is particularly concerned, or ought to be, in the proposal in the National House of Representatives to put a Federal tax on this article of commerce and use in motor vehicle transportation. The proposition to thus additionally tax gasoline arises out of the search for new sources for raising money to use in wiping out the National Treasury deficit of some $2,000,000,000, due to extravagant spending of public funds.

It may sound like disloyalty to make objection to this proposed tax, since money must be found somewhere for the purpose indicated, and everybody, quite naturally, will object to increase in taxation when such increase touches the individual pocketbook or bank account. But stop to consider the facts as brought to attention by the Boston Evening Transcript, under the above heading—"Leave the Gas Taxes to the States."

The Transcript recites that "the States collected some $500,000,000 in 1931 from gasoline taxes running from 2 to 6 cents a gallon," and that thereby "it is evident that a Federal tax of 1 cent a gallon would result in $100,000,000 of Federal revenue, more or less." Florida's share of this proposed tax readily can be computed. In the month of January, last, according to the figures just made public by the State department of agriculture, 20,544,609 gallons of gasoline were consumed in this State. With another cent per gallon of tax added, as is proposed to be done by Federal authority and for Federal use, it would mean the payment by Florida gasoline users of in the neighborhood of $200,000 monthly in addition to the aggregate amount now being paid to the State—$2,400,000 a year increase—assuming that the monthly sales of gasoline in this State would run at about the rates of sales made in January. The Boston newspaper quoted proceeds to say:

"Motorists have consented to special taxes in the various States upon the understanding that the money would be employed in road building and maintenance. Although some of the States have abused their privilege, it still remains the general practice that the funds derived from the special gas taxes are employed chiefly for that purpose. Car and truck owners are numerous enough, however, to overthrow the gas taxes, or to reduce them materially if they are pressed too hard, and State revenues may find themselves gravely endangered if the Federal Government reaches its grasping arm into their field. State deficits, incidentally, imply fully as much of menace to the people as do Federal deficits."

There may be more to what is above set forth than appears in the printed words. Already, in States that have used money derived from gasoline taxes for purposes other than construction and maintenance of public highways, pretty strong protests are being made against still further diversion of funds derived from tax on gasoline, and in some instances indications are that State legislatures will be called on to rescind legislation by which present diversions are sanctioned. And now for the Federal Government to propose to do what already is seriously being objected to seems to be about to inflict the limit of endurance on those now paying high rates of taxes on gasoline, with prospects of being required to pay still more money in order to provide their cars and trucks with fuel.

The question in this connection is, What is to be done about it, if anything?

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I present resolutions adopted by the Bronx County (N. Y.) Bar Association, favoring the adherence of the United States to the World Court, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Permanent Court of International Justice, the establishment of which our country urged as far back as the First Hague Conference, in 1899, has in the 10 years of the existence proved its practical value in the application of the principles of international law to certain classes of legal questions, by the settlement of 38 such questions; and

Whereas the United States Senate, in 1926, by a vote of 76 to 17, passed a resolution providing for the entrance of this country into the court if five reservations were met; and

Whereas it is the opinion of the Department of State that these reservations are entirely met by the three World Court protocols now in the hands of the Foreign Relations Committee; and

Whereas they were, for this reason, signed by the United States, on the President's authority, in December, 1929, and sent to the Senate for its consent to their ratification in December, 1930; and

Whereas six years have elapsed since this question was dealt with by our Senate, and more than two years have gone by since our signature was attached to three protocols designed to make our Senate's own resolution effective: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Bronx County Bar Association, That it is in full accord with the position taken by the American Bar Association and by our New York City and New York State Bar Association, that the adherence of the United States to the World Court should be completed by the Senate's ratification of the three protocols awaiting its action and hereby respectfully requests the Senate to ratify the three World Court protocols. And, be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of this association be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to every member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and to request Senator WAGNER to have it inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The above resolution was duly adopted February 8, 1932.

J. PHILIP VAN KIRK, President.

Attest:

CHAS. J. KENNEDY, Secretary.

FIXING TERMS OF PRESIDENT, VICE PRESIDENT, AND CONGRESS

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate I desire to have printed in the RECORD the conference report on Senate Joint Resolution 14, proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the terms of office of the President, Vice President, and Members of Congress. The chairman of the House conferees handed me a statement which, under the rules of the House, the conferees on the part of the House are required to file with their report. It will be found near the beginning of the left-hand column on page 5027 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Tuesday, March 1. I may state in this connection that I expect to call up the conference report as soon as the House has acted upon it and messaged its action to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The report submitted by Mr. NORRIS is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 14) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the terms of President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembling of Congress, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid as a part of said Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several States as provided in the Constitution:

"'ARTICLE —

"'SECTION 1. The terms of the President and Vice President shall end at noon on the 20th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the 3d day of January of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

"'SEC. 2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall begin at noon on the 3d day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

"'SEC. 3. If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the beginning of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice President shall have qualified.

"'SEC. 4. The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

"'SEC. 5. Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

"'SEC. 6. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.'"

And the House agree to the same.

G. W. NORRIS,
WM. E. BORAH,
THOS. J. WALSH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LAMAR JEFFERS,
RALPH F. LOZIER,
CHAS. L. GIFFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 421) to provide for the air marking of certain Government buildings, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 345) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1317) for the relief of the State of California, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 351) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mr. WATERMAN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 26th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 315) for the relief of Lemuel Simpson.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 3849) to authorize the erection of a 200-bed addition to the United States Veterans' Administration hospital at Lake City, Fla.; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 3850) for the relief of Percie D. Jordan; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3851) granting a pension to Mary J. Winslow (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRATTON:

A bill (S. 3852) to amend section 2288 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, with respect to the taking for highway purposes of lands entered upon under the homestead laws; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 3854) for the relief of Leila Hoagland; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VANDENBERG:

A bill (S. 3855) placing service postmasters in the classified service; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 3856) for the relief of John M. McNulty; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 3857) granting a pension to Lightning (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3858) granting a pension to Charlie Kills-in-Sight or Kills In (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3859) granting a pension to Jennie Claymore (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3860) granting an increase of pension to Mitchell Desersa (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3861) granting an increase of pension to Hugh M. Jones (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKHART:

A bill (S. 3862) to authorize the President to appoint John Everett Winslow a second lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps of the Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROUSSARD:

A bill (S. 3863) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 3864) authorizing expenditures from Colorado River tribal funds for reimbursable loans; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 3865) providing treatment in marine hospitals to persons belonging to the Steamboat Inspection Service whose chief duties are inspection of vessels; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HASTINGS:

A bill (S. 3866) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POISONOUS VOLATILE SUBSTANCES

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I introduce a bill upon which we have been working for a good many months, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in poisonous volatile substances. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. BINGHAM:

A bill (S. 3853) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in poisonous volatile substances intended for household consumption; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

THE FIRST PUBLIC SINGING OF "AMERICA"

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library. It suggests that Congress shall put appropriate emphasis upon a particularly significant and appealing anniversary, namely, that of the first singing of America. The event will be permanently memorialized in Detroit, Mich., where, at the instance of the Rotary Club, the school children of Detroit have raised the funds to put a beautiful monument in Belle Isle. The monument will imperishably enshrine the author of this thrilling hymn and its familiar words. The Star-Spangled Banner is the official national anthem. But My Country 'Tis of the Thee is the unofficial lyric which most often brings the voice of our citizenship into common chorus. It is an intimate part of the Nation's life, spirit, and devotions. This Washington bicentennial year is rich in patriotic reminiscences. It will add to the color and the inspiration of our 1932 prospectus to include the one hundredth anniversary of "America" in the national program in tune with this dedication at Detroit upon next Independence Day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 113) to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the first public singing of America, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the 4th day of July, 1932, marks the one hundredth anniversary of the first public singing in Park Street Church, Boston, Mass., by a chorus of children, of the great and thrilling patriotic hymn, America, written by the Rev. Samuel Francis Smith;

Whereas this significant event already is promised splendid recognition at Detroit, Mich., where the contributions of patriotic school children have provided a beautiful monument to the hymn and to its author, which will be appropriately dedicated upon Independence Day; and

Whereas it is the sense of the Congress that there should be general observance of this anniversary because of the incalculable inspiration which has touched the life of the Nation through the countless millions of voices, in peace and in war, which have sung "My country 'tis of thee" across the century: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this one hundredth anniversary of the first public signing of America be commended to all citizens for appropriate recognition in connection with the celebration of Independence Day on the 4th day of July, 1932.

EMERGENCY HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION—AMENDMENT

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

ANTI-INJUNCTION LEGISLATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 935) to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9642) to authorize supplemental appropriations for emergency highway construction, with a view to increasing employment, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

THE POLITICAL AND LEGISLATIVE SITUATION

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I send to the clerk's desk a newspaper clipping, which I should like to have the clerk read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MOSES REPLIES GARNER MAKES PRESIDENCY BID—WONDERS SPEAKER FAILED TO ACCUSE HOOVER OF MORE—TEXAN HITS SENATOR AS AMUSING G. O. P.—HYDE CHARGES DEMOCRATIC RELIEF PLAN WOULD AID ONLY 35,000

(Associated Press)

Speaker GARNER's charge that President Hoover precipitated a panic drew a sharp retort yesterday from Senator MOSES (Republican), New Hampshire, suggesting that the Texan had begun his formal campaign for the Presidency, and in return another shot from GARNER.

* * * * * * *

Senator MOSES in his statement again predicted Mr. Hoover's renomination and reelection.

Recalling the vigor with which Speaker GARNER once commented upon the action of the Supreme Court in the estate tax case, he said, "I marvel at the moderation with which Mr. GARNER has now begun his formal campaign for the Presidency with the single and simple assertion that President Hoover brought on a panic.

ADDITIONAL CHARGES SUGGESTED

"In order to run true to form the Speaker should have added the charge that the President brought on the World War, loaned billions to Europe during a Democratic administration, directed riotous expenditures for armaments in foreign countries, brought about the unbalanced budgets of other governments, made added loans in Latin America, is responsible for Bolshevism in Russia, engineered the 18 revolutions in as many countries, caused the panic in Germany and the economic collapse in central Europe, forced England off the gold standard, fomented the Sino-Japanese row, created the drought, and is responsible for the overproduction of coffee in Brazil, copper in Africa, sugar in Cuba, rubber in India, cotton in the South, and wheat in Canada, Australia, and the Argentine."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] in the savage attack which he makes upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives, evidently is bringing to a conclusion the era of so-called cooperation in which the President and his advisers have been asking the minority party in this Chamber and the majority party in the other Chamber to participate during this particular session of Congress. Mr. President, I should not feel called upon to consume the time of the Senate in the discussion of this matter save for the eminence of the Senator from New Hampshire and the well-known intimate contact which he has with the administration and the President. Except for that fact and the further fact that he was known throughout the country as one of the original

Hoover men in 1928, at a time when many of the other leaders of his party prior to the convention were denouncing the candidate who afterwards became their nominee, and except for the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire is regarded generally as one of the spokesmen for the White House, I should not feel called upon to express my own resentment at this savage and uncalled for attack by the Senator from New Hampshire on the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

It is to be assumed, now that the administration and the Senator from New Hampshire have secured from the Democratic House cooperation in the particular program in which the administration was especially interested, that they are ready to open up their guns in an effort to destroy the Speaker and in an effort to destroy anyone who becomes in any wise prominent in the Democratic Party, and who may possibly be a candidate or the nominee of the party for President of the United States.

I do not know what the Speaker of the House of Representatives said, but the whole gravamen of the charge of the Senator from New Hampshire is that the Speaker was quoted some days ago in an informal newspaper conference as having said that the President led us into a panic. Whether that be true or whether it be not true, I shall not myself pass judgment, but let me suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that, so far as governmental action may have had any influence upon the economic condition of this country for more than the past two years, so far as legislation has affected that situation, and so far as executive action may have affected it, the present administration and the legislative bodies of this Republic, of which the senior Senator from New Hampshire is an influential part, are most certainly responsible.

The Republican Party has been in control of both branches of Congress; it has had every agency of the Government at its command until the present session of this Congress; Mr. Hoover has been not only the President, but he has been the national leader in whatever activities this Government has undertaken; and if anyone led us into the panic, if anyone backed us into the panic, if anyone was at the head of affairs, it was the President of the United States, the Republican Senate, and the Republican House of Representatives. So I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire that the basis for his attack was most unwarranted and unjustified.

When, in 1930, in the congressional campaign in November of that year, the country repudiated the administration of Mr. Hoover and elected a Democratic House of Representatives, those who theretofore had been militant, those who, under the leadership of the President, had been denouncing Democrats in Congress and Democratic theories, immediately raised a flag of truce and requested the Democrats of the Congress, both in the House and Senate, to cooperate, and that they have a nonpartisan session of Congress. They wanted peace and harmony in order to do what? In order that we should do the cooperating and that they should do the operating. Now that period has passed and I want to submit, at the risk of wearying the patience of the Senate, a little bit of the history of America during the past few years. I want to examine for a moment just how we have gotten into this tangle, just how we have become submerged in this period of lower commodity prices in this period of world-wide depression.

The Senator from New Hampshire would like to forget, but the country will not forget, that it was his candidate for President in 1928 who, in accepting the nomination, made a speech at Palo Alto in which he said:

> We in America to-day are nearer to the final triumph over poverty than ever before in the history of any land. The poorhouse is vanishing from among us. We have not yet reached the goal, but, given a chance to go forward with the policies of the last eight years we shall soon, with the help of God, be in sight of the day when poverty will be banished from this Nation. There is no guaranty against poverty equal to a job for every man.

A "job for every man," let me remind the Senator from New Hampshire—

> That is the primary purpose of the economic policies we advocate.

The dictionary defines panic, among other fashions, as follows:

> A sudden, widespread fright or apprehension concerning financial affairs, resulting in an artificial depression in values.

We have the statement of the Republican candidate for President in 1928, which was to the effect that prosperity would be continued and the poorhouse would finally vanish if the people would but permit him to go forward with the policies of the past eight years, controlled and shaped in large measure by the Senator from New Hampshire and entirely by Republican administrations.

A little later in that campaign the candidate of the Senator from New Hampshire for President said this:

> The slogan of progress is changing from the full dinner pail to the full garage. Our people have more to eat, better things to wear, and better homes. We have even gained in elbow room, for the increase of residential floor space is over 25 per cent, with less than 10 per cent increase in our number of people. Wages have increased; the cost of living has decreased; the job of every man and woman has been made more secure.

Eight million people to-day are asking the question what has become of their jobs, to say nothing of how they have been made "more secure."

> We have in this short period decreased the fear of poverty, the fear of unemployment, the fear of old age—

Arresting the flight of time—> and these are fears that are the greatest calamities of human kind.

Mr. President, we remember that when the present administration went into power in March, 1929, the country was relatively prosperous; yet we remember that the President called Congress in extraordinary session to enact the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act. We were told by the leaders on the other side of the aisle that the enactment of that measure would assure and continue the prosperity of the country. When, in the fall of 1929, prices were mounting, when the stock market was pyramiding, when values that had in fact no substance were far beyond their intrinsic worth, we remember how this administration, the President himself, the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, who now occupies a seat in this Chamber [Mr. DAVIS], all rushed into the press and told the country that there was no occasion for worry; that business and prosperity would continue. Then we recall that when in October, 1929, with the suddenness of a storm, the stock market collapsed, bringing disaster and bringing losses to every city and every village throughout the Republic, these same prophets rushed into the press and told the world and the country that there was nothing wrong with business; that it was sound. There was no reference then to the suggestion that our troubles arose in foreign lands; nobody rushed into the press then and said that the stock market collapsed because the price of coffee was cheap in Brazil; nobody proclaimed in the headlines that our difficulties here at home arose because we were able to buy coffee cheaper or because the copper situation in South Africa had destroyed our prosperity; but for the purpose of the RECORD I want briefly to quote the words of the President and of the Secretary of the Treasury at that time with respect to the temporary character of the depression and the fact that it would soon pass away.

Mr. President, on the 29th of October, 1929, the quondam candidate for President of the Senator from New Hampshire, then President of the United States, gave to the public this statement:

> The fundamental business of the country * * * is on a sound and prosperous basis.

"Sound and prosperous" on October 29, 1929; nothing wrong; only a little flurry; only a little zephyr disturbing a few of the high financiers in Wall Street.

On December 3, 1929, the President again said:

> We have reestablished confidence. Wages should remain stable. Industrial unemployment has been prevented.

In December, 1929, this wave of depression that had been generated in October, according to Mr. Hoover, had already been stopped. Unemployment had been prevented, and conditions were sound. Was there then any complaint that the troubles in America had been caused abroad?

On November 3, 1929, one of the administration's sharpshooters, Doctor Klein, of the Department of Commerce—who draws his salary from the Government, but gives his services to the Republican National Committee—said this:

> We have come to see more clearly that the stock market is not the principal barometer of business, and that our American prosperity is deeply and firmly rooted.

Nothing to shake it in November, 1929.

Again, on November 21, 1929, the President said:

> There is no reason why business should not be carried on as usual.

"Business as usual," at the same old stand! I ask the Senator from New Hampshire, Is this an example of the far-seeing vision of the candidate whom he promoted in 1928? Where was the warning to the country to beware of the inflation of that period? Where was the storm signal by the administration of the approaching cyclone? Where was the traffic signal to stop and wait and look and listen for a moment?

On January 1, 1930, with the advent of the new year, the Secretary of the Treasury issued a statement. I grant you that on New Year's Day considerable latitude may be granted as to optimistic statements. It is a season of good cheer. We are all swearing off our sins and our bad habits of the year that is past, and we are making resolutions for the future; and I grant a good deal of latitude to the President and to the administration on an occasion like this. Here is what Mr. Mellon said on January 1, 1930:

> I have every confidence that there will be a revival of activity in the spring and that during the coming year the country will make steady progress.

That is Mr. Mellon, the "greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton"!

Mr. Lamont, the Secretary of Commerce, the man whom Mr. Hoover chose to take his place in the Department of Commerce, said on the 1st of January, 1930:

> One may confidently predict a continuance of prosperity and progress.

We have had not only a continuance of the "prosperity" that was then existing, a decline from November, but from that time forward the country and the people of the United States have suffered a still more radical decline.

Doctor Klein again rushes into the press and says:

> We are justified in feeling an abiding if perhaps not an exuberant optimism.

"Abiding" is a good word. The "prosperity" that was produced in the fall of 1929 has abided with us ever since.

On March 8, 1930, the President said:

> The crisis will be over in 60 days.

I quote from the Washington Post of March 8, 1930. No one will accuse that paper of being prejudiced against the administration:

> American business and industry is now recovering from the shock administered it by the stock-market collapse last fall, President Hoover believes, and within 60 days should be free from the distressing aftermath of unemployment which it brought.
>
> Summarizing his conclusions for newspaper correspondents, the President said that unemployment "amounting to distress" had been confined to 12 States—> and was not more than seasonal in the other 36 States.

Twelve States!

Get this. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will note this:

> Low points of business and employment had been passed in December and in early January, he added, and had been followed by slow betterment.

Mr. President, I shall not weary the Senate longer with quotations of these optimistic predictions. I shall not take up more of your time in calling attention to the absence of warnings by those in responsible position as to the conditions in America and throughout the world, but if anybody in America knew what those conditions were it ought to have been the President of the United States. He had at his command every agency of this Government. He had at his command his diplomatic representatives throughout the world. He had the emissaries of the Department of Commerce, who belt the globe. He has here in Washington, subservient to his every wish, all of these great departments in touch with trade and with commerce.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to ask the Senator a question or two. I am inclined to agree with almost all of his criticisms and accept most of the blame; but if we are to turn the Government over to the Democratic Party I should like to know where they are going. How does the Senator's candidate stand on the farm question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I am not speaking for anybody as a candidate to-day. I will say, however, that if the Democratic Party does not follow its leaders any better than the Senator from Iowa follows his leaders, we shall not be able to get very far with any sort of a program. I shall say in all kindness to the Senator from Iowa that I have assurance that we shall show a little more cohesion than the Senator from Iowa will show with the Senator from New Hampshire as his leader and spokesman.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator from New Hampshire does not lead me very fast.

Mr. CONNALLY. He has certainly designated the Senator from Iowa among a certain group that can be led only when properly harnessed.

Mr. BROOKHART. I think he is a little mistaken about that; but I am still interested in what the Democratic program is to be.

How will the Senator's candidate stand on the power question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall talk about that question.

Mr. BROOKHART. And how will he stand on the relief of unemployment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall reach those matters in a little while.

Mr. BROOKHART. How will he stand on prohibition?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall discuss those matters if the Senator will let me proceed in my own way; but the Senator asks half a dozen questions, and expects me to answer them with a wave of the hand.

Mr. BROOKHART. I ask only one at a time.

Now, one or two questions about the cause of this situation.

The Senator will concede that the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board started us on the down grade, will he not?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not going to be diverted on those questions. I shall discuss such of them as I see fit.

Mr. BROOKHART. And at that time every member of the board was a Democrat.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield further.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not mind a question, but I think the Senator is getting ready to make a speech——

Mr. BROOKHART. No, Mr. President.

Mr. CONNALLY. And I think one speech at a time is sufficient; so I shall have to decline to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield further.

Mr. CONNALLY. Evidently, the Senator from Iowa has no helpful purpose in mind. While he agrees with everything I say about the responsibility for the panic and the shortcomings of the administration, neither can he get himself into unison with the Senator from New Hampshire sufficiently nor will he agree even with the view which I am now undertaking to express.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, on this proposition I had hoped I would get in unison with the Senator from Texas; but I can not find out where he stands.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Iowa knows where the Senator from Texas stands on all of these questions if he consults the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have served here with the Senator for some years, and the Senator knows how I voted on power. He knows that I voted for the Muscle Shoals bill. He knows that I voted for the use of that great governmental investment, that great governmental utility, in behalf of the people, and not for the purpose of turning it over to the Power Trust. The Senator from Iowa, however, had no purpose of aiding the Senator from Texas with his interjections.

I am not speaking to-day for any one save myself, and I have no disinclination whatever to be placed on record as to any question properly coming before the Senate of the United States. But, Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa is just as bitter an antagonist of the present administration as any Democrat dare to be. He wears the Republican label only in name. He agrees with what I am saying; but because he is afraid to stand for or indorse anything if it has the Democratic label on it, he is seeking an outlet into some other channel.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, the only thing I am afraid of is jumping out of the frying pan into the fire.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will grant that the Senator is pretty much in one or the other all the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I do not care to take up more of the Senate's time in laying the predicate for the proposition that I now propose to submit, to the effect that, so far as leadership in any direction is concerned, so far as governmental responsibility in any direction is concerned, we are in this panic during an uninterrupted period of 10 years of Republican control of every branch of this Government. Then when the House of Representatives, selected as a rebuke to the present administration's economic policies, was elected in the fall of 1930, the President of the United States asked the Democrats to cooperate. He called a nonpartisan conference of the leaders in this Chamber and the leaders in the other Chamber to meet him here in Washington. The leaders in this Chamber—our leaders—met, and at the last session of Congress there was a truce. There was harmony. Democrats sought to make no political capital of anything that transpired, either at the last session of Congress or at the present session of Congress; and what is the reward? What is the reward which the Democrats receive for aiding in putting through what the President calls his program?

Mr. President, last fall the President of the United States issued an invitation to the leaders of both parties to come to Washington. The Speaker of the House got in an airplane and came to Washington to consult with the President about the moratorium and other measures. The Democrats submitted to a program as to some of which they probably did not agree; but they were not willing to make politics of the distresses of their country. They were willing to forego for a season any political advantage at the appeal of the President of the United States.

The Senator from New Hampshire knows that the Democratic House, if it had desired, could have defeated his moratorium proposition. The Senator from New Hampshire knows that the Democratic House of Representatives, had it so chosen, could have defeated what is called the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill. But it acted, Mr. President. It acted promptly. It acted efficiently, under the leadership of the Speaker, whom the Senator from New Hampshire now so coarsely denounces in the public press.

But what has been the result of this cooperation? While we have been cooperating in the legislative chambers, the President and his understudies, his Assistant Secretaries, his Cabinet members, have been going out before the country carrying on a political campaign and laying claim before the country to the credit for everything that has been done in this Congress as the action of the President alone.

If the President had a program a year ago, if he realized at that time that we were bogged down, that we were mired in business stagnation and in distress; if he had a program, if he had a panacea, if he had solutions for these conditions, why did he not call the Congress in special session in March, 1931? The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], on the other side of the aisle, was appealing to the President to call a special session of Congress. Other leaders throughout the country wanted the Congress to be in session in order that something might be done to stay the waves of depression which were engulfing us. But did the President call the Congress? He refused to bring the lawmaking body into session to propose any remedies of relief or any plan for reviving lagging business and lagging industry. The truth of the matter is that in his heart the President has little regard for Congress. He wants to control, himself, the agencies of the Federal Government.

What was his plan? Was the country ever advised as to what the President's plans were? When this session of Congress convened did he then submit to Congress a plan?

Mr. President, the Executive a few days ago signed the Glass-Steagall bill, and when he signed it he gave to the country a public statement in which he said:

> In signing this bill, which comprises an essential part of the reconstruction program, I desire to express my appreciation to the leaders and Members of both Senate and House of both parties who have cooperated in its enactment. The fine spirit of patriotic nonpartisanship shown in carrying out the emergency program is, I know, appreciated by the whole country.

Yet, Mr. President, when that statement was given to the press, in an effort to claim entire credit for the enactment of the Glass-Steagall bill, the President did not even mention the distinguished services of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is the author of that measure, or the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee in the House [Mr. STEAGALL], who piloted it through the House of Representatives.

The President did not have such a measure in mind when the Congress convened. The most material portions of that bill were lifted bodily from the bill of the Senator from Virginia which is soon to come before this body in the form of permanent legislation, provisions which were created by the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Mr. President, what makes a statement of that kind, to those who know, lose most of its weight is the fact that all during this session of Congress the Secretary of War, a member of the President's official family, of whose activities the President can not be ignorant; the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Hyde, about whose activities the President can not be ignorant; the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Jahncke, and others, representatives of this administration, have been busy going about the country making partisan Republican speeches, and claiming for the President of the United States all of the credit for the entire accomplishments of this Congress.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand speeches by some of these distinguished gentlemen which have been inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. For what purpose? They have been inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order that during the coming campaign they may be franked out all over the United States free of postage in carrying out this baseless claim that everything that has been accomplished ought to be attributed to the administration.

The senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] a few days ago made a radio speech, How We Treat Our Presidents, and, of course, compared the present President with all of those who have been criticized in the past. The Senator from Indiana put the speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That will be franked out during the coming campaign free of cost to the Republican National Committee.

A speech by the Hon. Arthur M. Hyde was broadcast—Who Started It? It was put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—a partisan, political speech. During the truce, while there is nonpartisan cooperation in the Senate and in the House, we have these outriders for the administration scurrying all over the country making these political speeches. Mr. Jahncke makes a speech over in Boston, in which he says he appears as a member of the Republican National Committee. Mr. Hurley, Secretary of War, makes an address at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, and it is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order that it may be franked out to the country.

I have here a speech of United States Senator JAMES E. WATSON, of Indiana, delivered at the first national Lincoln Day dinner of the National Capital Republican Club, inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that it may be sent out under franking privileges during the campaign.

Of course, on Lincoln's Birthday the President was idealized as being a reincarnation of the martyred Lincoln. Then on Washington's Birthday there were fulsome allusions to the fact that these were times similar to Valley Forge and George Washington's privations and suffering there.

Mr. President, I feared there was something wrong about this idea of cooperation. I suspected that when the Republican administration and the leaders got what they really wanted, what they thought they wanted, they would then turn upon those who had been seeking to cooperate with them and make the very character of attack which the Senator from New Hampshire, rather famous for the character of his language and the manner of his newspaper utterances, would make on this occasion. Mr. President, I want to make a few other observations and make a comparison between the performance of the House of Representatives, the Speaker of which is so bitterly denounced by the Senator from New Hampshire, and the administration itself.

We have been told through the press by the President and all of those who are seeking to serve his political ends that this is a time when we must retrench, that this is a time when we must have drastic and rigid economy, that this is a time when we must cut to the bone. Yet, let me remind you, Mr. President, that for the past 10 years every dollar that has been spent by this Government has been spent with the consent of the party of which the Senator from New Hampshire is a member. For the past two years every dime that has been spent by this Government, except what the two Houses expend on their own incidental expenses, has been spent with the consent of Herbert Hoover as President of the United States. So when we speak of paring expenses, when we speak of economy, the economies which we adopt will be against the high appropriations which have heretofore been made.

Let me show what has happened at this session of the Congress. In the House of Representatives, in the appropriation bills for the Department of Agriculture, for the Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor, for the Interior Department, for the Treasury Department, and for the Post Office Department, the House of Representatives, either by enactment or by bills favorably reported, has cut the President's demands in the Budget $59,000,000. In other words, the House of Representatives under the leadership of the Speaker has cut appropriations $59,000,000 below those asked by the President of the United States in his Budget message.

Who is for real, sincere economy—the President in his public statements in the papers or the House of Representatives by actual performance?

At the present session of the Congress the House of Representatives, by bills passed or favorably reported, has cut $123,000,000 below the current appropriations under Mr. Hoover's administration and under this Senate's administration. Who was the economist? Yet those who read the public press and who did not know the facts, would believe, from the fulminations of the President and his political henchmen, that the President is bending every effort to retrench and to economize, and that a partisan Congress is preventing effective action.

Mr. President, who is the real economist? Mr. Hoover took charge of the Department of Commerce in 1921. The last year before he took charge the Department of Commerce cost the Government of the United States $25,892,589.05. Mr. Hoover occupied the office of Secretary of Commerce for eight years. He then put a man of his own choosing in his place, I suppose to carry out his own policies. What are the appropriations for the Department of Commerce for the present year? For the present fiscal year the appropriations for the Department of Commerce are $61,477,117.63. More than twice as much is being appropriated the present year for the Department of Commerce, more than twice as much, as at the time when the President took charge of that department of the Government. Yet we constantly hear that we must have retrenchment and economy.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives in undertaking to cut appropriations for the departments has not had that cooperation for which the President and the administration have been pleading. When the Interior Department appropriation bill was cut what did the administration do? It sent the Secretary of the Interior to Congress in protest. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, three pages in length, dated February 17, 1932, with a great many exhibits attached, in which the Secretary of the Interior, protesting against the cuts, protesting against the economy which the House proposed, is saying that his department will be handicapped and its activities materially weakened if we carry out this policy of economy.

Mr. President, when the House of Representatives put an amendment on the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill to provide that there should be no promotions and no increases in pay for the present year, did that receive the cooperation of the administration? Was that an economy which met the approbation of those in authority? Instead of the House receiving cooperation in behalf of that economy the Secretary of Agriculture rushed to this Chamber and rushed to the House of Representatives begging Congress to withdraw that provision, and begging that they be permitted to go ahead in the same old way. I submit that these pretenses to economy in the papers ought to be borne out by action here on the floor.

The President now has a delegate yonder at Geneva seeking disarmament. God knows I hope that substantial disarmament may finally be brought about. But while those delegates are yonder at Geneva he has the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], on the air and in the press begging the Congress not to cut one dollar from the military or naval appropriations. He has the Secretary of the Navy active in obtaining the introduction of a bill authorizing us to spend millions and more millions of dollars to increase the Navy. Disarmament for the women and the ministers and peace advocates in the papers! Bigger navies and more expenditures in the Halls of Congress! That is only one illustration of the inconsistency of the administration pretenses in public to economize and to retrench.

The President says he wants to consolidate the departments and bureaus of Government; that he wants to eliminate useless bureaus; that he wants to prevent overlapping and duplication. Yet when the House of Representatives considers a proposal to consolidate the War Department and the Navy Department, does the President want to have them consolidated? He does not. He sends his Secretary of War to the Congress in protest against such action. He sends his Secretary of the Navy here saying, "You will ruin the Navy if you consolidate the two departments." While I am not prepared to say for myself that I would favor the consolidation of those two departments, the administration by its action denies its public profession. The only "consolidation" which the President proposes, the only one which the administration requests the Congress to make, is the passage of a bill by the Congress turning over to the President the absolute power to himself consolidate the governmental departments and bureaus.

Did his proposed plan, his tentative plan which he submitted, provide for the removal of any bureaus? It did not. Did it provide for any reduction in expenditures? As I recall now, the proposal which the President sent here, instead of asking for a reduction of employees, provided for the creation of a number of additional assistant secretaries to carry out his plan of consolidation.

Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire, I am willing to judge the record of the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the performances of the House as compared with the performances of the administration as to economy, as to consolidation of governmental activities, and as to the expeditious and efficient handling of public legislation.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. I would like to ask the Senator if the Speaker and the House have not been going right along with this same Mr. Hoover all the time ever since the House has been in session?

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator had been in the Chamber I think he would know that his question is absolutely unnecessary. I have been indicating that the program we have been talking about could not have been put over except with the concurrence of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BROOKHART. Then, does the Senator have any different program for the relief of the situation, differing from the Republican administration program? That is what we would all like to know.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is not anxious to know that. He is not concerned with that. No matter what sort of program the Democratic Party had, the Senator from Iowa would be sniping at it and shooting at it. No matter what sort of program the Republican Party is going to have, he will be going about shooting at it and sniping at it. The Senator from Iowa is an individualist. He is a minority member. He is of the minority type. He is like the Irishman who was shipwrecked at sea and woke up on an island. He said, "What government is there here?" Some one replied, "I don't know." He said, "It doesn't make any difference. Whatever the government is, I'm agin it." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] that he need not worry himself about the Democratic nominee for President. The Senator from New Hampshire will have plenty to do to take care of his own nominee for President of the United States. He will have plenty to do to advise the President whether he shall enter the primaries in North Dakota or whether he shall stay out. He will have plenty to do to tell the President whether he ought to enter the primaries in Illinois or whether he shall only enter in those particular States controlled by the bosses, and only in such districts as that from which I come, in which each Republican officeholder with his appointment is given credentials as a delegate to the Republican national convention.

The Senator from New Hampshire will have plenty of time to worry about such things, and he need not disturb himself about whom the Democrats will nominate for their candidate for the presidency. Whoever he may be, it will be extremely difficult for him to make a more pitiable record than the present administration has made under the leadership largely of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire that he will have no trouble about who his presidential nominee will be. The Republican Party in its relation toward its nominee is very much in the same position that the Senate is with reference to the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from New Hampshire is the President pro tempore of the Senate. It is true his title is only a squatter title. [Laughter.] He is there, and the Senate has no way of expressing the majority view that he ought not to be there. The Republican Party has its own nominee already selected. His title is largely a squatter title. Most of the members of the Republican Party would rather have somebody else for their candidate, but they have no effective way of getting somebody else. I suggest just that much for the Senator from New Hampshire to bear in mind.

Mr. President, we saw in the press on Sunday morning glaring headlines announcing that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] is going to shock the country within a short time by the public announcement of the names of certain culprits in Wall Street who have been selling short on the market. I have been waiting almost breathlessly, I have been waiting with anxiety to be present when this pronouncement shall come down giving out those names. Mr. President, why is it that it is only a crime for the market manipulators to sell stock when the prices are at a low figure, and yet it was not a crime in 1929 for the bull manipulators to inflate the stock values far beyond the comprehension of almost any human mind? Is it not strange that now the presidential wrath should be aroused only by the fact that after the passage of the moratorium act, after the passage of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, and after the passage of the Glass-Steagall bill, it becomes, in his opinion, a crime to sell stocks short? Is it not strange that it becomes a crime only after the enactment of this marvelous administration program, and that then because stocks do not immediately go up it is charged that there is some criminally willful culprit in Wall Street who is knocking in the head every effort at rehabilitation?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator realize that the President and the administration are still in search of an alibi for the panic that has been on us for the past two years, and that probably the effort to hold some culprit in Wall Street is a last effort to create an alibi that will allow them to escape the responsibility which everybody believes is theirs?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. The Senator suggests that possibly after all the man who has caused the panic will be located and shown to be some little broker over in Wall Street who has brought about the panic and now, through a spirit of willfulness, will not let us have prosperity back again. [Laughter.] Oh, Mr. President, why do not the Executive and the Republican administration get their eyes off of Wall Street? Have they the conception that all the prosperity and all the well-being and all the happiness of our people are centered in the stock market? Does the President believe that, as that barometer goes up and down, manipulated by the traders who are marketing securities, the measure of prosperity of the people is indicated and gauged?

Let me suggest that prosperity will never return to the United States until the men out yonder in the factories and on the farms and in the mines and on the ranches have some degree of a return of purchasing power and some revival of activity in their businesses.

Let me suggest to the President of the United States that the prosperity and the well-being of 120,000,000 of people scattered from one ocean to the other are not dependent on the stock-market manipulations yonder in Wall Street. What does it matter to the man out in Colorado or California whether the stock of American Can goes up 2 cents or $2, or whether the stock of the Radio Corporation of America declines $2?

There are those who conceive that the only way to make the country prosperous is to tax the many, to tax the poor, to tax the men of small means, and to hand over great privileges to the rich and the powerful, when by reason of the law of gravitation a little benefit will gradually drip down on those at the bottom. I denounce such a doctrine. I denounce such a philosophy. That seems to be the philosophy of the present administration. It seems to be their philosophy and belief that if they can only restore wild activity on the stock exchange the American people will once again be happy and contented.

Mr. President, Mr. Hoover in 1928 said that the best way to provide against poverty is to give the people jobs. The House of Representatives on Saturday passed a bill providing an appropriation of $130,000,000 for road building throughout the United States; road building in cooperation with the States through the advancement of Federal funds so the States may match their regular fund. What happens? The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Hyde, comes forth from his rural retreat and breaks into the press this morning with a denunciation of that measure. He said that the House of Representatives did not consult the Treasury as to where it was going to get the money.

If we can get $2,000,000,000 without consulting the Treasury to finance the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, if we can get $2,000,000,000 by issuing bonds and by laying burdens of taxation upon the people to finance the New York Central Railway and the Pennsylvania Railway, if we can secure funds by such a measure to give those corporations money with which to pay the interest on their bonds to J. P. Morgan & Co. and other great financiers without consulting the Treasury as to how it is going to get the money, when did it become a crime that we here in Congress should undertake to provide employment through a useful road-building program by providing $130,000,000 of the people's money for that purpose?

Mr. President, a year ago the President of the United States announced that he would provide against unemployment by a greatly increased building program of public buildings and roads; and yet at this session of the Congress the administration sends in its Budget estimates and reduces to a large degree the building program on the pretext and on the plea that we are building already as rapidly as is possible. It has, in large measure, abandoned the original program, and yet it was advanced as a program for solving the unemployment situation.

Mr. President, there has no legislation been passed at this session providing aid to unemployment unless it be the creation of Federal jobs in some of the executive departments and other instrumentalities we have set up involving political patronage. Those are the only contributions which have been made to the relief of unemployment. Yet to-day there are more hungry men, empty handed, bereft of tools of employment, walking the streets of America than at any other time within its history. I challenge the Senator from New Hampshire in his recapitulation as to foreign nations and their troubles to point out one country on the face of the earth with as many unemployed as we have in America in the same proportion to population. Even England with her dole, even England with the dole probably encouraging unemployment for two or three years past, has not the same proportion of unemployed as we have here in America.

The Senator from New Hampshire attributes all our ills to what happened in foreign lands. He says that the Speaker of the House of Representatives ought to accuse the President of unbalancing the budget of England and of France. Of course, the President is not responsible for that; he is not responsible for the unbalanced budget in England. Let me ask the Senator, however, is England responsible then for our unbalanced Budget? We are not responsible for her unbalanced budget, but the implication of the Senator is that England is responsible for our unbalanced Budget. The President is not responsible for the unbalanced budget of Germany, but, on the other hand, is Germany responsible for our unbalanced Budget? She is to the tune, perhaps, of about $250,000,000, representing the annual interest on the war debts due us by European nations. Had that sum been paid through the instrumentalities of the Allies our own load of taxation would have been some $250,000,000 less than what it will necessarily have to be.

Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire, who is responsible for this unbalanced Budget? Why was it that in 1931 our Treasury was $900,000,000 in the red? Why is it now that for the present fiscal year the estimates are that we are spending $2,100,000,000 more than we are going to collect in taxes? Who is responsible for it? Are the Democrats responsible? I suppose the Speaker of the House of Representatives is responsible.

Mr. President, for 10 long years the party of the Senator from New Hampshire has been in control and there has sat yonder at the helm of the Treasury Andrew W. Mellon, the wizard, the one learned in the alchemy of old, who could turn campaign promises into gold. He directed the finances of this Government for 10 long years, he was responsible for the estimates of the Treasury Department; the President has been a member of the Federal machinery for more than 10 years; and yet they, with all their wisdom, with all their foresight, with all their information, were not able to read even a little way into the future, and handed back last year $160,000,000 they said they did not need. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from New Hampshire, no; we are not responsible—and I do not charge the President with being responsible—for conditions in foreign countries. But by the same token, I do not charge those countries with the responsibility for conditions here in America.

The Senator from New Hampshire was one of those actively participating in the formulation and passage in 1930 of the Smoot-Hawley bill. That measure, we were told, would bring back prosperity at once, and yet the Senator from New Hampshire knows that, as the aftermath of that measure, countries all over the world have lifted their tariff walls higher; he knows that many countries of Europe have adopted the quota system, and will only admit a certain quantity of American commodities of any particular character.

The Senator from New Hampshire knows that after the passage of that act Canada, one of our finest and best customers, lifted her tariff fence higher and yet higher. The Senator from New Hampshire knows that American world trade since the enactment of that act has fallen off many hundreds of millions of dollars, both as to exports and imports. I do not charge that the passage of that act was the only factor in the situation; but I do contend that it had a repercussion throughout the world, and that, as a result of its enactment, other nations sought to retaliate, and gradually the channels of trade and of commerce have been clogged and have been impeded so that world commerce and world trade have suffered; and when they suffer, the American people suffer.

Mr. President, I resent the charge of the Senator from New Hampshire not because it was made against an individual Member of the House of Representatives but because it was made against the Speaker of the House. The Senator from New Hampshire occupies an official position in this Chamber; he is President pro tempore, and any pronouncement from him attacking the head of the other coordinate body is something more than the private quarrel of two individuals. The utterances of a man so close to the President of the United States as is the Senator from New Hampshire always carry a certain significance that the utterances of individuals such as the Senator from Texas do not carry. So, to a great extent, if my assumptions are true, the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire must be at least a reflection of the attitude of the administration toward the House of Representatives, and must indicate, now that the administration has secured the passage of such measures as it desired, that the truce is off and the political war is on. We must expect, therefore, that Secretary of Agriculture Hyde, Secretary of War Hurley, Doctor Klein, Assistant Secretary Jahncke, and various other under secretaries and functionaries will be turned loose upon the country praising and extolling the great legislative achievements of the administration.

So, Mr. President, I submit that the attack of the Senator from New Hampshire is unwarranted and such a one as he, occupying the position that he does, should not make upon the head of the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, it seems that our program, from the administration standpoint, has been completed with the enactment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, providing $2,000,000,000 to be loaned to the railroads and insurance companies; the Glass-Steagall bill, a measure to which I look with great hope of accomplishment; the farm loan bill, providing $125,000,000; and the moratorium on the debts due us by Europe. I should like to have the Senator from

New Hampshire, in reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] with reference to Muscle Shoals, explain how his candidate for the Presidency vetoed the Muscle Shoals bill on the pretense that the Government could not use its own great plant, where millions of dollars of the people's money had been invested, for the manufacture of electric power and for the production of fertilizer, because to do so would be to invade the field of private business, to destroy initiative, and to apply a brake upon private industry and capital. That is a fine-sounding objection. When the Senator from New Hampshire makes that explanation, then let him explain also why it is not putting the Government in business when we pledge $2,000,000,000 of the people's money to loan to insurance companies and to loan to railroads, not for a public function, not to furnish electric power to municipalities, counties, and other governmental subdivisions but for private purposes. Let the Senator from New Hampshire explain the attitude of his candidate on that issue. That question will be before the Congress again at this session, and let us watch, look, and listen as to how the administration approaches it when it is finally presented here.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say that I hope the Congress will not consent that the action which has already been taken is all the action that it proposes to take in behalf of the American people. I hope it may remain in session long enough that it will be able to get its eyesight off Wall Street and the half dozen little culprits that have plunged the whole world in gloom and grief. Think of it! Three or four short sellers in New York are responsible for this entire condition, and yet the President of the United States, with all his Army, and with all the Department of Justice, can neither find them nor ascertain their names, and when he does learn their names he refuses to divulge them to the country.

Mr. President, I submit that we ought to go on and have further legislative cooperation. Let the House of Representatives function in cutting down appropriations, as it has already started to do; let it function in shaping a tax bill, because if it is not shaped in the House of Representatives it can be shaped nowhere else, for such measures must originate there; and let the Senator from New Hampshire cease his political attacks until after we get through the program of restoration and rehabilitation.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the pending question on the bill before the Senate is an amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]; yet there has beat upon my devoted head for an hour and a half a storm of sound and fury which gives color to the prevalent belief that in the Senate one speaks without limitation of time and with no relation to the subject before the house.

I content myself with two disclaimers: I do not speak with any authority for the administration, and I have made no attack, either savage or bitter, upon the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I have ventured to comment upon a candidate for the Presidency, and, Mr. President, candidates for the Presidency enjoy no "closed season."

So far as the situation is now concerned, with that particular candidacy I have but one question to propound; and that is, Why is it that Texas nowadays is doing all the talking for the Democratic Party? Texas, a State which was not heard from politically between election day in 1928 and the election of a Speaker of the House of Representatives in 1931.
